URBAN POPULATION INCREASES.—

The Census Bureau recently announced the urban population of the United States as 68,955,521 and rural population as 53,819,525. The 1930 urban population represents 56.2 per cent of the total, 122,775,046, while in 1920 the urban population formed but 51.4 per cent.

DECLINING BIRTH RATE.—

The declining birth rate in the United States is being felt in the schools. In an average group of 200 Americans in 1915, five children were being born each year. In that same average group in 1928, less than four children were being born, according to statistical studies made by the Office of Education, Washington, D. C.

ELEMENTARY SCHOOL ENROLLMENT.—

According to an estimate based on the latest available statistics collected by the Federal Office of Education, the enrollment in elementary schools for the year 1930 was approximately 21,370,000. The number of pupils enrolled in public high schools was 4,030,000. The total number of pupils enrolled in private and parochial elementary and secondary schools was 2,704,000.

CANNON IN COURT.—

For issuing fraudulent checks and failure to pay the wages of employees at a military academy which he conducts at El Monte, Calif., we are told by Time that Richard M. Cannon, son of Bishop James Cannon, Jr., of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, was haled into court, indicted on eight counts, freed under bonds of $1,950. It seems that the press continues to keep before the public the Cannon name, but this is true of any one who does anything, either good or bad.

BARTON PINNACLE.—

It is reported that Dr. W. E. Barton bequeathed a mountain near Berea College to the school to be known as "Barton Pinnacle," and will be a portion of the college forest preserves. Dr. Barton, Lincoln authority, father of Adman Bruce Barton, and distinguished minister of the Congregational Church, it is said, bequeathed his valuable collection of books on Lincoln to an educational institution to be selected by his children. Another collection of books is left to Chicago Theological Seminary.

VOCATIONAL EDUCATION.—

More than a million persons, young and old, were enrolled in vocational schools in 1920, including 170,000 who were learning to farm better, 250,000 to make better homes, and 625,000 to do some specific job better in trade and industry, according to the report of the Federal Board for Vocational Education. This enrollment was largely in schools which received aid under the terms of the national vocational education act, and all of it in vocational courses organized and conducted under joint Federal and State vocational education.

DECLINE IN IMMIGRATION.—

Consular offices in twenty-one foreign countries in November issued only 7 per cent of the permitted number of visas authorized emigrants to enter the United States, the Department of State announced recently. Of the total number of visas available to aliens in normal times, 12,647 remained unissued.

Immigration from Canada was cut by 76 per cent, and from Mexico by 95 per cent. In other countries whose quota aggregates 5,248, consular offices issued only 41 visas permitting entrance into this country.

SEMINAR ON MARRIAGE.—

The First Congregational Church, Long Beach, Calif., has launched, as a community project, a series of addresses for persons over eighteen years of age on "Marriage and the Home." During the fall and winter, on Tuesday evenings, addresses are given by educational, religious, medical and health leaders. Rev. Henry K. Booth is the minister of this Church. It would be a fine thing if many of our Churches would arrange seminars on practical subjects for the young people of our generation and secure speakers of ability for their practical, religious education. Many of our Churches are too conservative to dare such a venture because many are such slaves of custom.

METHODIST UNION.—

The board of foreign missions of the Methodist Church has received a cable from Bishop James C. Baker, of Korea, giving information that on December 8th the missions of the Methodist Church and of the Methodist Church, South, of Korea, were united. Rev. Ju Sam Ryang, a Korean pastor, who has for six years served as superintendent of the Siberian-Korean Mission, the organization of the Church, South, carrying on Christian work among Koreans in Siberia, was elected bishop of the new Church. Bishop Ryang is a graduate of Vanderbilt and Yale Universities. The new Church in Korea will have a membership of about 25,000, an ordained Korean ministry of 125, and some 800 Churches and chapels.

FORWARD MOVEMENT.—

The Church of Scotland plans for a "forward movement," and the plans have now assumed more definite proportions, as a result of a conference of denominational leaders at Dunblane Hydro. This forward movement is not financial, nor a piece of machinery, nor an effort to monopolize initiative by some new body. Rather, "it is an attempt to bring to every member and every congregation a deeper and more informed sense of the service which we are all called to give, that the Spirit of Christ may penetrate and control the life of Scotland and all the world." This would be a great thing for the Churches of America. Some of our Churches have talked money, machinery, mechanism, materialism and man-made schemes until emphasis on the spiritual life of the Church would be refreshing.

APPEAL FOR MYSTICISM.—

The Churchman, New York, reports that Dr. Robert Norwood, of St. Bartholomew's Church, New York City, recently told his congregation that they should be on their guard against the so-called modernist movement in the Episcopal Church. "There are three forces revealed in the life of the Protestant Episcopal Church in North America today," said Dr. Norwood. "They are materialism, skepticism and mysticism. Skepticism is manifest in what is called the liberal movement, modernism. It has played its part and will play its part in our life. Although modernism has set the Bible free of fetishism and taboo, it is essentially skeptical and is too closely identified with the academic method, which we believe is the essential evil of the hour." The mystical idea of religion has its place, but unless there is something of the empirical emphasis on objective facts of experience and reality, our religion is too subjective to enrich the life of our fellow-men.

ALIEN CRIMINALS.—

A move to banish alien criminals from New York City was initiated with the establishment by the police commissioner of a new bureau for the specific purpose of investigating the records of such persons.

In describing the functions of the new bureau, the commissioner said it would begin operation at once as a part of the detective division. Eight men have been appointed to the work and have been ordered to investigate all aliens charged with felonies during the past five years.

The staff of the bureau will keep records of names, addresses, dates of arrival, port of entry and circumstances of any crime charged or proved against every alien and submit this information to the commissioner. When investigation shows that a criminal alien is subject to deportation under the immigration laws, the information gathered by the bureau will be turned over to the United States Immigration Commissioners for action.

NOTES-PERSONALS

This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptance, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners (1 Tim. 1:15).

Rev. J. L. Neese, pastor, reports that other Sunday School rooms and improvements are being added to Hines Chapel, the additions of last year proving inadequate for the rapidly increasing Sunday School and Christian Endeavor. Congratulations to Bro. Neese and the faithful at Hines Chapel.

Let's make 1931 the very best year of all our years so far. This we can and will do if we daily practice the presence of Him who said, "Take my yoke upon you and learn of me: for I am meek and lowly in heart; and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light."

Mr. John W. House and Miss Annie Forest Brummitt were married December 25, 1930. They are going to make their home near Franklinton, where they will also be located within reach of Pope's Chapel Christian Church. We trust that this happy season may be the beginning of a fellowship and communion which will increase with the coming years.

Norfolk, Va., papers carried recently a picture of the striking, motherly face of Mrs. B. F. Gibson, Route 3, Norfolk, Va., with this splendid testimony and tribute: "For more than a half-century she has taught Sunday School classes in the Rosemont Christian Church. She is still very active in scholastic and Church work." Sister Gibson must have begun teaching in early years, for as she taught her fine class December 20th she hardly seemed fifty, being yet in full strength, vigor and activity.

THE SUN is pleased to carry a letter this week from our medical missionary in the Philippines, Dr. M. J. W. White. Writing for himself and wife, Dr. White says: "After this we will try to write monthly letters to THE SUN; if possible, one every two weeks. We do appreciate your kindly interest and that of our other Church friends back home." SUN readers are deeply interested in the work Dr. and Mrs. White are doing for the relief of human suffering and the spread of the kingdom of righteousness away out yonder "on the other side of the world."

Rev. D. D. Nash, Hopewell, Va.: "Our Church is doing very well at present, though I have been unable to attend services the past few months on account of the servious illness of my wife. While in Richmond, near my wife, who was in a hospital there for a surgical operation, I had the pleasure of preaching once for Dr. C. C. Ryan, and he came over and preached for our people at Hopewell. I enjoyed being with his people very much, and our people enjoyed having Dr. Ryan. We look forward with pleasure to the coming of our new pastor, Dr. A. B. Kendall."

Under date of December 23rd, Rev. R. Lee House writes personally: "The Church plant at Franklinton, N. C., has been repaired. It was my privilege to hold a service there the second Sunday afternoon in this month. We had a most excellent service. Many hearts were made glad to see the work begin again. We are planning to conduct two services there each month. Other ministers have kindly offered their assistance. The interest which has already been manifested leads me to believe that there is yet a bright future for this Church." That item of news will carry gladness to many hearts. We congratulate Bro. House.

Dr. L. E. Smith and his great choir, in Christian Temple, put on a Christmas cantata, "Bethlehem," Sunday evening, December 21st. The performance was so impressive and so well received that it was repeated, with even a larger audience present, on the following Sunday evening, December 28th. THE SUN editor was privileged to witness this latter performance and will never forget some of the scenes and impressions made. The climax of the performance was reached and a most striking and worthy climax it was, in the manger scene, with Joseph, Mary and the Babe as the figures, and any one looking on that picture as presented and hearing the sweet and solemn anthems sung, cannot erase the impressions from the page of memory. Christian Temple has a choir of wonderful voices.

Last week a young people's congress, under the leadership of Rev. F. C. Lester and Miss Jewel Truitt, of the Christian Church, and Miss Priscilla Chase and others of the Congregational Church, was held at Elon College, closing Wednesday night with a young people's rally in the Burlington Church. The congress spent two days in intimate and informal discussion of practical problems and adopted the following goals: (I) World friendship—(1) a month's study in world friendship twice a year; (2) raise $5,000. (II) Publications—(1) secure 1,000 subscribers for THE CHRISTIAN SUN, 200 subscribers for the Congregationalist and Herald of Gospel Liberty, 200 subscribers for the Missionary Herald, 1 subscriber in each Sunday School to the Well Spring, and 1 in each school to Sunday School Herald. (III) Leadership training—one person from each Church attending Sunday School conference, or take a course in leadership training. (IV) Devotional life—study of worship. (V) Organization—the youth organized in each Christian Conference and Congregational Association. The following were elected: Treasurer, Lizzie Bell Newman; devotional life, Pattie Coghill; service, Grace Williams; leadership training, also editor, Jewel Truitt; publications, R. L. House. These goals reached, will mean work, improvement and progress for our young people in 1931.

The Mission Secretary had the joy of service with Rev. J. F. Morgan, pastor at Rosemont and Berea, Norfolk, Sunday, December 28th. While the new Church is going up at Rosemont, the Sunday School and congregation are being held together beautifully in parts of the old building removed from the site for the new building. And this new Church building at Rosemont is a delight to look upon and a joy to the heart. It is a real Church edifice. No one will ever mistake it for any other sort of building. You have seen its kind and pattern in the picture books of old, and a spirit of the past with a feeling of reverence and desire to worship comes over one as one looks upon or enters the building. It is modern, too, in equipment, having in all about twenty rooms for Bible school and the various Church auxiliaries. There is not in all our acquaintance a house that looks and seems more like a place of prayer and praise, worship and service than this temple of divine appointment at Rosemont. The work goes forward and the hope is indulged by pastor and people that the building will be completed, paid for and dedicated by the last of February. It was a privilege also to worship again with the good and faithful folks at Berea. They have a large and ample and well-kept house of worship, but need and are on the verge of a building program for Sunday School rooms. Bro. Morgan is happy in his work and with a progressive people to serve, goes forward in the work of the kingdom.

MANY THANKS.

I take this method of thanking my friends for their love and respect for me. I have received between fifty and a hundred cards, letters and presents. I am too weak and nervous to reply to each of these friends individually, hence I make use of this method. Now words fail to satisfy me when I say to these friends, "Thank you." Thank you for these expressions of love and respect for me in these cards, letters and presents. I was feeling very lonesome until these letters, cards and presents began to pour in. I have preached the gospel for fifty-seven years, and never could appreciate friendship more than I can now. God bless every one of these friends who wrote me a card, letter, or sent me a present. May grace be unto each of them from God our Father and from the Lord Jesus Christ.

PLEASANT RIDGE.

On December 21st our Sunday School gave a very interesting Christmas program. It was enjoyed by a large number of people. The Higgins sisters were there and sang a number of selections, which added much to the program. It brings joy to our hearts to hear little children tell the story of Jesus. The pastor was called on for a talk, using as his subject, "Others." We believe that is the spirit of the good people of Pleasant Ridge—thinking of others.

After the service we found our car loaded down with good things to eat that are raised in the country, such as flour, meal, pumpkins, eggs, butter, potatoes, sausage, souse meat, pork, also coffee, sugar and candy. May the good Lord bless them for thinking of the preacher and his family. Brethren, pray for us, that we may have a good year for the Master at Pleasant Ridge.

LYNCHBURG CHURCH.

On January 4, 1925, Rev. J. O. Atkinson met with about thirty-five or forty people at Lynchburg who were worshipping in an old store building and who had begun work on a Church building. The plans were that the Church should be a community Church, which would be non-denominational. The pastor was approached by a member of the Christian Church of long standing about uniting with the Christian Church and was given a copy of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, and he got in touch with the Christian Church people, and consequently the United Christian Church of Lynchburg. He made application to the North Carolina and Virginia Christian Conference for membership. This date falling on Sunday in 1931, caused some of the members to bring the matter of an anniversary service before the Church and the plan was adopted. Dr. J. O. Atkinson preached for us again on January 4, 1931, at the morning service, and our first pastor, Rev. M. F. Allen, who is now pastor of First Congregational-Christian Church, Newport News, preached the evening service.

CONGREGATIONAL NEWS

REV. E. C. GILLETTE, Editor; REV. F. P. ENSMINGER, and REV. M. J. SWEET, Associates.

HAPPY NEW YEAR! Those who edit this page of Congregational news wish to extend their best wishes for a Happy New Year to Dr. Atkinson and all others associated in the editing and printing of THE CHRISTIAN SUN. They also wish for THE CHRISTIAN SUN increased success and usefulness for the coming year. To all the subscribers and readers of the paper, may the New Year be one of increasing happiness and service in the Christian life. May the year be one of increasing fellowship between the Congregational and Christian Churches, with a growing sense of unity and with greater achievements in the line of united program. For the pastors of all our Churches, we pray for rich blessings in the service of the Master and the Master's Church. May God bless us all.

REV. CARL PARKER has resigned at Center Church, Atlanta, much to the regret of his followers there. They are trying to induce him to reconsider. They are planning to put on an every-member canvass during January.

REV. WILLIS L. CAPPS, of Birmingham, pastor and evangelistic singer, has supplied at the Garden City, Alabama, Church. Bro. Capps is a versatile and genial young minister who has much interest in young people's work.

CHURCH SERVICES BROADCAST: Personal friends of Rev. Don Henshaw, in the city of Miami, have made it possible for the morning services of the Church at Coral Gables to be broadcast each Sunday over WQAM.

REV. J. DELMAN KUYKENDALL, of Coconut Grove, has renewed his daily column in the Miami Herald, known as "The Open Road." Dr. Kuykendall conducted this column for a number of years, and it was very popular because of its general and wise human interest.

REV. J. F. BLACKBURN has recently made a tour of the South Georgia Churches, during which he, with Mrs. Blackburn, visited Florida. He liked it so well that he is going back early in January for two or more months. He will probably make his home for the winter in Tampa.

WORK AT NASHVILLE must be proceeding nicely. A well-wisher of the Church who has not identified himself with it says, in reference to the new pastor, Rev. Dr. Jason Noble Pierce, "What do you think of our new pastor here? I believe that he is just the man for the place."

COCONUT GROVE, FLA.: A new group has been formed of about twenty young married couples which has taken the name of the Yomarco Club. The pastor writes: "Their interest is very encouraging, and they are adding youthfulness to the congregation at the morning service."

MISS DORA BRACKIN, of the Alabama staff, has been assisting Rev. W. T. McElveen in making a survey of his parish at United Church, Atlanta. In about three weeks she has made five hundred calls, and still the work is not done. She has returned to her home in Alabama for the holidays.

AN ANNIVERSARY: At Union Church, Jacksonville, Fla., Superintendent Gillette preached at the morning service on December 28th. It was the tenth anniversary of the beginning of his pastorate of this Church, a pastorate which lasted just five years before he came to the office of State superintendent.

DR. J. O. ATKINSON gave a strong plea for the support of missions to the United Church of Birmingham. It has done well for missionary causes this year. It is surely fitting that Dr. Atkinson, with his great interest in world service, should have been made a member of the prudential committee of the great American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions.

THE ANNUAL FOUNDER'S DAY convocation of Rollins College, Winter Park, Fla., will be held February 22-23rd. President Holt invited President Hoover to be present, but he was unable to attend because of his plan to remain at the White House until after the close of the session of Congress. Sir Roland Lindsey, British ambassador, has also been invited to be present.

SON OF THE PROPHETS: Rev. and Mrs. Orville D. Ullom, of Miami Beach, Fla., are receiving congratulations upon the birth of a son, Richard Raymond Ullom, born December 14th. By his arrival, Dr. C. Rexford Raymond, of Chattanooga, attains the dignity of grandfatherhood. The newcomer certainly joins the succession of the prophets. We congratulate all—the grandparents, parents, son and grandson.

THE LAST Christian life conference of 1930, conducted by Miss Davison, was held at the Soddy, Tenn., Church, of which Rev. A. L. DeJarnette is pastor. Young people were present from the Daisy and Pilgrim and Union Church of Chattanooga. The young people voted to call themselves "The Congregational Comrades of the Chattanooga District." Miss Dorothy French and other summer workers were active in the conference.

DR. NEAL McQUARRIE announces from Deland, Fla., in a recent letter, that he expected to return to his work in the Christian Church, Columbus, Ga., about January 5, 1931. That means his health is returning rapidly, and it is very good news to all his friends, and particularly to the people of his Church, who have been loyally holding on, prayerfully looking forward to his return. They feel the life of the Church depends very largely upon Dr. McQuarrie.

MISS MARGUERITE DAVISON has been busy and useful in several localities lately. In the Clanton, Ala., area, she gave map talks on "World Service" and helped in the Sunday School and young people's societies. The Union Church of Eclectic has organized a new Christian Endeavor, under the leadership of Miss Dovie McDonald, who helped her to organize a Christian Endeavor at Watkins' Chapel. Miss Hazel Maddox laid the foundation for this in the summer.

UNIQUE CHRISTMAS PRESENT: A fine group of young people banded together during December, formed themselves into an earnest class, signed a letter in which they requested the pastor's wife, Mrs. William Scott, of the Salisbury United Church, to be their teacher, and presented the letter and themselves as loyal members of a new Sunday School class. They promised regular and loyal attendance if Mrs. Scott would accept the "present," which she so gladly did. They plan to hold a social meeting once a month.

A MARRIAGE of interest to many in the Southeast is that of Robert I. Blakesley and Miss Sarah Elizabeth Robson, which took place at the Riverside Church, New York, on December 17th. Mr. Blakesley is a student in Union Theological Seminary and has spent two summers in student summer service in the Southeast, first at Moss Bluff, Fla., and then at Charleston and Columbia, S. C. He made many friends also at the Blue Ridge Conference, and all of his friends wish him happiness and congratulate the young people. After January 1st, they will be at home at 430 West 119th Street, New York.

REV. E. W. BUTLER, of Thorsby, Ala., who was once an associate to the superintendent of Florida, and later superintendent of Alabama, and is now treasurer of Thorsby Institute, Thorsby, Ala., has for many years been the efficient registrar and treasurer of the Alabama Conference. He has sought to have relief from the office for years, but was not allowed to give it up until this year. In the press of business at the annual Conference, suitable reference to his valuable service was neglected. The moderators of the Alabama Associations regretted this omission and joined in a letter of appreciation and thanks which has gone to this devoted Conference worker.

BLACKWOODS CHURCH, near Headland, Ala., has a community building, and there is a Church garden maintained by the women between the Church and community building. The community building is the old school-house which was vacated when the pupils were taken to a central consolidated school. Rev. N. A. Long, assisted by Miss Dora Brackin, who belongs to the Church, raised the money for the purchase of the school-house. Miss Brackin did preliminary work in organization, and Miss Davison, Miss Brackin and the pastor have organized a program of real service in which the building is to be used for various social and educational purposes.

DR. BLOOM AT ELON: It has been announced that Dr. W. Knighton Bloom, of Washington, D. C., will preach in the college Church, Elon College, January 11, 1931. It is always a happy day when Dr. Bloom can visit the Carolinas or Georgia. During this trip it is expected he will counsel with others regarding problems at Country Life Academy, Star fellowship program, the next meeting of the Carolina Conference, propositions concerning the methods to be fostered in advising individual Christian and Congregational Churches to form a United Church when they are practically duplicating each other's work—and many other things necessary to the wise on-going of the larger work. He is always welcome, and more!

IN BIRMINGHAM, ALA., there is a benevolent Jew, Mr. Pizitz, who believes that the poor should have a good dinner on Thanksgiving Day. A large section of the basement of his department store was set with tables, and here white guests sat down to a fine dinner. It was not a dispensing of alms, but was an entertainment of guests by a host. The menu was ample and a procession of people took bags containing five pounds of meat and potatoes and oranges home to families who could not go to the store. At the entrance on the main floor, a long procession of negroes came to receive package dinners which they took away with them. One of the Birmingham ministers came to the dinner and said grace and talked with the guests, after which he and Mr. Pizitz circulated among them. The scene made one think of the feeding of the 5,000 by that other great member of the Jewish race, our Saviour.

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to commune or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

PSYCHOLOGY AND SIN.

A quarter of a century ago psychology was confined to the schools and cloister. Now it is universal, both as a term and a teaching. One is not supposed even to know a condition or a situation without knowing, or at least speaking, of its "psychology." "What is the 'psychology' of the situation?" That answered, the "situation" is supposed to be cleared up, thoroughly understood. In brief, "psychology" is the final and all-sufficient word in any problem or question.

It is to be noted with approval that the Federal Council of Churches, in session in Washington December 1-5, took note of this, and made this emphatic pronouncement:

"A false psychology is asserting that the sense of sin has disappeared, so that since there is nothing to be saved from, and nothing to be saved to, the need of a Saviour has passed away and the old appeal to conscience, which used to move men to seek the pardon and peace of a forgiving God, has become an anachronism, and the Saviour's words, 'Ye must be born again,' have lost their compelling force. Against all this, we must make our solemn protest. Sin has not lost its damning power, and it is the most ubiquitous thing in human life. There is only one power which can overcome and conquer it. It is His power whose name was called Jesus, for He should save His people from their sins, and who said of Himself, 'I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me.' To know Him is life eternal."

In brief, psychology, so-called, is overdoing its work. Like "patent medicine" used to be, it professes to reach and to cure too many ills. One may explain many phenomena of the mind without explaining away the eternal facts and truths back of the phenomena. One may tell all about how sin operates and why, but one cannot, with all his psychology, explain away the universal and awful fact of sin itself. Sin, with the hiss of the serpent, has dragged its slimy coil all the way through human history. It entered with the first picture of man in the Garden of Eden, and it has been here doing its poisonous and deadly work ever since. To deny the existence or reality of sin is to deny the most stubborn reality and obvious force in all human history and experience.

And the Federal Council does well to call attention to the fact, as thousands of Christian pulpits are doing every Sabbath, that the only power sufficient to grapple with and conquer sin is Jesus Christ, the Son of the living God. Sin nailed Him to the cross, and laid His body in a tomb. But it could not keep Him there. He conquered. He robbed even the grave of its victory and took the sting out of death. A living Saviour, not a dead psychology, is the world's one hope, and its only refuge from eternal ruin.

THE OLD AND THE NEW.

The old year, now gone, brought unemployment, disappointment, gloom to many. But it went out, crowned its closing days with a glad, grand climax of peace and good will. Many postoffices handled more Christmas packages than on any other similar occasion in history. The Christmas spirit was buoyant, and many business houses, especially those carrying holiday goods, worked overtime with increased help to accommodate anxious and eager purchasers. More than two billion dollars were paid out in interest, dividends, Christmas clubs and bonuses. While this total fell a little short of that of last year, the purchasing power of the dollar has increased since then over five and one-half per cent, and this more than made up for the shrinkage. Such is the spirit of optimism and good cheer when once aroused, even in time of depression.

The year 1930 brought blasted hopes, disappointed ambitions, frustrated plans and purposes to many. To some it brought grief, sorrow, bereavement, affliction. But to all it brought much to be thankful for.

We may not have much increase of this world's goods to show for the year's plans and pursuits. But we have God left, and "He is good." There are some things much worse than a lack and a need of this world's abundance. To be poor in purse and in possession may be very inconvenient and may be looked upon by the world as a curse. But to be "poor in spirit," the Word of God tells us, is "blessed." The first Beatitude reads, "Blessed are the poor in spirit, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven." It has been explained that "poor in spirit" means a feeling of spiritual need, a sense of lack of that for which the soul hungers.

If 1930, with its economic depression and sense of want for things material, prepared us for hungering and thirsting after righteousness, made us poor in spirit, brought us to realize our lack in spiritual pursuit and power, then 1931 will be the happiest and best of all years. And it will be if we walk with Him who said, "I am the Way."

J. O. A.

JAILS OR SUNDAY SCHOOLS?

Shall we have jails or Sunday Schools? Evidently we do not need to have both, for Sunday Schools can close up the jails—put them out of business—if they will. Judge Lewis L. Fawcett, of the State Supreme Court of New York, gives this information to the press: "My experience during twenty-three years on the bench, in which time over 4,000 boys under the age of twenty-one years were convicted of crime before me, of whom but three were members of a Sabbath School, has satisfied me of the value of Sabbath Schools to the community, in helping safeguard it, to the extent to which Sabbath Schools exist, from the growth of criminals."

Think of four thousand boys in one long line passing into jails, reformatories, or parole for crime, and only three out of that long line had ever belonged to a Sunday School? Had this long line been headed for Sunday School in earlier years there would have been vast vacancies in jails and other prisons.

And then Judge Fawcett gives this amazing testimony to the value of some one ministering in the name of the Church: "In 1,902 cases of suspended criminal sentences, in each of which a minister, priest, or rabbi became interested at my request, only sixty-two of the boys were brought back for sentence."

Sunday Schools and Churches cost something in money, effort, energy; but they are worth it all, even from an economic standpoint, to say nothing of the spiritual blessedness and benefits that accrue to one therefrom.

If all the boys and girls in the United States Could be reached every Sabbath and brought under the instruction and influence of the Sabbath School and Church, it would not be long till every jail and prison house in the land would be closed, put out of business.

THE CHURCH ARTIST.

An artist is usually thought of as one who paints. This may or may not be true. It is true if the painter has mastered the art. It is not true if the painter has not succeeded in painting for the love of art or the cause it represents. One may be an artist in any line of endeavor. "An artist is one who works to the theme of inspiration, and not to the click of a time-clock."

The Church is indeed fortunate that has for its members those who are real artists in Christian living. That individual who lives and gets joy out of life is an artist at living. There are troubles that come in life, in the home, and in the Church. But a real artist at living is the one whose life has been seasoned by the Holy Spirit so that He can strengthen out the crooked places in life, make smooth the rough places along life's path, or sweeten the bitter places in the actions of men. The artist in the Church is that person or group of persons, whether preacher, officers or laity, who can apply the same principles to Church life, and work to the theme of inspiration and not merely what is expected of them.

Michael Angelo walked into a rough stone quarry one day and looked upon a rough stone. Others who were reputed to be sculptors had seen this stone and passed it unnoticed. But as Michael Angelo looked upon that stone he saw in it the possibility of portraying one of the great biblical characters. So he went to work and carved out of that stone the statue of Moses. It was that piece of work that brought fame to the sculptor. It was his ability to see the possibilities of making that stone portray the real features of the man of God and the willingness of the sculptor to set himself to the task of finishing the work that his creative mind had seen was possible that gave to the world a masterpiece. Thus we class him as an artist in the field of sculpture.

Just as Michael Angelo became a real artist in the field of sculpture, so did that good old lady who walked into a store one day and looked into the face of the young man who waited on her and asked him if he was a Christian. He answered in the negative. The old lady spoke a word for her

Christ to a strange man, thereby winning D. L. Moody to Christ and to the Church and showing herself a real Church artist. Are there real Church artists today! Are there still other Moodies, or Brooks, or Beechers whom some one might win? There is a field that is still white unto harvest and God is willing that the artist of His Church find them.

In this materialistic age we have been too busy accumulating the stones of the quarry; that is, dealing with things that everybody could see, like the numbers of sculptors who went into the quarry and saw the stones, but it took the real sculptor to produce the statue of Moses. The masses could see the clerk in the store and the goods he sold, but it took an artist of Christ and His Church to see the chance of winning a soul to Christ. People see the crowds and the material substance which this materialistic age represent, but a real artist can see beyond the surface and see the possibilities which lie dormant in the rough.

Many are the boys and girls who come under the influence of the Church school who are uncouth and seemingly disrespectful to all that is high and holy, but the real artist can see the possibilities of shaping that life into a real gem that will be just as outstanding as the statue or the evangelist. One day Jesus was walking by the way. He saw a man that the public despised because he was a tax collector. But Jesus saw the possibilities of a man who would render great service to Him and His cause; therefore He called Matthew to follow Him. The real qualities of a Church artist are the presence of the Holy Spirit, inspiration, the ability to see where others cannot see and the will to work to the finish.

J. E. McC.

GOD HAS NOT QUIT.

BY DR. S. J. COREY.

Shortly before his death, A. McLean gave utterance to the bedrock on which the missionary enterprise rests. He said in that terse, epigrammatic way of his which always left a deep sense of authority: "It is because God is what He is that His purposes concerning us are what they are, purposes of good and not of evil. It is because God is what He is that He so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on Him should not perish; but have eternal life. It is because God is what He is that Jesus commanded His chosen disciples to go into all the world and preach the gospel to the whole creation. It is because God is what He is that Spirit-filled and Spirit-guided men seek to fill the earth with a knowledge of His glory, as the waters fill the sea. It is because God is what He is that His people recognize the need of humanity and, in gratitude for what has been done for them, seek to pass on this good to others who are without it."

Herein lies the bedrock of missions. Herein lies the reason why God has not quit in mission lands, or anywhere else. The mission of Christianity to the world is so bound up with the great realities of our religion that it strikes at the very root of things.

Is God a God of love? Is Christ the universal Saviour of men? Is the Holy Spirit powerful and effective today? Is the Bible the supreme Book of religion? Can men and society be redeemed? Is the Church God's instrumentality for the advancement of His kingdom?

Before any one gives the top of his mind to the denial of the world mission of Christianity, he must give the depths of his mind to these fundamental issues. God has not quit, because He cannot quit and be God. We cannot quit because we recognize God as our Heavenly Father. The Christian who says he is not interested in sharing Christ with other peoples, is talking about his own relationship with God—not with some missionary society. The missionary enterprise is so of a piece with the fundamental claims of our faith that to assume that God has quit in far fields, is to challenge His continuance everywhere. The issue of the world mission of Christianity is a big issue. The claim concerning the love of God and the universality of Christ is absolutely meaningless without the parallel claim that the Church has an undying responsibility to share God and Christ with all others. God has not quit; therefore, we cannot.

Another has said: "The missionary enterprise is the supreme adventure of history. It is the challenge of hope and courage in a world of paralyzing fears and demoralizing futilities. It is the sole claimant as a moral substitute for war. It is the only accredited messenger of good news to a bewildered world and a lone champion of love and good will in a world of hate and war. Any lowering of its standards, or lessening of its power, or cheapening of its motives, is the betrayal of the race and a yielding of the only fortress that flies the flag of brotherhood."

God has not quit because of His very nature. He loves the world just as much as He did when Jesus came as His Son and representative and expressed His own soul's love and heart's desire in the command, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature." If we take God and Christ seriously, this enterprise is unsailable. There are weaknesses in man's conduct of it, but to deny the task itself is to doubt Christ's spirit and program and quarrel with the Father who sent Him.

God has not quit, because men need Him just as much as they ever did. Can any observing Christian think for a moment that there is any hope in the life about us, if God is now made negligible? How much more so in lands where there has been no Christian background of the past and where the very religious are so pitifully and terribly inadequate for the need of men's souls.

God has not quit when so vast a number of His children, because of ignorance and unhygienic conditions, do not live out half their days. In lands like China and India, tens of millions die unnecessarily of disease in childhood, half of them before they are a year old. The body is the temple of the Holy Spirit, and the Heavenly Father wishes it to be a vessel of honor rather than a disease and suffering.

God has not quit while such uncounted numbers of His children live in abject and deadening poverty. In India, probably half the population lie down hungry at night. Her beggars number more than all the standing armies of the world. Chinese coolies work for 10 cents a day. Millions starved in that distressed land last year and millions more will starve this coming winter. We condemn infanticide, but a large proportion of the Chinese girl babies will be disposed of this winter because there is not food enough to keep starvation from the door, and a new baby requires more food. Would any human father be content that his children should suffer thus? God suffers and waits on us to take the light and blessing before which hunger and tragic want disappear.

God has not quit while the degradation of women and girls continues on the earth. He longs that every woman and child shall have the opportunity of developing every faculty he has given to them. There are twenty million widows in India of which half a million are under fifteen years of age, who will always be ignorant slaves and animal drudges in the homes of their husbands' families. Half of the womanhood of the world is unemancipated from ignorance and degradation.

God did not quit when all the world lay in darkness and Jesus gave command to His little group to go disciple all nations. He did not quit when the earnest missionaries from Southern Europe toiled for five hundred years, through seeming defeat and martyrdom to convert our crude and pagan nordic ancestors. He did not quit when Morrison died in China after a lifetime of suffering effort and only three converts. He did not quit when Livingstone fell in the heart of an Africa which was bowed down under abject slavery and deepest ignorance. He did not quit when the robbers killed Shelton on the heights of Tibet and left a little orphaned group of missionaries and a handful of native Christians to carry on. God never has quit and He never will. Our discouragements are invitations to renewed effort. We can do almost anything when we know God is with us. Our assurance lies in the fact that there is nothing in all human effort in which God has more interest, or has given more promise of His presence and power than in the world extension of His kingdom. Carey said to the cynical captain of the vessel in which he sailed to India that the outlook for the enterprise was as bright as the promises of God. We can say that the missionary enterprise is the carrying out of the eternal purposes of the Heavenly Father, that we have behind us the invincible forces of the universe and that the final result is as assured as that God lives and loves the world.—World Call.

WHY I CHOSE A SMALL COLLEGE.

BY WILLIAM STALEY CHEATHAM.

My decision to attend a small college was made only after much discussion, deliberation and weighing of the advantages offered by both the large and small college.

The small college, with its restricted number of students and small classes, furnishes more individual instruction and recitations, and a more intimate contact of the students with the professors, which tends to enrich the culture that the student acquires. The individuality and stimulant of initiative is greatly checked, if not entirely overwhelmed, in the magnitude and cold mechanism of our larger educational institutions, while the small colleges not only develop ingenuity and aid the student to recognize his talent, they supply frequent opportunities for their application.

The size of the student body in a small college permits a student to have at least a speaking acquaintance with every member of his class and to form many pleasant and a few rare friendships which aid primarily in molding character as well as increasing one's social circles or establishing possible future business friendships.

The finest obtainable equipment and facilities in the minutest details which are available in large colleges and universities are attractive inducements, but the small college, with its environment, more nearly fulfills the purpose of the higher educational institution, which is to develop character, ability and manhood, and to help the student find his life work, which will enable him to live life to its fullest; the thing that, after all, is man's highest objective.

Then bless his holy name,

Whose grace has made thee whole;

Whose loving-kindness crowns thy days:

O, bless the Lord, my soul!

—James Montgomery.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

THE SAME TO YOU!

Did you ever hear that expression? "Yes," many say; "I have heard that many times." When did you hear it? Was it at Christmas-time? Did some one say to another: "A Merry Christmas, and a Happy New Year to you?" Yes, and the one to whom that greeting of good will came said, "The same to you!" It is common at Christmas-time. Jesus brought that response to men. It is a simple sentence, but it is the heart of Christianity. "A little child shall lead them." The Babe of Bethlehem led mankind to that sweet phrase.

If the whole Church had that spirit all the year through, class distinctions would banish from society, peace would prevail, and war would be unknown among the nations. It deserves a large place in the social, educational, business, and international world. It does exist in real religious hearts, and Christmas is responsible for its use in the holiday period. In fact, peace on earth and good will among men is a fruit of Christianity and the key to a better world. This sweet expression seems to come into use naturally as we approach Christmas; and it is because everything at that time brings us closer to Jesus.

What the Church needs is to live so close to Jesus all the year through that that good will would be in human conversation all the time. Men are inclined to treat us as we treat them; and when we wish them well, they respond instinctively in the same spirit. The world needs this spirit, and it comes only through Jesus Christ. "Whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, you do ye even so to them" (Matt. 7:12). If no one ever said, "I wish you a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year," the response, "The same to you," would never come back in that friendly tone that fills the air with a new sense of human cordiality.

That spirit, as the every-day spirit in society, would correct the class distinctions, the financial barriers that separate nearest neighbors. When neighbors have nothing to do with each other, how can we expect nations, far apart and speaking different languages, to be at peace? Jesus did not wait for men to be good and friendly before He treated them with more than courtesy, even in love. "The same to you" is not a voluntary speech; it is a response. What we all need to cultivate is the spirit of good will to others, that they may return that same spirit to us. The Christmas greetings are free from any selfish motive or any hope of material gain. It is purely a friendly expression out of a kindly heart, and the hearty response is spontaneous.

It would be a fine spirit if denominations could heartily extend that Christmas spirit to one another. It would remove the jealous feeling from Churches and secure a fraternal response. If nations could extend that feeling in sincerity to one another, the world would co-operate in the sweetest fellowship of peace. It would enthrone the Prince of Peace in the heart of mankind and fill all races with love for one another.

ELON LETTER.

For some time now we have, in these Elon Letters, been writing about the characteristics of truth. A third characteristic of truth is its universality. We have, in a former Elon Letter, said that, under the category of accuracy, truth essays to include an explanation of all the known facts. The characteristic of universality, however, lies in the direction of applicability of the generalizations of truth. The working hypothesis which we may have posited may appear to us to be accurate in the sense that it includes an explanation of all the facts, but when we undertake to apply it in terms of universality, we find that it breaks down.

We have a most illuminating instance of this set forth in the World War. During this war, the citizens of every nation prayed the Christian God to give them victory in that diabolical conflict. But this prayer of the nations could not be universalized. It conflicted with the concept of men as brothers, and with the concept of God as Father of all men. And since the war, men have been thinking as they have never thought before of this inconsistency, this inability to universalize the aims and aspirations that influenced them in their war attitude. The reason is that these thinkers have come to the realization of the fact that war itself is indefensible, inhuman, incapable of justification in Christian terms. As a consequence, we have three separate attempts to adjust the differences that may arise between nations—the League of Nations, the World Court, and the outlawry of war through the pact of Paris.

Another characteristic of truth, a characteristic which a great many Americans would have placed first in the list, is its pragmatic test. "Of what value is truth," inquires the practical man, "unless it can be made useful?" And so he has small patience with the philosophers and metaphysicians and religious leaders who live in the realm of ideas and ideals and as he regards them, are incapable of getting their feet on the ground. In his premise, the practical man is correct, though his conclusion is certainly deficient. We know that the most beneficent influence affecting the life of men is the underlying philosophy that moves them to action, and so these impractical philosophers and theorizers may, after all, prove to be even more practical in the service they render mankind than the hard-headed materialist who looks upon everything from what he regards as a purely practical standpoint. However, the category of usefulness must be applied to truth, and unless truth is serviceable to the life of men and is beneficial in its influences on human progress, it is of small value. We may, in fact, say that it is of no value.

The final characteristic of truth, so far as our description of it is concerned, relates to its openness, its frankness. Not only does the truth free, but it is itself free, it is the common possession of mankind. Any man who discovers truth and undertakes to corner it or to patent it, would be execrated and anathematized. The discoverers of truth have always regarded themselves as the trustees of their fellows, and they have made their discoveries the common property of the human race. We cannot conceive of a man like Copernicus undertaking to patent his conception of the sun as the center of the universe. We cannot conceive of a man like Einstein applying for a patent in Germany and the rest of the world on his theory of "Relativity." We cannot conceive of a man like Phillips Brooks undertaking to patent his conception of God as Father and Jesus as the expression of love and good will for men. We cannot conceive of a man like Harry Emerson Fosdick undertaking to patent his idea of the place of prayer in an age of science, or of a man like Daniel A. Poling applying for patent rights for his conception of the place of youth in the Christian vocations. Truth not only frees, but it is free. It is like the water of life, of which all men may partake without money and without price.

THE NEW YEAR.

For some of us this will be really a new year; but for others it will be simply another year. We pass automatically into 1931, which may mean to us, if we so desire it, novel achievement, original adventure, and fresh service to the world. The old year has been a menace to American livelihood and human civilization, but out of it we hope to rise into a unity, a heroic devotion, a capacity for sacrifice unparalleled. Our country has fallen into a slough of party spirit, narrow nationalism, and extravagant expenditure. Will the new year which we are soon to create bring about better conditions?

We must think our way out, but this is not an easy thing to do, for it is easier to fight and to work than to think; but both will end in utter defeat without thinking. If we take time to think we will refuse to get excited, decline to lose our heads at a sudden crisis, and insist on quietly thinking out each problem before plunging into action, we will face the urgent questions of the modern world and force ourselves to find the answer. The problems bristle before us like the sphinx which would devour those who could not guess her riddle. What is democracy? How can an expanding nation be true to a written Constitution? How can we reconcile patriotism and the international mind? What are the rights and duties of the employer and the employed? How can we make industry democratic and yet make it efficient? How can we prevent national financial depression and unemployment such as we are now passing through?

Every political problem has now become an economic one, and every economic problem leads us straight into ethics, into problems of personality and character, and the moral basis of the entire social order. These problems should be discussed, and discussion is the real essence of education. There is a dogmatic kind of mind to which everything appears black or white, every issue already clear, every man a pure patriot or an enemy of the republic. But education means discrimination, clarification by discussion; it means hearing both sides, and all sides, and slowly—not violently or testily or cynically—making up one's mind where truth and duty lie.

Shall we throughout this year help the chaotic world by seriously thinking about it? Many college conversations show no intellectual content. They do not rise above the level of the last football game, the popular "show," the latest dance, or the kind of gossip to be heard on the piazza of a summer hotel. In college work, thresh out some real issue—social, industrial, religious—with your friend, and you will discover in the secret places of his mind the convictions, hopes, disappointments, ambitions which make him really human, and through traffic in ideas and ideals to lives may be permanently enriched. Only those who think together really live.

VALLEY LETTER.

My revival meeting season for this fall has now closed. I have had about two and a half months of strenuous work, with days of discouragement and times of rejoicing. Many things have had to be neglected, though I have kept up with regular appointments. During this time, I preached about sixty sermons, traveled 2,117 miles, and made 350 pastoral visits.

In addition to the preaching I did myself, I had some ministerial help. Rev. A. R. Garland was with me a week at Timber Ridge, and did the preaching, to the delight of his many friends of former days, and all who heard him. Bro. Garland was pastor at Timber Ridge some years ago, and those who knew him in those days were glad to greet him again. Many, however, of the faithful members who were there during Bro. Garland's administration as pastor have gone on to the realm where meetings never break up. The second week of the meeting, Rev. W. C. Hook was with me and did most of the preaching. Many of the people there have known Bro. Hook from a boy, and all were glad to see him again, and many remarked about the splendid preacher he had become during the years of his absence from the community.

Bro. Hook was with me through the entire meeting at Leaksville, and did the preaching, and it was well done. The people were very much pleased with him and will be glad to hear him again any time he can come.

I had no ministerial help in the meetings at Bethel and Joppa. I cannot say that any of my meetings this year have been really great in results. It seems as though it is becoming increasingly hard to win people to Christ. There are so many counter-attractions, so many other things now that engage the thought and attention of people, too many that seem not to have time to give serious thought to this all-important matter, too many that hardly have room for Jesus in their lives. Satan seems to be unusually busy trying to defeat the cause of righteousness, stirring up anything and everything that might hinder the gospel, and supplying excuses that are likely to help calm the lashing consciences of sinners. However, there were six conversions and five additions at Bethel, two conversions and two additions at Joppa, three conversions and four additions at Timber Ridge, and three conversions and two additions at Leaksville. We are glad for all these, and hope and believe much good seed has been sown that will bear good fruit, even though unseen by mortal eyes now.

I am now trying to catch up with sadly neglected work in my study, and hope during the winter months to do some much-needed reading. I think every minister ought to have some time during the year for study and spiritual refreshment, and I choose to take mine during the worst of the winter, of course filling regular appointments and doing other necessary things all the while.

Harrisonburg, Va. A. W. ANDES.

WINDSOR, VA.

For the many beautiful Christmas cards and other tokens of esteem received from our kind friends, we are boundlessly grateful. Our wish for you, dear friends, is a Happy and Prosperous New Year.

"May the Almighty Creator, our kind, loving, Heavenly Father (the universal Father), Who loves you more than we can do, Outpour His blessing and boundless love on you; And may the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ grant that through the coming year, Whatever shall befall, the Blessed Holy Spirit may be near:

Uplifting when your spirit is downcast,
Filling with joy the memories of the past,
Drawing you close, until His secret bliss
Is whispered to your soul in happiness,
And you are wrapped in peace and joy and light,

One with the King of Kings, whose love is infinite."

Beloved, as we are entering upon a new year, let us forget the mistakes and misunderstandings of the past that would interfere with our spiritual progress. In order to attain the highest Christian life possible, let us walk in the Master's footsteps of obedience, consecration, gentleness, patience, love and service. Seek to attain and promote in all things uprightness, justice and truth. Avoid occasions of evil and impurity.

This is a fine world if you want to do something for somebody. What this sad, sin-cursed world wants more than anything else is the helping hand, the sympathetic heart, kindness in thought and word and deed. I appeal to you to endeavor to be living examples of the love doctrine, the Golden Rule, the square deal, and loyal co-operation. For, after all, it is the heart overflowing with Christ-like love and finding its expression in loving service that really counts. Remember that a walk with God is a walk of service. Our Saviour put special emphasis upon a life of service.

God, grant that we may grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, our only hope of everlasting salvation. To Him be glory, both now and forever!

CHRISTIAN LIGHT.

Although some intruders had stolen several joints of the stove pipe at Christian Chapel, services were held there on Sunday, 21st. We were pleased to have included in the service a sermon by Bro. George Tally, of Carbondon, who is in his infancy as a minister, but to hear him one would believe him an experienced preacher.

Mr. Talley's text was these words, "I will come again" (John 14:3), a subject which is very seldom discussed from the pulpit, though one of the best to be selected. He also explained very explicitly the teaching of Jesus to the disciples prior to the crucifixion: "He that believeth on me, the works that I do, shall he do also, and greater works than these shall he do, because I go to my father."

Bro. Talley explained the return of Christ not as a spirit, but as a natural body, in like manner as He departed; also that the return of Christ does not mean the end of time, but that He will build His kingdom on earth and reign a thousand years. Mr. Talley also explained the condition, as he saw from the Bible, of the world at the second coming, explaining that some would not die, but will be translated without death. Mr. Talley preached direct from the Scripture, and his sermon was much enjoyed, was very instructive as well as constructive.

Merry Oaks, N. C. A. M. COTTEN.

The board of trustees of Country Life Academy have voted to increase the salary of the president, Rev. Edward F. Green. Inasmuch as the salary of this president has always been very small, the increase was greatly needed and worthily voted. Dr. Green's wife is still very ill, and it looks as though she always would be in need of careful attention. It is expected that she will be taken to a hospital near New York City, where her daughter, Miss Katherine, will be near her. The latter is studying to become a registered nurse in New York City.

A PRAYER.

(January.)

O great Jehovah, God of all time and eternity, hear. Thou who changest not, whose covenant with man never can fail, forgive, we pray, the weakness which causes us sometimes to forget our covenant with Thee. As the scroll of time rolls back another year, cover, O God, every blot and blotch, every deed and word of shame or hurt. Behind Jesus' cross of pain and love hide even the trace of soil and stain, and day by day as turns to view the fresh, clean page may it not become sullied by the record of unforgiven committed sin or the sadder doom, "Ye did it not." In our Saviour's name. Amen.

CHRISTMAS IN THE PHILIPPINES.

Philippine Islands, Nov. 15, 1929.

Dear Friends of THE SUN:

It is now over a month before Christmas, and as we sit here in our home tonight we can hear two different groups practicing their native carols. They sound very much like negro spirituals to us, only the singing is not quite so melodious. Christmas week these groups come and sing in front of houses and expect either gifts of food or money. However, they did not approach our house last year (maybe it was because we were new-comers).

With us, Christmas begins early and lasts a long time because of all the belated letters and packages. If we waited until after Christmas to write you about ours here, you would get it so late that you would be no longer interested in such things, so I will tell you about the events of last year, which will be similar this year. Our celebration began Christmas at 5 A. M. when the boys and girls from both dormitories met around a big bamboo Christmas tree in the sala of the girls' dormitory, and patiently waited for the gifts to be distributed. After songs and an appropriate talk, gifts were given and exchanged among the boys and girls. Most of the gifts on the tree were from missionary boxes sent from societies in the States. Then the whole group came to the hospital to share our tree and join in singing carols to the patients. The patients who are unfortunate enough to be in the hospital at Christmas time enjoy the singing and Christmas spirit. Each patient is given something from the missionary boxes, such as towels, toothbrushes, soap, and for the children there are toys and dolls. Of course, the doctor, nurses and attendants receive and exchange gifts at the tree, too. We also had a short talk which was given by Dr. Laubach last year. Then Mrs. White and I also had another tree at our home and a Christmas dinner for the missionaries and some of the workers here in Cagayan. Among the decorations at the hospital was a big red cross in electric lights which made a good showing from the road. And this year we are planning a large community Christmas tree which will be lighted every night during Christmas week in the yard in front of the hospital.

We cannot attempt to give gifts. However, the prettiest trees of all, we had at our Church here—a large one on either side of the pulpit. A group of the young people gave a very effective pageant, and the little children sang and recited as well as any group of children at home. The children in the barrios were made happy, too, when the Sunday School workers took them gifts and cards.

This year, if we can afford a truck, we want to get all these children in to Cagayan, so that they can enjoy the program at the Church.

And now, as this season approaches again, we are indeed happy that we have been sent to Cagayan. We feel that in many ways our lot has been cast in a pleasant place, and still the opportunity and need is as great as anywhere.

May joy fill your hearts and His peace abide with you this Christmas season.

Cagayan, P. I.

MONTICELLO MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

The Monticello Missionary Society met at the Christian Church, December 12th, and enjoyed a very interesting program, under the leadership of Mrs. W. G. Rudd. The theme of the program was, "The Christmas Spirit." For the devotional Miss Myrtle Rudd read the Christmas story from Luke 2:8-16. Two papers, "The Spirit of Christmas," by Mrs. M. C. Faucette, and "The Other Half of Christmas," by Mrs. W. R. McKinney, were very instructive. Mrs. J. E. Cumbie gave an enjoyable reading, "The Bell Story." One of the main features of the program was "Why and How We Should Celebrate Christmas," by the pastor, Rev. J. L. Neese.

Following the program, the society enjoyed a delightful social hour. Refreshments were served by Mrs. N. G. Walker and Mrs. Jack Comer.

Program of Chapter III—"The People and Their Country."

I. Business session.

II. Study course:

1. Review preface and chapters 1 and 2.

2. Leader's talk: "People of India."

(a) Dravidians and their religion.

(b) Aryans and their religion.

(c) Merging of Dravidians and Aryans into Hinduism.

(d) Moslems.

(e) European traders, and confusion evolved from their presence. (Pages 29-35.)

3. A member: A hurried trip through India; visiting Bombay, India's gateway; Agra, where we see Taj Mahal, the most beautiful building in the world; Delhi, India's capital; through Khyber Pass; colorful Kashmir; the sacred river, Ganges with its myriad worshipers; Calcutta; the snow-capped Himalayan Mountains and Mt. Everest; Burma with its famous Pagoda; the laboring elephants; Ceylon with its Temple of Buddha's Tooth (pages 35-48, plus wall map of India, on sale C. P. A., price 60 cents)—all available pictures. The National Geographic Magazine, October 1929, July 1926, November 1927 contain beautiful pictures of India.

4. Leader: Concluding remarks and preparation for worship. (See below.)

III. Worship service—Theme: "The East a-Callin'" (Kipling):

1. Instrumental prelude: "There is a Fountain Filled with Blood" (Western Melody).

2. Call to worship: "The people that walk in darkness have seen a great light; they that dwell in the land of the shadow of death, upon them hath the light shined" (Isa. 9:2).

3. Hymn: "From Greenland's Icy Mountains."

4. Scripture: Isa. 55:3-7.

5. Prayer: For a real thirst for friendship with India.

6. Offertory—Music: "Follow the Gleam."

7. Hymn: "The Whole Wide World for Jesus."

8. Mizpah benediction.

Leader: How thrilling it must be to take such a tour through the very oldest home of civilization, India! We know how its lure has attracted Mark Twain, Rudyard Kipling and others. Surely if we'd 'Eard the East a-callin', why we wouldn't 'eed nothin' else"! (Leader, make free use of the reading study book, "India on the March," by Alden M. Clark, especially first paragraph.) But if just the natural beauty and picturesque settings lure us, how much more should we be drawn to India when we realize how much her people need our Christ and his beautiful salvation. Surely, India has much to offer us. But we have the most beautiful and priceless gift for India.

LIFE AFTER DEATH.

"If a man die, shall he live again?" (Job 14:14.)

Job asked this question when he was answering the arguments that his three friends put to him when he was so sorely afflicted with boils away back toward the beginning of time; and men today are still asking the question and doubting that there is a life after death.

In the fall of the year, when the flowers fade and the leaves wither and nature puts on all her bright raiment, then we know that winter is near; and as we look upon the approach of change and decay in nature, the question comes to many: "If a man die, shall he live again?" Job answered the question to his own satisfaction in the verses found in the nineteenth chapter: "I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that He shall stand at the latter day upon the earth; and though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God, whom I shall see for myself, and mine eyes shall behold and not another; though my reins be consumed within me."

Though tempted by man and tried by the evil one, he was triumphant in his faith of the resurrection. Since that time, Jesus Christ has come and taught the life after death by precept and example. He spoke of God's loving care of the birds, the flowers and the grass which are but passing fancies, and compared them with man, who was made a little lower than the angels and in the likeness of God and whom God has put in dominion over all that is on the earth. If God so cares for the lower animal and vegetable life, showing forth His power in reproduction and recreation, shall He not much more resurrect you? O ye, of little faith! If the flower dies, if the tree dies, if the caterpillar dies, shall they live again? "Go forth, under the open sky, and list to nature's ten things"—in the woods, in the fields, and beside the streams, and hear the voices tell of the spring-time to come, when the woods will be filled again with the songs of the birds, carpeted with grass and the myriads of wild flowers, trees densely covered with foliage, and butterflies flitting from flower to flower. With all these thoughts, can one ask the question, "If a man die, shall he live again?"

How can a student of nature help but believe in a life after death? How much more can one who has been reared in a Christian atmosphere doubt that there is a life after death? "Thou fool, that which thou sowest is not quickened, except it die: and that which thou sowest, thou sowest not that body that shall be, but bare grain, it may chance of wheat or of some other grain; but God giveth it a body as it hath pleased Him, and to every seed his own body" (1 Cor. 15:36-38).

If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable. But now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first fruits of them that slept. (1 Cor. 15:19-20.)

In the way of righteousness is life, and in the pathway thereof there is no death. (Prov. 12:28.)

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

BY REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE.

Lesson II—January 11, 1931.

THE CHILDHOOD OF JESUS.

GOLDEN TEXT: "Jesus advanced in wisdom and stature, and in favor with God and man."—Luke 2:52.

LESSON: Luke 2.

The Birth of Jesus.

We are still close to the Christmas season, and it will not be amiss to mention a few of the truths which the simple story of the birth of Jesus has to teach us. If with the shepherds we go unto Bethlehem to see this thing which has come to pass, we will learn some very practical and profound lessons.

1. The tragedy of the life that has no room for Christ in it. The inn-keeper undoubtedly had an inn full of guests; probably good, respectable, well-paying guests. But if he had known—ah! if he had known—who it was that asked for a place in his inn, he would have made a place for them, even if he had to turn some one else away. How much he missed that night, and perhaps he never even knew it. And how tragic indeed is that life in which there is no place for Christ. It may be that it is taken up with things which are good, but if the good keeps out him who is the best, how pathetic! There is danger that in our stress and strain of making a living, we shall leave Him out who is life itself.

2. The rewards of the humble spirit and obedient heart. The shepherds were humble, simple, responsive-hearted folks. They were not skilled in the details of religious law as were the scribes and Pharisees. But it was to them that the first Christmas message came. And because they were not disobedient to the heavenly vision, they came to the Christ-Child Himself. It is ever thus. God resisteth the proud, but giveth grace to the humble. The secret of the Lord is with them that fear Him. He that followeth the light shall have more light. God help us all to cultivate the humble heart and the obedient spirit.

3. The true values of life. Here was one born to be a King, but He was born not only in simplicity but even in poverty. God was trying to teach the world that the measure of life is not what we are or what one has, but certain qualities of mind and heart. How poor indeed is that life which must borrow its glory from that which it has or that which it puts on. The true measure of life is its inner worth and its power and its willingness to serve.

4. Bethlehem tells us that God dwells among men. Christ came as a baby. The divine life took upon itself our likeness of flesh. God was pleased to dwell in humanity. We are not to look afar for God, but at hand and within. The best in us is God in us. He whom we need is everywhere, and He still enters into those human hearts which are open to receive Him.

5. Christ makes a difference in life. The shepherds returned to their same old tasks, but they went back in a different spirit. What a difference it makes in life when one has Christ! Old things are passed away, behold all things are become new.

Boyhood of Jesus.

The boyhood of Jesus, even the meager stories which we have of it, also tell us of abiding truths.

1. Life at its best involves all-'round development. The boy Jesus advanced in wisdom and stature and in favor with God and with man. That is life's normal development. Folks usually give heed to three, and many give heed to all, but there are many who leave undeveloped in a pathetic way the religious element, and do not advance in "favor with God."

2. Christ is often lost by a process rather than by an act. Christ's parents did not know at first that the boy Jesus was not with them. They had lost Him, and they did not know it. It is thus in many lives. Not by any great, outrageous sin, but by neglect and indifference is the Christ lost in life. And as in the case of the parents, one must turn back to the Christ Himself in order to find Him.

3. A boy's religion may be different from an adult's, but it may be just as vital. All those who heard Jesus were amazed at His questions and His answers. He did not fit in with the "mold." But His religion was very vital. These restless youngsters who are often the despair of so many religious workers may have an unorthodox religion, but there may be an amazing vitality about it and a reality, too.

4. The dawn of responsibility is a strategic time in youth. The boy Jesus was beginning to feel His personal responsibility. His mother did not exactly understand her Son. She stood perplexed, as many a parent has stood perplexed in the presence of the unfolding life of the adolescent boy or girl. How much liberty should a parent allow such a young person? How much authority must one exercise? Here are the rocks on which so many relations between parents and young people go to smash.

5. Jesus was subject unto His parents. He might know more than they, but He was subject unto them. He made obedience the first law of His life to them. Obedience in the home is the first law of the home now and always. Parents should be worthy of it and children should yield it. Christ is our example here, as elsewhere.

Lesson III—January 18, 1931.

THE MINISTRY OF JOHN THE BAPTIST.

GOLDEN TEXT: "Bring forth, therefore, fruits worthy of repentance."—Luke 3:8.

LESSON: Luke 3.

"There was a man sent from God whose name was John." There is no doubt that he was sent from God, and there is no doubt that He knew that he was sent from and by God. John's character and ministry bear witness to that fact.

"The word of God came unto John"—he was conscious of a divine call. God have mercy upon the man who attempts to preach who does not have a consciousness of a divine call, a divine imperative laid upon him. This matter of a call involves more than simply the ministry or missionary service. God calls men to all worthy work, and happy is that man who has the inner certainty that he is in the place and doing the thing that God wants him to be and do.

"In the wilderness." John had been living on the outskirts of civilization, away from the hustle and bustle of life. He had time for thought and meditation and communion. In this way he had a very real knowledge of and experience with God. The secret of John's work is to be found in the fact that John knew God. It is the secret of the abiding worth and work of any Christian worker or any man or woman.

"He came . . . preaching the baptism of repentance, for the remission of sins." He did not come preaching that baptism was the cause of the remission of sins, but an outward symbol of an inner change of mind and heart. "Repentance"—a change of mind, literally, but a change of mind that found expression in a change of conduct and life. There is still a place for preaching. It is still by the foolishness of preaching that God has chosen to save them that believe. Let no man be ashamed of the fact that he is a preacher.

"O generation of vipers, who hath warned you to flee from the wrath to come?" That is plain talk, but the times and the type of people who came demanded it. There are times when preachers and teachers must speak the truth in love. John's type of preaching was not the only type of preaching, but it was adapted to the needs, and that is always good preaching.

"Bring forth, therefore, fruits worthy of repentance." Religion should, and real religion does, make a difference. What a man really believes finds expression in conduct and life. Repentance means something more than mere sorrow for sin; it means, as the little boy said, being so sorry that we quit. By their fruits ye shall know them, said Jesus later. Herein is our Father glorified, that we bear much fruit. So shall we be His disciples.

"Begin not to say within yourselves, 'We have Abraham to our father.'" Do not trust in your religious ancestry. Do not depend upon second-hand religion. The only thing that matters is the personal, inner attitude. Every one of us must give an account of himself to God, and not profession, but fruitage is the final test.

"He answered and said unto them . . ." John did not deal with mere pious platitudes or in high-sounding but little-meaning phrases. He told his hearers in practical language what religion for them would mean. It is all right for the preacher to know theology, but he also ought to know how to apply theology. It is all right for the teacher to deal with principles, but he should also know what practical application those principles will have in the lives of the Sunday School boys and girls.

"But one mightier than I cometh, the latchet of whose shoes I am not worthy to unloose." John knew he had ability, but he recognized his limitations. He was pretty good as measured by the men of his day, but he knew how incomplete his life was as compared with the One who should come. True humility is a foundation-stone of greatness, and even of righteousness.

"He shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost." John could convict the conscience, but he could not impart the power to conquer sin. When a man comes to ultimate grips with the elemental forces of life, he must have God, he must have the Holy Spirit. Here is one of the tragedies of our failure to pray. "Prayer is the soul of religion, and failure there is not a superficial lack for the supply of which the spiritual life leisurely can wait. Failure in prayer is the loss of religion itself in its inward and dynamic aspect of fellowship with the Eternal. Only a theoretical deity is left to any man who has ceased to commune with God, and a theoretical deity saves no man from sin and disheartenment and fills no life with a sense of divine commission. Such vital consequences require a living God who actually deals with men." The Meaning of Prayer.

"But Herod the tetrarch, being reproved by him (John)." The king had committed a moral outrage by taking his brother's wife, and John promptly rebuked sin in high places. It took courage and it cost John his head. But John feared God, and hence he did not fear what men could do unto him. We need people today who will stand on their convictions on the great moral and spiritual questions of today, no matter what they may have to pay.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

By JEWEL TRUITT.

TOPIC: "My Idea of What a Young Woman Ought to Be."

SCRIPTURE: Prov. 31:10-31.

This question of what a young woman ought to be can be discussed from many different sides. Perhaps the most interesting for young boys and girls' discussions together is their relationship to young men. You might want to discuss the following questions: (1) What advantage has the girl who can talk of other things than the family and community news? Is her ability worth the effort it costs? (2) Do you prefer the girls who permit petting or those who do not? (3) Which do you prefer in a girl: wit, character, or beauty? (4) Does a girl have to sacrifice her ideals in order to be popular? (5) Is it fair for a young man to "drop" a young lady who has done the questionable things which he suggested? (6) How much can a girl do toward raising our standards for both boys and girls?

The Girl in the Home.

The girl of today, as of all other days, is most priceless when she is in the home. She is eager to do her best in the home of her parents. She delights to honor father and mother, and is happy in the work of the home surrounded by growing brothers and sisters. She hopes to have a home of her own some day and feels free to say so. But in thinking of her own home, she pictures as her companion a man of true worth and of character. She knows that a home demands courageous toil, and gladly plans to master every task. Because it may be that she is not to be one who shall use her energies for work in a home, she trains her heart and hand to render service elsewhere.

Her Beauty.

There are still a few girls left who hope to make their way in the world because of physical beauty. But they are growing fewer. An increasing number of young women are becoming humbly conscious of the beauty that God has put into maidenhood. They care for their bodies so as to make them strong and glowing with health. Neatness of person and daintiness of dress contribute to their beauty. They trust in God, and from their faces glow peace and joy. They are about the most beautiful things of God's creation, and they are due the honor their gracious queenliness receive.

Her Ideals.

Most young women have ideals that are noble and uplifting. Ideals are of value when the one who has them tries to live up to them. It is possible to fail to express them in any way. Ideals must not be sacrificed for the sake of popularity. Above all, a young woman must hold to her ideals. She will find that her own self-respect is worth more than the attentions of those who may not even be worthy her company. Do we admire the girl who sticks by her ideals, or do we leave her in loneliness?

In her poem, "My Kate," Elizabeth Barrett Browning pays tribute to one woman, but her tribute is an ideal for some:

"I doubt if she said to you much that could act
As a thought or suggestion—she did not attract

In the sense of the brilliant or wise. I infer 'Twas her thinking of others made you think of her—

My Kate.

"She never found fault with you, never implied
Your wrong by her right; and yet men at her side Grew nobler, girls purer, as through the whole

The children were gladder that pulled at her gown—

My Kate.

"None knelt at her feet confessed lovers in thrall;
They knelt more to God than they use—that was all.

If you praised her as charming, some asked what you meant,

But the charm of her presence was felt when she went—

My Kate.

"The weak and the gentle, the ribald and rude,
She took as she found them, and did them all good.

It always was so with her—see what you have!
She has made the grass greener even here with her grave—

My Kate."

Daily Readings.

Monday—A good housekeeper (Prov. 31:27-31).

Tuesday—Modest (1 Peter 3:1-6).

Wednesday—Interested in spiritual things (Luke 10:38-42).

Thursday—A good companion (Ruth 1:16-17).

Friday—A real partner (Prov. 19:14).

Saturday—A real "find" (Prov. 18:22).

OCEAN VIEW CHURCH.

The revival of the First Christian Church, Ocean View, Va., has come to a close. Rev. M. L. Chappel, of Tyner, N. C., assisted the pastor, Rev. J. H. Warren, in the two weeks' meeting. The meeting was a great success from almost every viewpoint. Rev. Chappel proved himself to be a real gospel preacher. His sermons were helpful and uplifting, and many people were made to rejoice under his preaching. There was a class of seventeen received into the Church at the closing service. The Church is greatly strengthened and encouraged for the year's work.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE
One of our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy.

"If thou wilt make the Almighty thy treasure . . . then shalt thou delight thyself in the Almighty . . . and thou shalt make thy prayer unto Him and He will hear thee."—Job 22: 25-27.

BY DR. AMOS R. WELLS.

MONDAY.

OUR COMMENCEMENT DAY.

"Him would Paul have to go forth with him."
—Acts 16:1-5.

What a call that was to young Lystra to the ends of the world. It lifted him from his narrow life to the heights of heaven. It gave him for a comrade the most eager and exalted spirit of his time. It presented him with an immortality of usefulness and joy.

In June, every year, a multitude of wistful-eyed young folks step forth from college halls on what is happily called their commencement day, the beginning of their life as men and women out in the world. Every day is such a commencement day to the soul that walks with God. Have we failed? We shall not fail today. Have the roads been rough and the miles dragged? Today our feet shall speed joyously to their goal. Have we been lonely? Today the bright achievers of all history shall be with us and the King of glory shall walk by our side.

Prayer.—Yes, our Saviour, Christ of all progress, today shall be the beginning of days with Thee. Today shall be our commencement day with Thee. Today we shall graduate from every hindrance, every crudity, every fear and incompetence, and set forth with Thee on the path of godlike accomplishment. In Thy name. Amen.

TUESDAY.

NEVERTHELESS.

"Lazarus is dead . . . nevertheless let us go unto him."—John 11:7-15.

Dr. Boynton Merrill recently preached a sermon on the one word, "Nevertheless." "‘Nevertheless’ in Paul's letters," he said, "is like a trumpet at the lips of a man standing on a hilltop shrilling out the news to his comrades below, that help is on the way." The Revised Version has changed Paul's "nevertheless" in most cases to "and" or "but" or "howbeit," but it keeps Christ's greatest "nevertheless" of all, that spoken of Lazarus. The beloved is dead. He has been three days in the grave. His dear form has begun to dissolve. Stiff, cold, impossible, the blackness of grief—"nevertheless." And what an imperial "nevertheless" was that, what a victory over hopelessness and death!

We can put Christ's "nevertheless" into our lives. Yes, and Paul's, and the "nevertheless" of all heroic souls who have faced undaunted the sadness and horror and fears of life.

Prayer.—Nothing, O Lord, is too strong for Thee, and nothing can conquer him who puts his trust in Thee. Though all armies combine against me, I shall not fear, I shall not retire. Stand, Thou, only at my right hand, brother Deliverer, Thou Almighty, and our banner shall go forward in victory. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

PILLOWS.

"And he took one of the stones of the place, and put it under his head, and lay down in that place to sleep."—Gen. 28:10-18.

Once a former workman under Edison, now president of the Edison Electric Illuminating Company of Boston, said that he had seen the great inventor, after he had worked for many hours on one of his inventions, lie down on the laboratory floor with a pile of castings for a pillow, and go soundly to sleep. We are reminded at once of Jacob's stone pillow at Bethel. We are reminded also of that wonderful missionary, Bishop William Taylor, who carried around with him a large flat stone which he used for a pillow.

Such earnestness and invincible determination make the softest pillow. They transform steel castings into feathers. They transform all hardships into delights and find recuperation where others find only complaints. Theirs is the true exhilaration, the genuine joy. They reach their Harans, and they find Bethels all the way.

Prayer.—Our Saviour, Thou didst sleep through the fierce tempest, Thy head on the helmsman's bench. Teach us the calmness of faith, the conquest of fear, the victory over weariness and all hardships. We would toil with Thee, and our sleep shall be sweet. Amen.

THURSDAY.

GRACE AND THE CROSS.

"Christ . . . who His own self bare our sins in His own body on the tree."—1 Peter 2:18-25.

Christians are never through praising Christ for His atonement. It was begun in the dawn of time. He was the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world. It came to its glorious and effective climax on Calvary. It continues in the Father's love and the Holy Spirit's power to this very hour, and it will continue as long as there is a soul that may look to the cross and be saved.

"Oh, wondrous cross!" Campbell Morgan exclaims. "Therein sin rejected the King, and grace crowned Him. Therein sin destroyed the Priest, and grace through the Priest made atonement. Therein sin silenced the voice of the prophet, and grace caught up the message and repeated it to all the race, for a new law of life and love."

Prayer.—Christ Jesus, eternal Redeemer, lifted ever on the cross of shame and glory, we fall at Thy pierced feet, we lay ourselves open before Thee, and we beg of Thee the fulfillment of all our desire, our pardon and restoration through Thy grace. Then shall Thy cross become our cross, the blessed home of our souls. Amen.

FRIDAY.

THE MOUTH TRAP.

"A fool's mouth is his destruction, and his lips are the snare of his soul."—Prov. 18:1-7.

It is a comical saying that "every time So-and-so opens his mouth he puts his foot in it," but the implied comparison of the mouth to a trap has Bible warrant. The cross-examining lawyer who sets question traps for the witness has probably many a time caught himself in the snare of his own words, and has not realized it. So have we all.

We jest about sacred things, and entrap ourselves in the spirit of irreverence. We give our words habitually a sneering and critical cast, and snap! on our souls goes the trap of cynicism. We give utterance to a doubt, and capture our thought with skepticism. We allow ourselves to slip into profanity, and become the prisoners of infidelity. We utter some bit of spicy gossip, and the first thing we know we are chained in the cold and lonely dungeon of slanderers.

Prayer.—O Thou Creator of speech, with what power hast Thou endowed Thy creatures—power for good as well as power for evil! Thou Word of life, may our words be life-giving and not death-giving. May they be our bridges into love and helpfulness, and not snares to catch our souls. Amen.

SATURDAY.

PLEASEING.

"Walk worthily of the Lord unto all pleasing."
—Col. 1:9-18.

A woman who dressed beautifully once made a very beautiful remark. "If I lived in the woods," she said, "I should dress for the trees." Her dressing was to add to the beauty of the world. She wished to be as lovely as possible in order to be in harmony with God's lovely world. She dressed partly in order to please herself, but far more to please others, and, it may well be, to please her Maker. And none of this points to extravagance or display, but only to taste and thoughtfulness and skill.

Many of us do not plan for the beauty of our lives, and for pleasing the people around us. If we lived in the woods, we should not dress for the trees, but should consider our situation an excuse for dressing as roughly as possible. Out in the world, we deem our duty to others well performed if we do our share of the world's work.

There is an ugly way of accomplishing any task and a lovely way. There is even a hateful way of conferring a benefit, and a charming way. It is never enough to do our duty unless we do it sweetly and winsomely.

Prayer.—Dear Lord, we bless Thee that Thou didst so hang upon the cross as to draw all men to Thee. We glory in the attractions of Thy religion. We praise Thee for the beauty of holiness, and that it may be ours if we live with Thee. Amen.

SUNDAY.

WHEN TO BE BURIED.

"He is thy life and the length of thy days."
Deut. 30:15-20.

That amazingly vigorous Irish statesman Thos. Power O'Connor once gave this message to the youth of England: "Life is a great adventure. Live every hour of it. Don't be buried until you are dead." He had seen, as we all have, many a person apparently walking the earth and pretending to be giving who, for all real purposes, was in his grave. When one stops growing mentally and spiritually, when one ceases to be interested in the progress of man, when one no longer loves and admires and cheers and looks above, one has virtually died.

But there is always the possibility of a revival, which is the difference between a corpse and this breathing deadness. There is always the possibility of waking up to love again, to live in the hopes and fears of mankind, to join in the onward movement of the race. This possibility is realized through religion.

Prayer.—That is our true existence, Heavenly Father, to dwell in Thee. If we have never entered into the glorious swing of it, may it be ours this minute. We ask it through Him who is our Way and our Truth and our Life. Amen.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN'S PULPIT

REV. JOSEPH W. FIX, Preacher.

THE PURPOSE OF OUR CHURCH.

BY REV. C. E. GERRINGER.

"Go ye into all the world."—Matt. 28:28.

For every worth-while institution that has been given a place in a busy, work-a-day world, there has been in the minds of its founders a real and definite purpose, and unless that institution has measured up to that purpose it ceased to be. I am thinking of the formation of business firms, where there has been the expenditure of great sums of hard-earned money and the election of officers whose business it is to see that the firm or business is a success, filling one definite purpose in the arena of the business world, and when that business or firm fails in that one specific task or mission, then it fails to be.

I like to think in terms of every organization having some definite task, though its beginning may be small, its investors few, and its task a hard one, but unless that organization is able to carry its purpose to the hearts of others and build up a larger business, declaring a larger dividend and proving itself to be a paying business, it will soon find its doors closed and cease to function in the chosen field.

Whatever my idea may be toward that of a business firm or organization in that of a purpose or mission, with all of its organization and program, it does not differ from that of the Church. For if there ever was an organization that was founded with a more definite purpose or mission in the mind of its Founder, I cannot think of it, neither can I think of an institution that will cease to be, more quickly than that of the Church, when it fails to measure up to its purpose or to fill its mission.

When Jesus founded His Church upon that rock, which was Himself, I believe that He had a definite purpose or mission in mind, and naturally or really expects it to measure up to that or it will cease to be. When He said, "Go ye into the world and preach my gospel, and make disciples of all nations," He expressed in very definite terms the purpose or mission of His Church.

Then we would say that the Church is that institution founded in the souls of men for the purpose of evangelizing the world, and that evangelism is that of carrying the good news to those who know Him not, or that evangelism is that of bringing the unsaved masses of humanity into a relationship with Him that will allow them to know beyond a shadow of doubt that they, too, have been saved by the power of God.

Can you think of an organization with a greater mission to fill than that of carrying the gospel in its saving power to the great masses of humanity in all of the forms of human depravity? Can you think of a call that should so challenge and stir the hearts of His followers as His command to "go and carry my gospel to every nation?" When we learn that such a small per cent of our own are sheltered within His fold and millions are dying without the bread of life, certainly we will agree with Dr. Goddard when he said that "evangelism is the supreme need of the day."

Some one may ask why lay stress upon that of evangelism? Why concern yourself with the salvation of others in a land where the book is open to every one who cares to read and study it? We would answer that question in just three ways, namely: (1) It is the command of Christ; (2) it is the purpose of the Church; (3) it is the supreme need of the day.

Would you not think today of the Christ as being a very selfish individual had He failed to say to His disciples, "Go and preach my gospel to every nation?" Certainly you would have, and probably you would say with me that He is not worthy of our consideration, but how grateful each should be that He should have expressed such a great love for others and was and is still willing and anxious to say, "Go preach my gospel," that others may know me, whom to know is life everlasting; and how we His professed followers today need to hear Him say, "Go and preach my gospel," for it is not only the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth, but the obedience to that command is the salvation of the Church, for when that Church fails to carry out His command, then it will soon find itself failing to be.

If the Church did not have a definite goal to which to work to, would you not soon decide that it was rather loosely organized and not worthy of your consideration? But how each heart should rejoice that they are a part of an organization that has such a wonderful purpose for its existence! That it remains to function wherever it is organized, that others who are in darkness may see the light, or those who have not been introduced to Christ may meet Him, as the one who possesses the power to save from sin and its effects and results.

Can you think of a more supreme need today than that of seeking to evangelize the world for Christ? When you think of the present condition of the world, with all its masses steeped in sin, does not your very heart burn with a desire to go with the message of the Master and offer the remedy for all sin? Does not your very soul long to lift up the fallen, help the weak, and see those who have fallen by the way and show them the way of better living? This is the supreme need of the day.

Ever since the work of evangelization of the world has been in progress, there have been various and sundry methods used, some specialize in one and others in another method, and probably each thinks his the better way. I was very much impressed some time ago when a teacher in a normal school said that the course in methods is being crowded too much; the thing that is needed so much by many who are entering the profession of teaching is not methods, but the subject matter mastered, and methods will take care of themselves. Learn your subject matter, and putting it across will be an easy matter. When you and I have mastered the fundamental teachings of Christ, the carrying it to others will be an easy matter, because it will be the desire of our heart and the passion of our soul.

I would not have you think that this is an easy task, or that without opposition or hindrance, for every great movement has had its barriers, and every great water-course has met its obstacles, but the worth of a thing is proven in its ability to overcome its hindrances or obstacles.

Evangelism is no exception to the rule, for it certainly has met hindrances and obstacles along the way. They have prevented its spread, but it is proving its worth when we say it has and will continue to overcome them.

The first of these hindrances to evangelism is worldliness. Now, some may expect me to go into a tirade against one or two forms of worldliness, such as dancing, card playing, and theater-going. That is the pity of it. We have scolded so much about these particular forms of worldliness that we have allowed the man who does not, perhaps cannot, indulge in these to think he is not worldly.

In the incipency of our history we were a very unworldly people, but since we have gained so much prestige, so much wealth, and so much culture, we are not the simple, primitive people we were just at the beginning of our Church. Now worldliness consists in looking to something un-Christian or anti-Christian for our happiness. It may be the ball-room or in the bank; it may be at the card table or in the counting-house; it may be in the theater or in the throes of the marts of trade. The money-lover is as worldly as the dancer. The grafter is the worldliest man on the map. You have seen men steeped in sordid selfishness, blind to everything but the almighty dollar, complain that our young people are too worldly. He who gets pleasure out of the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eye, or the pride of life is worldly. A love for these things is incompatible with the love of God. When our people go outside of the Church circle for their pleasures and pastimes and hobnob with those who do not honor God, they are getting on dangerous ground.

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

When you read this letter, Christmas Day will have been celebrated. At this writing (December 24th), it looks as though the children will have a happy Christmas. A number of the Churches have sent in presents for the children. Our good friend, J. M. Darden, sent us oranges and candy for all of them. We killed hogs a few days ago, so we would have fresh meat, as we could not have turkey, so I believe the children will be well provided for. Christmas trees are being prepared in each building and beautifully decorated, and the presents, with a bag of candy and oranges for each child, will be placed at the foot of the tree. All Christmas presents sent in to the children are held until the Christmas exercises are given, and then all presents are given out at the same time, so the children can enjoy their Christmas together. And it makes us all happy to see the children happy. I know if the Churches who have sent in presents for the children get as much joy out of the giving as the children do out of the receiving, there is lots of joy in the Christian denomination.

Our Thanksgiving offering is coming in very nicely, but we are quite a distance from our goal. At this writing, we have raised $7,258.12 on our Thanksgiving offering. We still lack $2,742 being to the ten-thousand-dollar mark. We have raised this year the sum of $23,001.77. We still lack $6,998.23 being to our goal of $30,000. Will we reach it? Watch and see! Please mail me your checks, so we can close our books for the year. We will hold them open the first week in January to get all the contributions in for the year 1930.

The second of these hindrances is formalism. An editor of a religious paper once said that "if our Church was ever to go forward, it would be through that of a formal worship"; but I think that formality and spirituality are inverse ratio. It seems that spirituality might express itself in stately and fixed forms, and it may in a measure. It would seem that stately forms and fixed ritual ought to contribute to spirituality. But, somehow, it is still true that where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty. A young lady recently attended a Church service and then said as she left the building, "I will have to attend another service elsewhere to obtain forgiveness, for my anger is stirred within me because I have come to the house of the Lord to worship, but I could not because of the formality."

When we carry out all the order of worship, and with considerable to the rise; when we pray over the puny pennies in the collection; when the choir agonizes over some semi-sacred anthems, we are bordering on dangerous grounds.

The third hindrance, and probably the greatest one to evangelism, is that of the lack of passion for souls. I can think of nothing more horrible to the life of a professing child of God, that he or she is satisfied to remain in the kingdom, if it were possible without bringing in some soul or souls to that kingdom. He has taught us in His word that every branch that beareth not fruit He taketh it away, but that branch that beareth fruit He purgeth it, that it may bring forth more fruit. But, oh! the millions who remain in the membership of the Church and never bring any one in or have any desire, evidently, to do so. Will you hear Him saying, "Go and bring them," "for whosoever cometh to me, I will in no wise cast out, for it is the will of the Father that not a single soul shall perish, but come into everlasting life."

ELON COLLEGE

of the

CONGREGATIONAL CHRISTIAN CHURCHES OF THE SOUTHEAST

ELON was founded to train Christian leaders for the New South.

ELON has done its task well—one graduate in seven being in the Christian ministry. The other six express Christian leadership in the various professions and vocations. Experience teaches that spiritual leadership must be indigenous.

The South is now a New South ready for an inclusive Church, the type of Church for which Elon has stood for forty years and for which she is prepared to produce capable leadership.

With no Church in the community, save the College Auditorium, ELON has practiced Christian Union for faculty, students, and community for four decades.

Its contribution to Christian Education is nationally known and approved.

Its Christian Education Building, providing laboratory facilities for religious leadership training, is unique and is the first college building of its type in the world.

ELON confines itself to undergraduate liberal arts work with that religious emphasis which befits the Christian College.

In ELON the Congregational-Christian Church has an asset of marvelous hopefulness.

The South needs her Yale, her Oberlin, her Carleton, her Pomona for the intellectual leadership of the United Church. Many regard ELON as strategically located and spiritually endowed to become such a center of illumination and leadership training.

.. THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY ..

By DR. W. C. WICKER.

BISHOP FREEMAN SUCCEEDS DR. PIERCE.—

Rev. James E. Freeman, bishop of the Episcopal Diocese of Washington, has been selected as a suitable nominee for the position of chairman of the general committee on army and navy chaplains, to succeed Dr. Jason Noble Pierce, of the Congregational-Christian Church, who has moved to Nashville, Tenn., to take charge of the Congregational Church there made vacant by the resignation of Dr. Barton.

LEAGUE OF NATIONS.—

The annual convention of the League of Nations' Association will be held at the LaSalle Hotel, Chicago, on January 22-24, and many notable speakers will appear on the program. President Nicholas Murry Butler, Silas Strawn, Dean Shailer Mathews, George W. Wickersham, Miss Jane Addams will be among the distinguished speakers on the program to contribute their influence to the promotion of international conciliation and world brotherhood.

DR. COE AT CHICAGO.—

Dr. George Albert Coe, professor of religious education (retired), Teachers College, Columbia University, and author of a number of books on religious education, has been secured as visiting professor for the spring quarter at the divinity school of the University of Chicago. He is one of the outstanding authorities on religious education in the world and represents the leading university in America on teacher training for secular education at Teachers College.

NOTABLE APPOINTMENTS.—

Prof. James H. Breasted has been made immortal by the announcement of his election as a foreign member of the French academy to succeed Sir Edmund Maunde Thompson, for many years director of the British Museum. Dr. Breasted is director of the Oriental Museum of the University of Chicago, which has nine important expeditions at present in the field of archeological research.

Dr. Charles Eldredge McAllister, rector of St. Michael and All Angels Episcopal Church, Baltimore, Md., has been called to the rectorship of St. Luke's Episcopal Church, Evanston, Ill., as successor to Bishop George Craig Stewart.

UNEMPLOYMENT.—

In New York City, the Churches are co-operating with the Prosser Committee to relieve the distress of the unemployed. This committee has just completed a campaign of relief for the unemployed by raising $8,000,000. Through this committee many of the Churches are giving employment to out-of-work men and women who have families dependent upon them. The Christian religion has been a promoter of charity for the unfortunate throughout the history of the Church. It is the spirit of Christ to help the unfortunate.

WESLEY SHRINE.—

The British Wesleyan authorities have formed an organization for the beautification and proper upkeep of the City Road Chapel which John Wesley, founder of Methodism, built in the heart of London. The organization begins its work with a capital fund of 15,000 pounds and will add to that until sufficient endowment has been accumulated to insure the future of this famous property. More than 23,000 pounds has been spent on the improvement of this property since the present pastor, Rev. George McNeal has been stationed at the City Road Chapel. It is an interesting shrine, and the writer was delighted to visit it some years ago when attending the World Sunday School Convention at Zurich, Switzerland.

NEW VERSION OF BIBLE.—

The American Standard Bible Committee is compiling a new version of the scriptures. As chairman of the Old Testament section of the new Bible, Dr. Frederick Carl Eiselen, president of Garrett Biblical Institute, has been selected to direct a major share of the revision. He will be assisted by Prof. C. C. Torrey, of Yale University; President John R. Sampey, of Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, Louisville; Prof. Julius Dewey, of Union Theological Seminary, New York; Prof. J. M. Powis Smith, of the University of Chicago, and Prof. J. A. Montgomery, of Germantown, Pa. Officers of the International Council of Religious Education are contributing to the compilation of the new volume.

PRESIDENT'S STAND APPROVED.—

At the Interdenominational Congress of men, held at Cincinnati last month, Raymond Robins, chief speaker, in his closing address, attributed the wave of crime in this country to World War influence rather than to prohibition. President Hoover's stand on prohibition and world peace was declared to be in full accord with the position of the great congress of men which went on record as follows: "The moral conscience of the people of this land must be once more aroused to the peril both to the temperance cause and to sound constitutional government. The Christian manhood of America, the Christian Churches of this land, must once more rally to the high call of a holy patriotism and declare to all proponents of modification or repeal of the prohibition amendment and laws 'they shall not pass.' The men of this congress, representing a constituency of 20,000,000 members of the Protestant Churches of America, dedicate themselves to this high and holy task."

HEALTH CLINIC.—

At one of the principal Churches in New York City, there is a health clinic that meets every Friday afternoon, with a physician, psychiatrist and six attending clergymen in charge. They are backed by seven leading doctors of the city. These leaders know the profound influence of healthful thinking upon mental and physical conditions. They have united their efforts to bring to bear the influence of both professions on such patients as shall seem likely to be benefitted by such co-operation. Patients that would likely receive most benefit from such treatment are those who are suffering from functional disorders, hysteria, nervousness, border-line mental cases; also those whose habits or abnormal actions may be corrected by religious influence. Patients are received by the clinic only when recommended by their family physicians. There is a real service that such a movement is rendering to many people who believe in the teachings of Christ concerning this work. He commissioned His disciples "to heal the sick."

CHURCHES AND STRIKES.—

There is an increasing conviction that the men and women of our Churches believe that the workers of the community have a right to decent wages and healthful conditions under which to live and work. In New York City, a citizens' emergency committee has been organized on behalf of the striking ladies' tailors and customs dressmakers of the Fifth Avenue shops. Such distinguished men as Rev. W. Russell Bowie, Rev. Harry Emerson Fosdick, Bishop Charles K. Gilbert, Rabbi Sidney E. Goldstein, Rev. John Mellish and many others have been placed on the committee.

Another committee has been organized known as the "Church emergency committee" for the relief of the textile strikers in Danville, Va. Among the members of this committee are Rev. Hubert Herring, Rev. Charles Webber, Miss Winifred Chappel and Rev. Worth M. Tippy. Just a few days ago this committee sent $500 to the Danville strikers and their families, wishing them "a new year in which the Christian principles of freedom and real democracy shall come in industry and the right of workers to bargain collectively through representatives of their own choice." If strikers would cease to interfere with force to prevent others from engaging in positions which they have abandoned, they might talk about democracy in business with better grace.

NOTES-PERSONALS

If this time of financial depression shall bring us to a fuller sense of our dependence upon God and make us willing to deny ourselves actual needs in order that His work may go on, it will be a blessing, and not a burden.

Bro. C. D. Johnston, manager, wants to know of J. O. Atkinson, editor, and his associates, how to so interest our pastors in their Church paper that they will interest their members in the same publication. Well, that is one problem this editor cannot solve. Can any one solve it for Bro. Johnston? We wonder!

Rev. J. H. Warren, pastor, reports eighteen new members received into Ocean View Church during the month of December. The Sunday School now numbers over 100, and the evening Church services had an average of 80 for the month of December. Bro. J. H. Warren, the pastor, feels much encouraged in the work thus far.

Convention Treasurer W. C. Wicker says there was a falling off in receipts from the Conferences last year, and Manager Chas. D. Johnston says there was a considerable decrease in paid-up subscriptions to THE CHRISTIAN SUN. Some people economize, not by denying themselves, but by denying to their Lord that which should be given Him in sacrifice and loving service.

Rev. T. N. Lowe, consecrated and beloved pastor of Elm Avenue Church, Portsmouth, writes, January 9th: "We have received fourteen new members in the last five weeks—two by letter and twelve on profession of faith. The Sunday School has increased 40 per cent. We are looking for this to be the best year in the history of the Church." Elm Avenue needs, and is taking steps to add, Sunday School rooms to its present house. This is another one of our large, live, growing schools.

Rev. T. N. Lowe, Elm Avenue, Portsmouth, in sending in his renewal to THE CHRISTIAN SUN, sends also a new subscriber, with the cash for a year's subscription. One of the mysteries this writer often puzzles over is why some pastors, numbers of them in fact, in our Christian Churches, knowing the benefit THE SUN is in the homes of their members, will go through a whole year and never send in a new subscriber to their own Church paper. If some one will tell how to get our Christian pastors interested enough in their Church paper to look after subscribers in their fields, we will tell and show the world how to finance THE SUN without its being a burden to the Convention.

The sixth anniversary of the organization of United Church, Lynchburg, Va., was observed on Sunday, January 4, 1931. Bro. W. T. Dunn has been superintendent of the school since its organization six years ago and has witnessed a steady growth of the school from its beginning. No school has a more deeply interested, wide-awake and progressive superintendent. The Mission Secretary, who was present at the organization of the Church, January 4, 1925, was present and spoke at the 11 o'clock service January 4, 1931. The occasion was a glad and an appropriate one. Rev. M. F. Allen, Newport News, Va., the first pastor of the United Church, preached to a large congregation at the evening service. Rev. G. C. Crutchfield is the present happy pastor and is doing good work, with a united people, in building up the Church and congregation.

It is always a joy and a privilege to preach to Dr. C. H. Rowland's congregation at First Church, Greensboro. Either his people are accustomed to real preaching and listen with fulfilled expectancy, or they need and expect good preaching when a visiting minister arrives. At any rate, a good congregation, and a most attentive and cordial one, gladdened the heart of THE SUN editor when he faced and addressed them Sunday night, January 4th. On the front page of the "Bulletin" of the day, this striking sentence occupied prominent place: "God, make the door of this house we have raised to Thee wide enough to receive all who need human love, fellowship and the Father's care, and narrow enough to shut out envy, pride and hate. Make its threshold smooth, that it may be no stumbling-block to childhood, weakness or straying feet, but rugged and strong enough to turn back the tempter's power. God, make the door of this house the gateway to Thy eternal kingdom."

In opening his school on its sixth anniversary, Sunday, January 4th, the superintendent, Bro. W. T. Dunn, said: "On January 4, 1925, this school was reorganized and a Church was organized. On that date, I was elected superintendent, and except for a period of three months, during which time Mr. C. B. Caffy acted as superintendent, I have been superintendent of the school. When organized, we had 22 pupils and teachers. We now have 94 pupils and ten teachers and officers, a total of 104 in the school. Twelve members have died during the six years. During this period, our Church has had three pastors, the school three assistant superintendents, four superintendents of junior and primary departments, four secretaries, six treasurers, four pianists, 29 teachers. We have had enrolled 338 different pupils in the six years, and we have raised for all purposes $1,369.40. I have worked about six hours to get these figures, which will possibly be forgotten by all of you in less than ten minutes. However, I think it was worth while to secure them." And so do we.

NEWPORT NEWS, VA.

On the evening of December 30th, Rev. L. E. Smith, D. D., brought to our Church his pictures and address on the "Passion Play." Many have been the expressions of appreciation of this very beautiful service which the pastor has heard from those who were present.

According to an established custom in this Church, the congregation gave the pastor and his family an old-fashioned pounding the week before Christmas. We have never seen so many useful things in one pounding. There were seventy pounds of sugar, twelve sacks of flour, three hams, and coffee, canned goods, etc., in abundance.

Conditions in our city are fairly good, in spite of the general depression so much discussed at this time. Only a few men of our congregation are out of employment. A recent statement issued by the banks of the city shows that their deposits are $800,000 larger than they were at this same period one year ago. But we do not know who the depositors are! I wonder if any of the Churches know them! I doubt that a consolidated statement from the Churches of the city would show a proportionate increase in offerings made unto the Lord.

During the past three months we have received into the membership of our Church ten adults and one child. We face the new year believing that our opportunities for service were never greater, and while many obstacles lie in the path before us, we are trusting in the Lord Jesus Christ for strength, and expecting the greatest year in the history of the Church.

The writer enjoyed a visit with the Church at Lynchburg on January 4th. It was a real joy to meet again with those faithful Christians with whom he was a fellow-laborer in planting the Christian Church in that city. Bro. G. C. Crutchfield, the present pastor, is much loved by his people, and we predict for the Church increasing success under his leadership.

M. F. ALLEN.

REV. G. D. HUNT'S LETTER.

A Happy New Year to all CHRISTIAN SUN readers! New year resolutions are in order now. After a very quiet Christmas, we are trying to adjust ourselves to the new year. Everything is moving along under the severest depression that our country has ever passed through. We do not know just what may be the result. I think it would be well for everybody to reverently bow the knee to God and call upon him while He is near. It would be a mighty fine thing if every one would acknowledge the supremacy of God and "give unto Him the praise due unto His name." It shall be my purpose to live nearer to Him and more humble and devoutly worship Him throughout this new year. I am trying to serve as pastor of the First Christian Church, Roanoke, Ala. We have services here on the first and third Sundays, and have a good Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Society. Bro. Charles Hester is the efficient superintendent of the Sunday School, and Bro. Ted Waldrep is president of the Christian Endeavor.

Our young people are very much interested in the work of the Church. Classes 4 and 5 of the Sunday School gave us a very fine play on the third Sunday night in December. This was a fine Christmas service, and everybody enjoyed it. The title of the play was "One of the Nine." Any Church will do well to have this play. The classes have already carried it to Noon Day Church, and have an engagement for Mt. Zion and Antioch, with dates already arranged. The class has the work almost perfect, and holds the audience spellbound from start to finish. If any Church or community would like to have this play, you should correspond with Bro. J. H. Swint at Roanoke, Ala. Our services here Sunday and Sunday night were indeed fine. We have a very fine choir, and they are giving us some good musical programs.

I am also preaching at Richland, Ga., and at Old Providence Chapel, in the Georgia and Alabama Conference. The work here is going very smoothly and our congregations are increasing.

Providence Chapel is the oldest Church among the Christians in the far South, and has been a great power for good in the community, and yet has in its fellowship some of the most substantial citizens of the surrounding county. Richland Church has a bright future, a loyal membership, a Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Society that are doing good work. It is a real pleasure to preach to and visit the homes of both of these Churches. We are hoping to do some real work for the Master here this year, and we are praying that we may have a gracious revival of religion in all of our Southern Churches this year.

Roanoke, Ala.

G. D. HUNT.

CONGREGATIONAL NEWS

REV. E. C. GILLETTE, Editor; REV. F. P. ENSMINGER, and REV. M. J. SWEET, Associates.

TAMPA, FLA.: First Church, recently received eight new members. Rev. Walter Metcalf is pastor of the Church.

COCONUT GROVE, FLA.: Rev. J. Delman Kuykendall, D. D., recently celebrated the tenth anniversary of his pastorate of this Church. During his ministry, the pulpit has been conspicuous for its strong, intellectual character.

CONGRATULATIONS! According to a recent announcement, Rev. C. Rexford Raymond, of Chattanooga, was the recipient of a legacy of $5,000 from a former parishioner, a member of South Church, Brooklyn, where Dr. Raymond was pastor some years ago. That is surely some testimonial of a parishioner's appreciation of a pastor. May such appreciative parishioners multiply in the earth.

ASHEVILLE'S pastor for seventeen years continues, though eighty-two years old. A vigorous, venerable man of God, his people love him and he is devoted to their welfare. He would love to have an assistant, a young man of brilliant, forward-looking vision, assist him in the work of building this Church. Dr. J. Brainerd Thrall has ministered here for seventeen years with credit and success. The loss of his wife last summer leaves him lonely indeed, but he is comforted by his whole Congregation and his devoted daughter who has come to live with and to help him in this ministry. The failure of the bank here, as elsewhere, has weakened the work considerably, but the strong men of the Church are rising to meet the needs of the hour splendidly. The future is inviting because of its bigness and the significant appeal of this Church to Asheville.

WATCH-NIGHT SERVICES were held in a number of the Churches. At Tryon, Dr. Clark, a striking character in that community, held such a meeting. It was largely attended, and the following is a suggestion of his address: "Selection from Dr. Clark's watch-night address on 'New': From out the world's vocabulary, springs everywhere tonight one word, 'New.' But what does it mean? What is there new? Nothing! Time is the same, as is life, one's home or business or profession. 'New' is really, tonight, but a human-made name for the same old thing. The wise man of the Hebrews said truly centuries ago, 'There is nothing new under the sun.' There is one thing only that can be really new, a new attitude; seeing and approaching the same old things with a changed inner spirit. Then, while still the same, everything is new. When one sees life in a new way it actually does make life new. Nothing is more appropriate tonight as the old year wanes than to realize how, no matter what the calendar and the clocks say, there will be nothing new tomorrow save as one has a new attitude, new approach. This is what the Bible means by 'Behold, I make all things new.' Christ puts a new spirit in one and then all things become new, taking on the hue of that spirit through which one sees them, as when one looks through a colored bit of glass, all things take on the color of the medium through which he sees." Among other things this noble pastor is doing for his community is to administer funds given to serve a hot lunch for school children who come in out of the countryside. In this he is a very active and useful and valuable man.

NEW PROGRAM AT LAGRANGE, GA.

Under the wise leadership of the pastor, Rev. C. C. Hamilton, the Congregational Church there is taking forward strides. But first it should be said that a few of the leading business men outside of the Church, learning that the hard times had made it almost impossible for the Church to keep the salary paid up to date, took the matter up in fine spirit and in about three days secured enough to pay all that was due, and more. This made it a merry Christmas for this progressive pastor. But to crown the new year with increased happiness, the reorganized Church officials, despite the aggressive program planned by Mr. Hamilton for January and February, insisted that he take a six weeks' course of study in Vanderbilt University, to which he had been looking with longing eyes. To do this, some one must be found to preach. Happily enough, Dr. Frank E. Jenkins is spending the winter in LaGrange, and he gladly takes the place of pastor without charge for four Sundays. The fifth Sunday will be provided for later. Then, on February 15th, Mr. Hamilton will take up his great program, looking forward to a large ingathering at Easter.

During Dr. Jenkins' Sundays in the pulpit he will preach a series of sermons on "The Program for Building a New World"—(1) "Getting the Workers"; (2) "Initiating and Organizing the Workers"; (3) "Training the Workers"; (4) "The Workers at Work at LaGrange." The slogan for all this interesting program is given on the Church leaflet as "It is a New Year—Let us make a new start in Church work and Christian success." With a prayer for the truest success, this page commends this venture for the kingdom.

RESOLUTIONS FOR CHURCH MEMBERS.

New year's resolutions for Church members were suggested by Dr. Samuel H. Fritsch in his sermon recently at the Union Congregational Church. His suggestions were:

"I will make my membership mean as much to the spiritual life of the Church as I expect the Church to mean to my own spiritual life.

"I will so live that my membership will give the Church as much standing in the community as that membership gives me standing in the community.

"I will give the Church my moral support as well as get the Church's support to my morals.

"I will take as active an interest in the welfare of the Church as I expect the Church to take in my welfare.

"I will read current religious literature to keep posted on Church affairs as well as expect the Church to keep up with the latest industrial, political and scientific developments.

"I will make my business help the Church the same as I expect the Church to help my business.

"I will pay as well as pray for the prosperity of my Church.

"I will consider myself called to fill the pew the same as I regard my minister called to fill the pulpit.

"I will regard it my duty to call on my pastor the same as I regard it his duty to call on me.

"I will be as punctual and regular at Church services as I am at my daily work.

"I will always take a front seat in the Church the same as I always choose a front seat at a lecture or in the theater.

"I will not try to run the Church and minister any more than I expect them to run me.

"I will not demand perfection in the Church any more than the Church demands perfection in me.

"I will be as charitable toward the failings and weaknesses of the Church as I expect the Church to be charitable toward my own weaknesses and failings.

"I will say good things about the Church while I live as well as expect the Church to say good things about me when I am dead.

"In short, this year I will give my Church a square deal in thought, word and deed."

GEORGE MORGAN WARD.

For thirty years Dr. George Morgan Ward had been the pastor during the tourist season of Poinciana Chapel, at Palm Beach. On Christmas Sunday he preached what was remarked upon as a very beautiful sermon. That afternoon he was taken sick, and on the following Sunday, while the pulpit was being supplied by an old friend, Dr. Ward passed away. It was a beautiful and significant close to a life of large service. The entire community, including the many who came to Palm Beach for the winter season, were deeply grieved by his death. For years he had been preaching to this great congregation and had furthermore been a wonderful pastor, sharing the burdens of many hearts who found in him a counselor and friend. He was well known as a preacher at Poinciana Chapel, but not many knew the great personal and pastoral service he rendered to the stream of people who came to his office daily during the winter season at Palm Beach, many of them people who had no other contacts with the Church or with a minister, who came to unburden their hearts to him because of his human sympathy and his Christian character.

Dr. Ward was born in Lowell, Mass., May 23, 1859. He studied at Harvard, Dartmouth, Boston University, Johns-Hopkins and Andover Theological Seminary. He had studied law before deciding to enter the ministry. In 1885 he was made the first secretary of the International Society of Christian Endeavor, which office he held for four years, helping thus to inaugurate the Christian Endeavor Society as a world movement. Dr. Ward twice served as president of Rollins College, and also, for eight years, was president of Wells College, New York.

Dr. Ward was a close, personal friend of Henry M. Flagler, the builder of the Florida East Coast Railroad, who invited him to be the preacher at Poinciana Chapel, and for thirty years Dr. Ward has continued that service during the winter season. His funeral was held in the chapel, being conducted by Dr. W. E. Biederwolf, whom Dr. Ward summoned to his assistance when he was taken ill. Dr. Biederwolf was assisted by Bishop Thomas, who is serving as pastor of Bethesda-by-the-Sea, at Palm Beach, and by Dr. Edwin C. Gillette, Congregational superintendent for Florida.

Dr. Ward is survived by his wife, who was the daughter of Rev. Franklin M. Sprague, who was for years associated with the Congregational Church at Tampa as pastor and later as devoted member. Dr. and Mrs. Ward have been deeply interested in the Tampa Church and have been generous helpers of the Church and also of the West Tampa Mission. Dr. W. E. Biederwolf has been invited by the trustees of Poinciana Chapel to fill the pulpit made vacant by Dr. Ward's death.

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to commune or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

CHURCH COLLEGES AND PRAYER.

Sunday, January 18th, is to be observed as "Education Day," not only in our Christian Churches, but in Churches of other communions. We could heartily wish that this day be observed in all Churches. No institution of the Church carries quite the responsibility and occupies the extremely strategic position as that of the Church school. January 18th, if observed in the Churches, will give time and opportunity for thanksgiving and praise for what the Church School has done; and intercession in behalf of the teachers and workers in these schools who, because of their intimate contact with our most promising youth, influence them for good or ill at the most crucial period of life. What the Church school is today, the Church of the future will be in large part. The Church college is the supplement of the Church in its training for the future.

Dr. W. W. Staley declares that Christian education means the education of Christians—the proper training of those who, having embraced Christianity, are trying to learn more under the leadership and in the atmosphere of Christian schools, of what life really means and has to offer. According to this philosophy, we do not educate people into being Christians, but educate Christians into being men and women of worth, might and merit in the realm of Christian activity.

That is a poor and needy Church, indeed, that has no Church college. Such a Church is only making a beginning, taking the first step leading up to the fountain without giving the life and strength that comes from the sources of living waters. Our pulpits on the Sabbath seek to give us a revelation, a promise and a prospect from God. Our Church colleges undertake to translate that revelation into realization, that promise into actual practice, and that prospect into possession. The Church college is the supplement, as well as the support of sustaining influence of the Church. In the Church college, young men and young women are being trained, influenced, directed now who, a few years from now, will be training, directing, influencing the Churches to which they belong and of which they are a part. It is the glory and the privilege of the Church, therefore, to see to it that it has Church schools and colleges that are Christian through and through and, as such, have the prayers, the devotion and support of the Church.

On January 18th, "Education Day" in the Churches should be widely observed and earnest prayer should be on the heart of every worshiper for those who labor in our Church colleges where, at great sacrifice, men and women are giving themselves on small salaries and through self-denial, that they may help bring about a better day. We agree with the Christian-Evangelist in saying that "Good Church schools—schools organized and controlled by those high doctrines, faith and loyalties, which are fostered by the Church—would cure the ills with which society is so sadly beset today."

Our world is sadly in need of men of Christian faith, fortitude, character, who are dedicated to the high purposes of right living and the pursuits of righteousness. This need, the Christian college supplies. There is something more and better than the accumulation of wealth, and that something is the creation and development of the right kind of character, the right sort of men and women in the world.

"Ill fares the land, to hastening ills a prey,
Where wealth accumulates and men decay."

HELPERS OF GOD.

It is related that a visiting and interested statesman, in a trying hour of the war, said to President Abraham Lincoln, "We shall win out in this war because I know that God is on our side." President Lincoln is reported as replying, "I am not concerned as to whether God is on our side, but I am deeply concerned as to whether we are on God's side."

It was a philosophy like that that enabled the late Henry Clay Trumbull, of Sunday School fame, to say, "It is one thing to ask God to help us in our plans; it is quite another thing to ask God how we can be helpers in His plans." How easy it is, and how smooth for us, to think out our plans, map out our programs, and then begin to beg God to help us out. We always want God's help and certainly like the comfort of thinking that God is helping us. It may be our fervor for a cause which we mistake for "the zeal of God." The difficult thing is to inquire persistently as to what God's plans for us are, and having found out those plans, ask for help to carry out, not our plans, but His plans.

Paul had plans of his own when he was on his way to Damascus, not to build up, but to destroy the incipient Church. God had other plans. But to follow God's plans meant hardship, trial, suffering, self-denial, for Paul. "I will show him how great things he must suffer for my name's sake" (Acts 9:16). The way of our Lord is the way of suffering and self-denial for those who would follow in that way. "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself and take up his cross daily and follow me" (Luke 9:23).

Our plans which call for the help of God on our side frequently leave out sacrifice, self-denial. The plans of God require these. God is the Supreme Builder, the Master Builder, and if we would build with permanence and plan with promise, we must do so only on condition that we are on God's side, and that we are helping Him in His constructive work of kingdom-building.

It is very easy for us to sing in meetings, "What a Friend We Have in Jesus." Yes, we have in Him a real Friend. How much more difficult, and even how much more important, it is to be able to say and to sing, "What a Friend Jesus Has in Me." His great, loving heart longs for friendship, for fellowship and for favors from man just as much as the heart of man longs for friendship, fellowship and favors from Him. God needs and must have friends here on the earth to do His will and His work. And He is depending upon those friends to do His work, or it will not be done.

A PROGRAM OF DESTRUCTION.

The process of tearing down is always easy. A novice or an idiot can tear down a house quickly and easily; it requires an architect and skilled workmen, with patience and persistence, to build a house. So of an institution or an enterprise. Destructive criticism and abuse are both cheap and easy, and sometimes the consequences are most deadly.

Such reflections occur to one as one learns that the American Association for the Advancement of Atheism, chartered by the State of New York in November, 1925, now has ten thousand members. When that is learned, about the only thing left to be said is that getting this number of members, so far as the records show, is the only constructive thing they have ever done. One Charles Smith, working away in a little book-shop at East Fourteenth Street, New York City, is the organizer and promoter. Outside of seeking in every possible way to ear down religion, dethrone the Church, and destroy the idea of God, these ten thousand members have nothing to show for their efforts or their program. Theirs is a program of negation. Their motto is, "We shall not compromise." Poor, deluded souls. The Word of God truly calls them fools. "The fool hath said in his heart, There is no God." Nobody but a fool can make such an assertion. No one but a fool would make such an assertion in the light of what has been done in the name of God, in the love of God, and through the strength of God. The one constructive force in this world is that force that emanates from God. He built and is building the universe, and those who believe in Him and seek to do His will are the ones who are building a moral and spiritual kingdom on this earth.

No, the world has little to fear from its avowed atheists. Their folly is too apparent, and the weakness of their position is too obvious, to require serious concern and consideration. Those who are doing more to hinder the work of God and to retard the progress of God in His work of construction on earth are those who, professing to know Him, yet act as if they did not know Him; who, saying that they believe in the living God, act as if they believe that God is dead and does not care. The heaviest load that Christianity has to carry is not the avowed opponents and outspoken disbelievers in the Christ of God, but those who, professing to follow Him, are supremely indifferent to His command, His leadership, His teaching and His power. So, it may be said that indifferent and inactive Church members retard the progress of the Church and prevent its going forward far more than those outside of the Church who are non-believers and make no profession of faith either in the Christ or in the Church.

METHODISTS' STAND ON SOME PUBLIC QUESTIONS.

Before the Historical Association of the North Carolina Conference at its late session, Hon. Josephus Daniels delivered an address in which he recited much rare and important Methodist history and also gave correct interpretations of Methodist positions, doctrinal and social, in the past and in the present. He also discussed the activity of our Church in public matters, and on this subject said:

"The Western North Carolina Methodist Conference and the Baptist State Convention have recently made deliverances on prohibition, divorce, lynching, racial co-operation and other matters which touch upon the moral and social life of the people. Immediately critics declared that the Churches should ignore these important questions and proclaim that their only business was to save the world by preaching the gospel of Jesus Christ. This calls for consideration of what constitutes the gospel of the Nazarene, and whether the Churches have not better interpreted the gospel than their critics. The teachings of Jesus embrace conversion that lifts men out of sin, but they do not stop there. He drove money-changers out of the temple and denounced usury; He laid down an immutable law on divorce; He warned against trusting in riches; He introduced higher standards of respect for womanhood; He lifted up temperance, warned of sins against the body, inculcated sobriety, enunciated social justice in his Sermon on the Mount, and gave the Golden Rule as the law of the Christian religion.

"The Methodist Church has of late been the target for severe criticism because of its militant hostility to the saloon and the still and its consistent support of prohibition. In seeking to make effective the outlawry of drink and drunkenness, the Methodist Church is consistent with its attitude from its earliest days. Rule 1 of the Methodist Church forbade the society to 'drink, buy or sell spirituous liquor.' Dr. Garber says this was 'the first rule regarding prohibition ever adopted by an ecclesiastical organization.' It was carried out. In 1743, at New Castle, nineteen members were expelled for drunkenness and for the sale of intoxicating liquors. In 1792, Mr. Wesley pointed out that one-half of the grain of England was distilled into alcohol, which he called 'liquid fire.' Wesley and Whitefield and all the early preachers regarded the drink habit as the worst foe of the home and the Church. That has been the attitude of the Church in all the years that have followed, and that is its attitude today and will be its position tomorrow and all the tomorrows. It is proud of what, in conjunction with other Christians and devotees of prohibition, it has helped to accomplish in securing laws to close the saloons of this country. Its ministry have not ceased preaching the gospel of Christ because they cry out against the sale and manufacture of liquor, easy divorce, race prejudice, and like evils and sins. The gospel preacher, who is silent when evil wars against the virtues inculcated in the gospel, is declaring only part of the gospel of Christ. Methodists, from the beginning, have sought to end drink and drunkenness. They will never retreat. Historians have the opportunity of tracing, step by step, all that it has done along this line, and showing that its recent greater activity has been necessitated to meet the organized effort to restore the still and the saloon.

The position of the Methodist Church on prohibition was declared thus in the General Conference at Dallas last May: 'We firmly set our faces against any recession from the constitutional outlawry of the liquor traffic. We highly resolve to enlist our every power to maintain in full force the eighteenth amendment and all laws of State and nation for its observance and enforcement. We pledge our sincere support to all officials of the law, from the lowest to the highest, who are vigilantly using their best endeavors to end violations of this and all laws. We will never surrender the advance made for national sobriety. No retreat shall be sounded.'—Nashville Christian Advocate.

WHAT THE CHURCH OFFERS MEN.

The Church of Jesus Christ offers to men an authentic message concerning God which leads to the secret of all worth-while living. It recognizes the universal human hunger for God, and the possibility of communion with Him. It reveals God as a living, personal force. It offers a partnership with God.

The Church offers acquaintanceship with the great men of the past. In the lives of prophets and heroes and in the life of Jesus Christ, the Church holds up the ideals by which character and achievement may be measured. In the call to help build the kingdom of God on earth, the Church presents the purpose which gives deeper meaning to everything men do. It releases, through human lives, the transforming power of God. It gives men a long view of life.

The Church offers a fellowship with the great host of believers throughout the world. It gives an opportunity to work with other men for the cultivation of the spiritual life and for increasing the stock of goodness in the world. It offers membership in an organization which thinks in terms of world relations. It is the oldest and most honorable institution in existence.

The Church offers a comradeship of worshippers. While it urges private devotion, it brings men together so that they may receive the inspiration which comes from united worship; and to this end it provides a vast storehouse of aids so that men may "practice the presence of God." This comradeship is the greatest brotherhood in existence.

The Church offers to men the most inspiring task in the world. It gives them a view of life which lifts them out of themselves and relates them to vast purposes. It has a world-wide program of social adjustment, sanctioned and empowered by religion. It offers modern men a fighting chance in the great struggle to improve the conditions of life here on earth. It asks men to devote their best talents, their keenest wisdom, and their highest genius in helping to make this world what it ought to be.

The Church offers comradeship with Jesus Christ in all the affairs of life. It gives men a clear understanding of the mind of Christ. It is through Him that we come to know God. The steady discipline of intimate friendship with Jesus Christ results in men becoming like Him.

The Church offers to men a solution of the problem of sin. It gives comfort and strength when trials come and sorrows weigh upon the heart, an enlargement of life's meaning, guidance in life's endeavors, and an assurance of life's outcome. It offers a message of courage and hope, the gift of wisdom in times of perplexity, the assurance of perfect peace, emancipation from ignorance through the truth which makes all men free, and the power of eternal life.—Missionary Review.

ENFORCEMENT IS IMPROVING.

The number of arrests and convictions of incorrigible violators of the eighteenth amendment has recently increased considerably. The reason for this is that the organization of enforcement officers and the methods of work are better. Mr. Woodcock, who is at the head of this work, has the right spirit and is proceeding with great, good sense. He has gone after the "big fellows," and it will not be long until that dries up the whole business.

Bootleggers and smugglers made a special effort to get into the large cities of the East during the holidays. They have had some "bad luck." The British motor ship, "Eleanor Joan," hailing from Nova Scotia, was seized by a coast guard patrol boat off Long Island. She carried 2,800 sacks of liquor, valued at $170,000. Naturally she resisted, paying no heed to the usual blank shot; then the pursuing boat began firing solid shot, and that brought surrender. No one was injured. A few days prior to this, just before Christmas, the sister ship, "Audrey B.," was seized with a like amount of liquor.

The capture of $350,000 worth of this forbidden fire will stagger those lawless rich men who undoubtedly sent it out. A few years ago a Scotch whiskey firm persisted in sending ships laden with spirituous liquors to this country. They were finally broken up. The cost had been $5,000,000 to the Scotch firm, which was pressed to the wall by its failure to land and sell its goods.

The work will go on. There is no sign of abatement. Prohibition grows stronger every year. It is the greatest thing that ever happened to the United States.—Christian Evangelist.

NOTICE.

A copy of the "Christian Church Bulletin," issued by Dr. F. G. Coffin, President, and Dr. W. H. Denison, Secretary, calling attention to the Seattle Council meeting, says: "The dates of the meeting at Seattle, Wash., are June 25th to July 3rd. It will be a great meeting. There we will meet in joint session for the first time since our union was voted. The Constitution for the united body will be adopted. We believe it will be a forerunner of a still greater union. Plan to go at any sacrifice. Round-trip rates will be cheaper than clergy fare." The delegates to this Convention from the Southern Christian Convention, elected at Raleigh at the last session of the Southern Convention, are: Ministers—A. W. Andes, J. O. Atkinson, H. C. Caviness, B. J. Earp, J. W. Fix, P. H. Flexing, H. S. Hardcastle, Stanley C. Harrell, W. C. Hook, J. D. Dollar, I. W. Johnson, J. Lee Johnson, G. O. Lankford, F. C. Lester, J. E. McCauley, J. F. Morgan, N. G. Newman, C. E. Newman, J. W. Patton, O. D. Poythress, C. H. Rowland, C. C. Ryan, W. C. Wicker, R. L. Williamson, G. D. Hunt. Laymen—E. E. Holland, J. E. West, Miss Graham Rowland, Miss Jewel Truitt, J. A. Williams, W. V. Leathers, M. J. W. White, Mrs. M. J. W. White, Mrs. John A. Williams, Mrs. R. T. Bradford, Dr. J. E. Rawles, Mrs. W. V. Leathers, Mrs. M. L. Bryant, J. A. Kimball, K. B. Johnson, Mrs. J. H. Harden, F. F. Myrick, Mrs. C. H. Rowland, Mrs. W. A. Harper, C. D. Johnston, Mrs. S. C. Harrell, T. J. Holland, J. H. Abell, E. L. Moffitt, J. M. Darden. Members ex officio—W. A. Harper, W. W. Staley, L. E. Smith, W. H. Denison, G. O. Lankford, S. L. Beougher. It will be a great Convention and a great trip. Any delegates not planning to go should notify Dr. Smith in order that alternates might be selected.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

THE PREACHER AND HIS PERILS.

No man comes in contact with the public, in all its relations, more than the preacher. His exposures and opportunities are marvelous. He is in the eye and mind of a greater variety of observers than any other man in Christian society. What he represents exposes his conduct to greater criticism than that of any other man. All grades of society in station, education, character and temperament watch him and pass judgment upon his ability, his attitude, his manner, his sermons, his social relations, his sincerity, and his real value as a preacher. The pulpit is a perilous position, and the history of Jesus, as a Preacher, is the greatest example. The Church and the State combined their power to defeat His life and His ministry, and finally nailed him to a Roman cross; but He came out victorious over opposition and the grave.

I will venture to name ten perils to which the preacher is exposed:

1. Uncertain as to his Divine call to the ministry. That is the most important question that can arise in his mind. The twelve were certain. Isaiah was certain: "The Lord hath called me from the womb" (Isa. 49:1). Abraham was certain of his call (Gen. 12:1-3). Moses was certain of his call (Ex. 4). Paul was certain of his call (Acts 9:1-6). It is perilous to enter the ministry as a preacher without assurance of a Divine call.

2. Debt is a peril to his personal condition and his ministerial reputation, and the financial path is a slippery way. It is a most delusive peril, because it is so innocent in its steps; but it will reduce his usefulness as a preacher. "Owe no man anything, but to love one another" (Rom. 13:8). Franklin said, "To spend less than you earn wins the race."

3. Thinking more of the sermon than of the people. "God so loved that He gave" (John 3:16). The doctor first examines the patient and then writes the prescription. The most important thing is to know folks and then prepare the sermon by prayer and study. We live in an intellectual world and the peril is that the sermon will grip the preacher and hold him away from human needs.

4. Doing too much of detail Church work instead of developing the membership for work. It is not only a peril to him, but to them, for him to do what they should do. It is the function of a music teacher to develop a singer, not to sing herself; and the same is true of the preacher.

5. What others think of the sermon, rather than what God thinks of it. The least consideration should be what the congregation thinks of the sermon. If it strives to bring a scriptural and spiritual message, it may do good when the people think it is poor. "In the morning sow thy seed, and in the evening withhold not thy hand; for thou knowest not whether shall prosper either this or that, or whether they both shall be alike good" (Ecc. 11:6). The seed and the soil are the main things for the sower to consider.

6. Planning for larger field and larger salary. That is selfish in its unconscious thought and is a peril, because deceptive in its implications. It should be shunned as a danger to a full life ministry.

7. Neglect of backwoods and backstreet members and poor sinners. It is so easy to look at the most beautiful flowers and the finest fruits; and it is even so in human society, and preachers are simply men. Merchants pay most attention to best customers, and neighbors to best friends. It is a subtle temptation to give most attention to the best members who attend and support the Church.

8. Dissatisfaction with the community and the Church. Any people and any Church are worthy of the love and best service of the preacher. If a world of lost sinners was worthy of God's love and the gift of His Son, the smallest Church and the most backward community is worthy of the preacher's best love and best sermons. The contrary feeling is a peril that is a temptation to many aspiring souls.

9. Overestimate of self and his own ability. The poorer the land, the greater the necessity for a good farmer. There is no place for self-importance in the pulpit. The true preacher always feels his inadequacy when before the altar. Self-importance is repulsive in society, but more so in the preacher. In society they say of such, he or she is "stuck-up"; in the pulpit it is even more to be shunned.

10. Building the congregation around himself rather than around Christ. Christ is first in the gospel, and should be first in the preacher. A man in the Senate represents his State, and not himself. A preacher in the pastorate represents Christ, and not himself. A deep sense of this responsibility should possess his soul in his study, the pulpit, and the homes he visits. It is a temptation to build around himself; but that is a peril, because he will be gone in a few years and the Church may fail. But to build around Christ, there will be no failure when the preacher is gone—Christ is still there. The bigger and better men are, the greater their perils; and the higher position they hold, the greater their perils. Both together in one man increase their perils. The preacher has the hardest position to fill and is subject to the greatest perils.

Published as a Suffolk Letter by vote of the Ministerial Association of Eastern Virginia Conference, Norfolk, Va., December 22nd, before whom it was delivered on that day and prepared at their request.

W. W. STALEY.

ELON LETTER.

In concluding our series of letters respecting truth, it should be said that Jesus was the first religious Teacher who saw the value of truth in effecting human freedom, in enlarging the life of man. He declared that He came into the world, that men might have life and that they might have it more abundantly. He said that the pathway of this abundant life was always the highway which leads to the discovery of truth, for it is truth that makes men free. The Christian religion has never feared the discovery of truth. Some of those who have embraced the Christian religion and who have found its teachings and tenets so comforting and inspiring have at times arrayed themselves against new discoveries of truth, but Christianity itself has always challenged investigation and encouraged discovery and welcomed truth from whatever source it might come, truth that has the characteristics of accuracy, of progressiveness, of universality, of usefulness, and of freedom.

Yet there is another saying of Jesus which must not be omitted in our appraisal of His attitude toward truth. "I am the truth," He said; and in this bold enunciation He has included effectually what is the final and ultimate goal of truth. In this challenging statement He had indicated the abiding and enduring element in truth. In what sense did Jesus mean to say that He is the truth? He meant to say that all the truth which is useful is comprehended in Himself as the revealer and interpreter of God—God in His relations to the universe and to man. Truth, in other words, as Jesus conceives it, is not limited to this life nor to what we conceive as material and physical things. Truth is spiritual and eternal and has to do with relations, with harmonious adjustments between man and his environment which includes all the facts of life and which certainly includes our relationships with God and man as well as with the physical universe.

Keeping these facts in mind, we may begin to understand the sense in which Jesus declared Himself to be the Truth. He was in harmonious relationship and adjustment with the material world, with man and with God. Ultimately only those things will count which promote harmonious adjustment in these three directions. The universe He regards as friendly to the aspirations of man and as an arena in which the spiritual graces of the human heart may hopefully find increasing opportunity for expression. Every thing that exists in the material world He conceived to be the gift of God, and every progressive understanding of the physical universe He likewise conceived to be truth designed for the service of the life of man. Men in their social relationships He conceived under the category of brotherhood and fellowship. Customs, institutions, rites, laws, rules, regulations, and standards of every kind He regarded as efforts to express the truth of the fraternal and brotherly relation of man to man in a Christianized social order, the consummation of which will not arrive until all men everywhere are completely adjusted on the highest spiritual basis with reference to one another, even as Jesus was adjusted to His fellow-men. And finally Jesus conceived of Himself as the truth in the sense that He and His Father being completely adjusted to one another in all their relations, hopes and aspirations, had become one. He prayed that His followers might likewise be one with each other and God, so that ultimately the whole world might be a spiritual solidarity.

Surely the truth as Jesus represented and connoted it makes man free. Such is the testimony of nineteen centuries of Christian experience, nor is there likelihood that any influence will arise to discredit the characteristic of truth to increase the freedom of men, to make them free in Christ Jesus. "I am the Truth." "The Truth will make you free."

CHARACTER IN EDUCATION.

Character in education is a diamond that scratches every other stone; it stands behind and backs up everything—the sermon, the poem, the picture and the play. Character is power; is influence. It makes friends, creates funds, draws patronage and support, and opens a sure and easy way to wealth, honor and happiness. Character is a mark cut upon something, and this indelible mark determines the only true value of all people and all their work.

I know of no great men, except those who have rendered great service to the human race. Men are measured by what they do, not by what they possess. No man deserves to be crowned with honor whose life is a failure, and that life is a failure who lives only to eat and drink. There is in the man who gives his time, his strength, his life, if needs be, for something not himself—something more truly Christian than in all the ascetic fasts, humiliations, and confessions that have ever been made.

It was character, not ability, that elected Washington and Lincoln to the presidency; while Webster bid high for it and failed. These men conquered before they spoke; they exerted an influence out of all proportion to their ability,—people wondered what was the secret of their power.

The greatness of a country does not depend upon the extent of its territory, but on the character of its people. There should be something in a man's life greater than his occupation or his achievements; grander than the acquisition of wealth; higher than genius; more enduring than fame. If there is any one power that will make itself felt, it is character.

Character will live on through the ages. Is Michael Angelo dead? Ask the hundreds of thousands who have gazed with rapt souls upon his immortal works at Rome. In how many thousands of lives has he loved and reigned? Are Washington, Grant, Lee, Jackson and Lincoln dead? Did they ever live more truly than today? What American heart or home does not enshrine their characters?

Picture to yourself, if you can, Egypt without a Moses, Babylon without a Daniel, Athens without a Demosthenes, Phidias, Socrates, or Plato. What was Carthage two hundred years before Christ, without her Hannibal? What was Rome without her Caesar, her Cicero, her Marcus Aurelius? What is Paris without her Napoleon, and Hugo, and Pere Hyacinth? What is England without her Newton, Shakespeare, Milton, Pitt, Burke, Gladstone?

With me, great men rank first, heroes last. He is the greatest to me who emancipates me from the imprisonment of my surroundings and environments, who loosens my tongue, and unlocks the floodgates of my possibilities. He is a lens to my defective vision. I see things in a broader light, my horizon extends, my possibilities expand. My nerves thrill with the consciousness of added force. My whole being vibrates with the magnetic currents from another soul.

This epitaph was found on the tomb of an Egyptian ruler who lived in a pagan age more than forty centuries ago: "Not a child did I injure, not a widow did I oppress, not a herdsman did I ill treat. There were no beggars in my day, no one starved in my time. And when the years of famine came, I plowed all the lands of the province to its northern and southern boundaries, feeding its inhabitants and providing their food. There was no starving person in it, and I made the widow to be as though she possessed a husband." What ruler can say as much in our enlightened age? No man has come to true greatness who has not felt in some degree that his life belonged to his race, and that what God gives him, He gives him for mankind.

A right act strikes a cord that extends through the whole universe, touches all moral intelligence, visits every world, vibrates along the whole bosom of God.

YOUTH MEETINGS AT ELON COLLEGE.

During the Christmas holidays, young people of the Southeast Convention of the Congregational-Christian Churches, representing the Christian Conferences of Eastern Virginia, North Carolina and Virginia, Western North Carolina, and Eastern North Carolina, and the Congregational Association of the Carolinas, met with their counselors at Elon College to plan together a united youth program for the Convention for the year

1931. Herman Truitt, president of the Young People's Department of the Southeast Convention, presided over the meetings. Important items voted on and passed at this Conference were as follows: The name of the young people's organization in the Convention is "The Youth Fellowship of the Congregational-Christian Church"; it was voted to adopt the same theme that the denominational group adopted at Defiance College, which is "Forward Together"; the goals for the Youth Fellowship for the year 1931 adopted are:

1. At least one month's study of world friendship in every young people's group.
2. Five thousand dollars for world friendship.
3. One thousand new subscribers to THE CHRISTIAN SUN.
4. Two hundred new subscribers to the Congregationalist and Herald of Gospel Liberty.
5. Two hundred new subscribers to the Missionary Herald.
6. At least one copy of the Sunday School Herald in every young people's group.
7. At least one copy of the Wellspring in every young people's group.
8. One person from every Church attending a summer school or summer conference, or the Church having a local leadership training school.
9. Every young people's group study "Youth at Worship" (15 cents).
10. A working young people's organization in each Christian Conference or Congregational Association by the time of the next meeting of the Southeast Convention.

The young people of every Church in the Southeast Convention may share in this work. It is a challenge to every group to do some definite work for the kingdom of God. Further suggestions as to how to accomplish the goals you may set for your local Church may be had from the officers of the youth fellowship or the field secretary of the Board of Christian Education, who is assisting the young people in their program of work.

Officers of the youth fellowship are: Herman Truitt, Glen Haven, N. C., president; Lucille Mulholland, Shelby, N. C., vice-president; Dorothy Cook, State College Station, Raleigh, N. C., secretary; Mrs. Rosalie Tyndale, Southern Pines, N. C., assistant secretary; Lizzie Bell Newman, Henderson, N. C., treasurer; Miss Pattie Coghill, 117 West Forsyth Street, Jacksonville, Fla., superintendent of devotional life; Mary Lee Williams, Franklin, Va., superintendent of service; Jewel Truitt, Waverly, Va., superintendent of leadership training; Rev. R. L. House, Box 4367, Duke University, Durham, N. C., superintendent of publications and manager of the publications campaign; Jewel Truitt, editor of the young people's page in THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

A meeting of youth similar to the Elon gathering met at Defiance College during the holidays. This group of Christian and Congregational young people represented the whole denomination. They met in their sixth annual meeting this year. This group discussed a youth program for the whole Congregational-Christian Church. It is the plan of the Southeastern young people to fit their work into the denominational young people's program as outlined at Defiance, but to emphasize their own goals.

Any one desiring a report of the work of these two important youth meetings and the goals set by them for their year's work may have the same by writing Jewel Truitt, Waverly, Va.

POCKET SIZE 3½x4½ inches

The GEM TESTAMENT has been steadily growing in popular favor ever since its first appearance.

In size, 3½x4½ inches, it is not much larger than the Vest Pocket. It is also the only Testament of its size with large bold type and pronounced text.

The edition on India paper is ideal, and we know of no better gift at the price than one in the finer bindings.

Holman Jewel Testament

INDIA PAPER ONLY—Size 2½x4½ inches x ½ inch

The JEWEL is the latest and most attractive Pocket Testament made.

The TYPE is black, bold and larger than that in the famous Vest Pocket edition, and the book itself is smaller.

It is printed exclusively on the famous Holman India paper, noted for its opaque quality and unusual tensile strength.

One advantage of this India paper is that the leaves do not cling together.

The size, 2½x4½ inches, is so small that the book practically fits the palm of the hand.

A PRAYER.

(January.)

O great Jehovah, God of all time and eternity, hear. Thou who changest not, whose covenant with man never can fail, forgive, we pray, the weakness which causes us sometimes to forget our covenant with Thee. As the scroll of time rolls back another year, cover, O God, every blot and blotch, every deed and word of shame or hurt. Behind Jesus' cross of pain and love hide even the trace of soil and stain, and day by day as turns to view the fresh, clean page may it not become sullied by the record of unforgiven committed sin or the sadder doom, "Ye did it not." In our Saviour's name. Amen.

WORLD FIELD AND SPIRITUAL SALVATION.

The Church needs a world field for its spiritual salvation. Some one asked Phillips Brooks what he would first do if he were called to be pastor of a broken-down Church—a Church that had lost its building, was not able to support a pastor, and was torn by internal dissension. He hesitated only a moment, and then replied: "I should get all the people together, preach the greatest sermon I could on world-wide missions, and take the best offering I could get for work in heathen lands."

Many official boards would seriously discuss the sanity of a preacher who would do that sort of thing under those circumstances. Here is a Church which cannot take care of itself, and a man comes along and tells it the first thing needed is to help take care of a work across the sea! From every worldly viewpoint it would be a great blunder, but God does not look at things from a worldly viewpoint. Phillips Brooks never spoke a greater truth. He knew that selfish, discouraged Church, almost ready to give up the fight, had need of one thing above all else. That Church needed the Spirit of Christ, and Phillips Brooks knew that the best way to get that Spirit was by way of the ends of the earth. He knew if he could get those people interested in the man across the sea, they would be interested in the man across the street. If that little Church began to have fellowship with Christ in the salvation of the whole world, it would save itself. Its difficulties and selfishness at home would vanish as it entered into the supreme need of the Church in the homeland; to be possessed with the world-passion of Jesus. That would help it settle Church difficulties of every nature. The Christian Century says: "Viewing the modern missionary enterprise dispassionately, it is probably well within the facts to say that, whatever blessing it may have brought to the objects of its concern, it has brought an even greater blessing to the Church which has launched and maintained it."

The Church needs the world field to redeem it from selfishness. Some years ago I visited a little Church with a meager missionary program. They were just planning the building of a fifty thousand dollar Church home, which for them was a great undertaking. The pastor astonished me by saying, "We must raise the money for the support of a missionary in the foreign field and add that to our missionary budget before we begin our building campaign."

The pastor was new in the field, and that Church had only given a few hundred dollars for missions before. The people were nearly all poor people. I said to the pastor, "This is not what Churches usually do when they begin a building campaign?" He answered, "I would not dare begin this Church enterprise without some great, unselfish ideal to hold before the people. The support of a missionary in the foreign field will save my folks from the selfishness and narrowness that might come from a simply local victory."

I need not tell you that this sort of a spirit helped to build that Church building and dedicate it without debt, and since it has become a great Church with a larger building and program. A Church may be quite selfish in its contribution for the erection of a building for itself, but when it contributes for the salvation of the man across the sea you have tapped its fountains of true benevolence.—"The Preacher and His Missionary Message," by Stephen J. Corey.

SHOCKING THE MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

The scene is laid in one of our best Churches. The Woman's Missionary Society was observing its accustomed week of prayer for foreign missions. Inspiring programs had been presented each day. Interest in foreign missions, born of information, had reached a climax, culminating in the "Christmas Love Offering."

The leader announced a gift of $200 from a timid, shrinking widow, whose income is meager. Instantly every woman in the group felt a distinct shock. How pitifully small was the gift they had planned to make in comparison with that of the widow! Her spirit was contagious. It is needless to say a substantial offering was made by this society.

How could this widow afford to make such a liberal gift to foreign missions just when everybody was absorbed in Christmas shopping, in the midst of the prevailing financial depression, which furnishes so many with a convenient and ever-present alibi?

There is only one simple explanation. She loves her Lord and takes Him seriously when He commands His disciples to "preach the gospel to every creature." Precisely the same spirit actuated this good widow to make her sacrificial gift that moved Mary to break the precious alabaster box and anoint the Saviour's head on the eve of His crucifixion.

This modest widow explained to a friend after her gift had been made known, "I do not give according to my feelings, but according to my means. For if I gave according to the way I feel, I would give everything I have to my Lord, who has done so much for me and who means so much to me."

Would that all our Churches and missionary societies might receive the same sort of a shock that would awaken them and cause them to take seriously the imperial command of our Lord "to make disciples of all the nations." Will you furnish the "shock"?—Biblical Recorder.

FROM THE PHILIPPINES.

Dear Friends:

We were awakened early this morning by the rain beating in on our faces. When we heard doors banging, trees crashing, we realized a baby typhoon was at hand. Well, it isn't much fun living in a house which is open on two sides, with the rain and wind sweeping through as it did this morning. The screens offered little protection. We hurried to the hospital and found a whole row of trees which stand at the front entrance of the hospital blown down and blocking the road, the electric and telephone wires blown over with them; also the wood-shed had its grass roof blown off. The hospital boys were all busy getting the wires untangled and cutting limbs when the huge mango tree in the back yard fell, demolishing the porch roof and gutter. The boys had only one bolo, so Dr. White and I went to town to buy another. On the way we saw many coconut and banana trees broken and blown down and a few bamboo houses blown in. I don't believe a wind of no greater force than this one could have caused any damage at home, but here the houses are not built so strongly and the coconut trees do not have deep roots, and being so very tall and heavy at the top, they are easily blown over. There are thirty to forty leaves on each tree, each leaf weighing between twenty and thirty pounds, besides the clusters of coconuts. Another thing is, the ants and insects often eat out the trunks of the trees, leaving a mere shell for a support.

We took a look at the peaceful Cagayan River, and it was now a rushing torrent, carrying all before it. The long wooden bridge was completely washed away, and also part of the supports of the new cement bridge in the process of construction, causing a 10,000 peso loss. There were nine houses on the other side of the river near the banks which were swept away also.

Before we returned, the rain had ceased, but the river had risen to within a half-block of the hospital, and such a pitiful sight we saw! There were from fifty to sixty people plowing through the water which was now shoulder deep, with their trunks, beds, cooking pots, chickens and all their possessions on top of their heads. We opened up several rooms on the first floor of the hospital and fed and sheltered them. In the back yard they tied a dozen or more horses, pigs and carabaos. It is now about 3 o'clock, and the sun is shining, the water has subsided, and I think most of the refugees have gone back to what remains of their homes.

I will end this letter with the good news that the X-ray has arrived. Dr. White is spending all his spare time putting it together and getting a room suitably fixed for it. This X-ray is going to be a big help and also an added responsibility. This coming year will find us busier than ever, as our resident physician who is most efficient is leaving the first of the year. This will also necessitate a trip to Manila to find some one to take his place.

May health and happiness be yours this new year.

Program of Chapter III—"The People and Their Country."

I. Business session.

II. Study course:

1. Review preface and chapters 1 and 2.

2. Leader's talk: "People of India."

(a) Dravidians and their religion.

(b) Aryans and their religion.

(c) Merging of Dravidians and Aryans into Hinduism.

(d) Moslems.

(e) European traders, and confusion evolved from their presence. (Pages 29-35.)

3. A member: A hurried trip through India; visiting Bombay, India's gateway; Agra, where we see Taj Mahal, the most beautiful building in the world; Delhi, India's capital; through Khyber Pass; colorful Kashmir; the sacred river, Ganges with its myriad worshippers; Calcutta; the snow-capped Himalayan Mountains and Mt. Everest; Burma with its famous Pagoda; the laboring elephants; Ceylon with its Temple of Buddha's Tooth (pages 35-48, plus wall map of India, on sale C. P. A., price 60 cents)—all available pictures. The National Geographic Magazine, October 1929, July 1926, November 1927 contain beautiful pictures of India.

4. Leader: Concluding remarks and preparation for worship. (See below.)

III. Worship service—Theme: "The East a-Callin'" (Kipling):

1. Instrumental prelude: "There is a Fountain Filled with Blood" (Western Melody).

2. Call to worship: "The people that walk in darkness have seen a great light; they that dwell in the land of the shadow of death, upon them hath the light shined" (Isa. 9:2).

3. Hymn: "From Greenland's Icy Mountains."

4. Scripture: Isa. 55:3-7.

5. Prayer: For a real thirst for friendship with India.

6. Offertory—Music: "Follow the Gleam."

7. Hymn: "The Whole Wide World for Jesus."

8. Mizpah benediction.

Leader: How thrilling it must be to take such a tour through the very oldest home of civilization, India! We know how its lure has attracted Mark Twain, Rudyard Kipling and others. Surely if we'd "Eard the East a-callin'", why we wouldn't 'eed nothin' else"! (Leader, make free use of the reading study book, "India on the March," by Alden M. Clark, especially first paragraph.) But if just the natural beauty and picturesque settings lure us, how much more should we be drawn to India when we realize how much her people need our Christ and his beautiful salvation. Surely, India has much to offer us. But we have the most beautiful and priceless gift for India.

MISSION STUDY DAY.

On Tuesday, January 27, 1931, in the Burlington, N. C., Christian Church, there will be an all-day mission study class. The class will be taught by Rev. Stanley C. Harrell, of Durham, N. C., using the mission study book, "India Looks to Her Future," by Oscar McMillan Buck. The price of this book is 60 cents, paper binding, and may be obtained from the Friendship Press, 150 Fifth Avenue, New York.

The Woman's Missionary Society of the Burlington Church cordially invites all members of missionary societies throughout the territory of the North Carolina Woman's Mission Board to be present at 10 o'clock Tuesday morning, January 27th. A pleasant day of good fellowship is assured.

JESUS TEMPTED.

GOLDEN TEXT: "In that He Himself hath suffered being tempted, He is able to succor them that are tempted."—Heb. 2:18.

LESSON: Luke 3:21-4:30.

Jesus Baptized.

"It came to pass in those days that Jesus came from Nazareth of Galilee, and was baptized of John in the Jordan" (Mark 1:9). He was not baptized for the remission of sins, for He knew no sin. He was baptized because it becometh Him to fulfill all righteousness (Matt. 3:15). He was about to begin His public ministry. He wanted to put His stamp of approval on the work of His cousin, John the Baptist, the man who had prepared for His coming. He wanted to give outward and public witness to the fact that He had given Himself completely to His Father's work. He here reveals baptism in its true light—it is an outward symbol of an inner experience.

"And praying, the heaven was opened, and the Holy Spirit descended . . . and a voice came from heaven, which said, Thou art my beloved Son; in Thee I am well pleased." It was, of course, a special manifestation of God's approval upon Jesus and His work, and was unique in that sense. But when men truly and sincerely pray, the heaven is opened unto them, and a voice speaks unto them. And when men do the same thing that Jesus did—when they give themselves whole-heartedly to seek the kingdom of God and to seek it first, they, too, will have that divine approval, God will be well pleased with them.

I have said nothing about the manner of Jesus' baptism, because nothing that I could say would change in the least the opinion of those who read these notes. Furthermore, so far as the deep, underlying, spiritual truth is concerned, it makes no difference. These great truths are unaffected no matter what the manner of baptism.

Jesus Tempted.

"And Jesus being full of the Holy Spirit . . . was tempted of the devil." Fullness of spiritual life brings temptation. Those who try to live the holiest lives feel the more keenly the temptations of the devil. The lower one's ideals, the less will be recognized temptation. Sensitiveness to temptation is a sign of healthy spiritual life and growth in grace.

Jesus was tempted in all points like as we are, but not necessarily all at one time. This is not the only time Jesus was tempted, nor is it necessarily typical of all the temptations with which we have to deal. One thing needs to be emphasized again and again, however, and that is that Jesus was not a detached being, having no contact with our world, and living above the trials and temptations of our life. He was flesh and blood, and He lived His life and achieved His character, and rendered His service in the same kind of world and among the same kind of people and under the same and even worse handicaps and limitations. Wherefore He is able to help us when we are tempted; He knows what it all means, He sympathizes, He is able to help.

1. "He afterward hungered . . . If Thou be the Son of God, command this stone that it be made bread." The devil attacked Him at the weak point. Hunger! Bread! There is a devilish ingenuity in that little word "if" which the devil used. "If Thou be the Son of God"—how he likes to raise doubts in our mind and hearts.

On the surface of it all there seemed to be no harm in the suggestion. Why should not this man who felt that He was the Son of God make use of His divine power to minister to his immediate and pressing needs? But Jesus saw through the thing. It was the age-old question of the selfish use of power. He refused then, and He persistently refused throughout His ministry to use His power for His own selfish ends. He, therefore, flatly told the devil—He used Scripture, it is to be noted; the word of God is quick and powerful, a defense and shield in time of temptation—"man cannot live by bread alone." How poor indeed is that life which attempts to live without that Bread which came down from heaven!

2. "If Thou, therefore, wilt worship me, all shall be Thine." "All"—the kingdoms of the world—why that was the thing that, above all else, Jesus coveted, to make the kingdoms of this world the kingdom of our Lord and of His Christ! What a splendid opportunity to get the very thing accomplished for which He had been sent by the Father! And yet He turned it down quickly and flatly. "Get thee behind me, Satan"—it would appear that He dared not dally with that subtle temptation—"Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and Him only shalt thou serve." It was the age-old temptation to take a "short-cut." It was essentially a temptation to get a good thing by the wrong method. It was the ever-present temptation to strike a bargain with the devil at the expense of our loyalty to God. That is no mere historical fact; that is an ever-present temptation. We are to have no other gods. We are to worship God, and Him only shall we serve.

3. "And he brought Him to Jerusalem, the center of the political, cultural and religious life of the Jews, and set Him on a pinnacle of the temple, the very heart of the religious life of the nation, and said, If Thou be the Son of God—there is that subtle insinuation again, that suggestion of doubt—cast Thyself down from hence." Why not? Did not the very Scriptures which this man was using—the devil, by the way, knows how to twist and misuse Scripture—promise protection and insure safety? Why not do something spectacular, something that would make him a headliner, and from the beginning of His ministry He would have the leaders and the people with Him and for Him—thus runs the devil's argument. But Jesus said, "No." When men in the fulfillment of God's purpose are placed in hazardous positions, they may count on God's protection—up to a certain degree. But God would have Jesus know, and the devil knew, and all of us know, that we must not presume upon Him. Above all else we are not to go out of our way to put him to unreasonable tests. Throughout His ministry, Jesus refused to resort to the spectacular for the sake of attracting attention. And throughout His ministry He exercised due caution and common-sense in refusing to presume upon God's providence. He never courted danger. But when in the doing of His Father's will, danger eventually and inevitably came, he was fortified from within by the consciousness that, after men had done their worst, God would still take care of Him.

"The devil . . . departed from Him for a season." He did not leave Jesus once and for all. Again and again he tempted Him. He does not leave us for long, either. He who sets himself to walk in the ways of righteousness must always watch and pray, and must always have on the whole armor of God, that he may be able to withstand both the stealthy approach and the open attack of the devil. But let all such remember that there hath no temptation taken us but such as is common to man; but God is faithful, who will not suffer us to be tempted above that which we are able to bear, but with the temptation will provide a way of escape.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

RELIGIOUS BOOKS

Reviewed by

W. A. HARPER, BOOK EDITOR.

(Any book reviewed in this Department may be had of The Christian Sun at the publisher's price.)

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION OF ADULTS. By W. Edward Raffety. Revell; $1.50; pp. 214.

The educability of adults holds the focal point of interest in education today, whether it be general or religious education. Dr. Raffety is right in deprecating the former idea that the Church school is intended for childhood and youthhood. That we should, as he suggests, educate adults religiously for the sake of children and youth is, however, doubtful. Of course, adults who are educated in religion will be better parents, but they deserve religious education in their own right. Sooner or later, and the sooner the better, we must come to the position that the Church school experience is worth while in itself and not for some ulterior motive. Church schools should exist not to indoctrinate or prejudice or propagandize persons, but to enable them to interpret their ongoing experiences in religious terms. A book on adult religious education developing this viewpoint is yet to be written. Winchester's points in this direction.

Dr. Raffety's book has two fundamental weaknesses—an antiquated and discarded concept as to what education is, and a similar mistaken concept as to the place of the Church in religious education. He assumes that religious education is Bible study primarily, and when it deals with religion it is a discussion about the subject. The curriculum, as he conceives it, is material-centered. A specific course of study should be pursued. The hit-and-miss type of curriculum is to be especially avoided in favor of the Uniform Lessons. The hit-and-miss method, however, in the natural sciences has wrought marvels in our mastery of the physical universe. It will do the same in the universe of spiritual verities. But the author's idea that education is information, something to be put over on the person who is the subject or object of the process, is entirely mistaken. Religious education today is conceived as an adventurous discovery of the meaning and values of experience, personal and racial, and the organization of those meanings and values into programs of personal and social living, so that personality shall fruit in Christian character and progressive permeation of the social order with the spirit of the kingdom of God. The curriculum, therefore, is the on-going experience of the person or group, viewed in terms of its own and the race's past, and motivated in terms of the unexplored possibilities of the future.

Dr. Raffety's second misconception has to do with the primary function of the Church and as to the nature of the Church itself. The best view of the Church is that it is a school of Christian living. Its function is best conceived as so to teach the principles of the Christian way of life that Christian character individually, and the kingdom of God socially, shall progressively emerge. The Church is not one institution and the Church school another, as Dr. Raffety seems to think. Integration in the Church school, so far as adults are concerned, means far more than the recognition by the particular adult group that it is a part of the school. It means that here is an institution, the Church, using various integral agencies, such as the Church school, the preaching service, the Church supper, etc., to give a unified experience of God in the whole life of the individual and the group.

The intellectual level of the book is that of the senior high or college freshman. Dr. Raffety's experience with the International Council has left its mark in the employment of certain smart expressions so characteristic of the informality of public speech. Conventionitis, Mussolini used as a verb, take the slow out of slogan are a few of the gems. These hardly have place in a scientific treatise.

The book would be greatly helped by citations to the literature bearing on each chapter, or at least by a general bibliography in an appendix.

LIFE IN COLLEGE. By Christian Gauss, Dean of the College, Princeton University. Charles Scribner's Sons; $2.50; pp. 272.

Every parent who has a boy or girl in high school and is contemplating a college education for him or her should read Dean Gauss' "Life in College."

The type of college your son or daughter should attend is given very little consideration. However, whether he should go to college or obtain a position immediately upon graduation from high school is given full discussion as well as the equipment he should have on entering college. Many heartaches and a liberal purse may be saved by a thorough and serious consideration of the topics set forth in this volume.

It is also recommended to the general reader as information from the pen of a man who has had a wide experience in advising youth. By the perusal of this record of experience, advice, discussion, and philosophy, the reader or the parent may be able to more fully understand what may be expected of a young man in college.

A STUDY OF THE PLACEMENT IN THE CURRICULUM OF SELECTED TEACHINGS OF THE OLD TESTAMENT PROPHETS. By R. T. Cass. University of Iowa Press; pp. 54.

This doctor's thesis reveals nothing new. It takes the reader by a circuitous route to conclusions already well established. If the curriculum is a matter of information, it is important to know when best it may be comprehended, as respects any one of its component parts. If it is an interpretation of experience, again it is well to know when the past experience, in this case the prophetic utterance, is comprehensible and usable in interpretation. The average reader will gain little from this pamphlet.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE
One of our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy.

"If thou wilt make the Almighty thy treasure . . . then shalt thou delight thyself in the Almighty . . . and thou shalt make thy prayer unto Him and He will hear thee."—Job 22: 25-27.

MONDAY.

PRINCES AND PRINCESSES OF GOD.

"The kingdom is like unto a merchantman seeking goodly pearls."—Matt. 13:45.

We are sons of the King. We belong to His kingdom. The text today gives us a sweeping view of the kingly life in Jesus Christ—"joint heirs with Him to the Father." A Merchantman looks for best pearls; a prince looks for the best things; a child of God covets the best gifts.

We are tempted to fritter life away in small, meaningless things and miss the pearls. Judas had as big a chance as any, but he used his opportunity in quest for gold, and all he got out of life was thirty pieces of silver. All his life amounted to was a flash and gone. Day by day, let us make our quest for the best gifts and store up riches in eternity.

Prayer.—Our Father, make us keen to discern the rich, kingly gifts of life, and make us faithful in that which is best. In Christ's name we ask it. Amen.

TUESDAY.

DUTY OR PLEASURE.

"Children, have you here any meat?"—Luke 24:41.

What have we that counts in human values? Paul said of Demas: "He hath forsaken me, having loved this present world." Demas had wide opportunities. He had the opportunity of fellowship with Paul, but he chose the garish day. He had the opportunity of service for and fellowship with Christ, but he chose sensation. He had the opportunity of being a leader in Christian worship, but he chose pleasure, and all he got out of life was an epitaph, "Demas hath forsaken me." The world offered him a joyous career, and he took it, and all he got out of it was moral defeat.

This world has a thousand trifles in which life is fried away, and the good things vanish as a vapor. In the end, we will be asked, "What have you? Have you any meat?" Many may have to reply, like the disciples, "No, Master, we have toiled all the night and caught nothing."

Prayer.—Dear Heavenly Father, teach us the use of life, how to seek for its true values; how to earn the gold of character and blessing for mankind. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

DEMANDS OF THE SPIRIT OF CHRIST.

"Thy righteousness is an everlasting righteousness, and Thy law is truth."—Psa. 119:142.

"Put on the new man, which after God hath been created in righteousness and holiness of truth."—Eph. 4:23-24.

All Christians are not only compelled to confess and acknowledge Him, but to voice their protest against evil and sin. They are called upon to go further still—to point out to others precisely what the Spirit of Christ is and demands of us all, and to try to embody that Spirit themselves.

For the attainment of this we must be controlled not by our personal good, but by the spirit of the mutual good of the community and all with whom we come in contact.

The kingdom of God in relation to our homes, our families; our communities, must be established, and we who are God's only forces for the community or for the world, must unite in the noble adventure of faith and a fixed and steady purpose.

Prayer.—Our Father, bless us with pure motives, high and noble purposes, and fix our whole lives on Thee. Amen.

THURSDAY.

A SECRET OF HAPPINESS.

"Give and it shall be given unto you, good measure, pressed down, shaken together, running over shall they give unto your bosom."—Luke 6:38.

Do you wish to be happy? Give and not get. A child thinks of its parents first in terms of "give me"—what he gets from them. It is always "give me." Later on in life he thinks of them in terms of what they are, and then he says, "Make me." One cannot throw perfume on others without getting it on himself. The prodigal son, when he left home, said, "Give me." When he returned, he said, "Father, make me." Many of us are children when we think of God, and plead with Him to give us. Can't we advance to the stage of, "Lord, make me today what Thou wouldst have me. Make me as one of Thy hired servants." Let us stick to the Father and go into His vineyard and work.

He who startles men with something new is sure to have a following. He who follows another from love of truth will be enriched in mind and heart. Those who follow the Lord Jesus from pure motive have a growing desire for the truth, and become enriched in mind and heart, for the disciple of Jesus learns the art of praying, and he who truly prays unlocks the treasure-house of goodness and becomes like Him to whom he prays. It is natural and easy for the one to pray who is in right relation with God. All in such relation should study carefully what Jesus taught about prayer. The prayer-life is the satisfactory life. By prayer we have constant and conscious communion with God.

Prayer.—The Lord's prayer in unison.

FRIDAY.

A MOTHER'S INFLUENCE.

"The unfeigned faith . . . which dwelt first in the grandmother Lois, and thy mother Eunice."—2 Tim. 1:3-5.

Timothy had a splendid heritage of righteousness. It came down to him in an unbroken line of succession from his mother and grandmother. Something of moral and spiritual fiber had entered into him from them.

It is a singular and significant fact that mothers have more to do with molding the spiritual lives of their children than fathers. Dr. George A. Gordon, in his autobiography, says: "A patient, brooding, sympathetic, prophetic mother—what an immense influence! I have never known a man or woman of exceptional consequence to be given to the world by a frivolous, flashy, good-for-nothing mother. I have known many a son and daughter of consequence, with a poor stick for a father; but I have never in my life known an exceptional son or daughter as the issue of an unserious, superficial, worldly mother."

Prayer.—Closing prayer by one of the parents, asking that the godly fathers and mothers of our land may realize the importance of their influence upon the young, and strive to make it such as God will approve.

SATURDAY.

THE VICTORY OF FAITH.

"And this is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith."—1 John 5:1-5.

Victory is a word of pleasant sound. No one courts defeat, but, on the other hand, almost every effort of our lives is with an eye to winning out. Life, then, is a conflict, and for the Christian it is particularly true. We have the trinity of evil opposed to us, and it requires every bit of grit and grace we can command to make good in this work of our Master. But we can win out, for the promise is to that end, and as it is a spiritual struggle, we must fight with spiritual weapons. How pointed the expression of the text: "This is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith."

No matter what may come or go, whether the fight seems to be great or small, we must not lose sight of this—faith in God is the first requisite. We must stand where Abraham stood and believe that the impossible can come to pass if God says so. And we must have faith in His word. The tendency today is not so much to minimize the promises of the Book as to quietly ignore them.

And we need faith in ourselves. Not a feeling of self-sufficiency, or an unwarrantable assurance, but a quiet, firm faith that makes us feel confident of the outcome. What God has done by and through others, He can and will do through us. "And this is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith."

Prayer.—Closing prayer, asking that our faith in God and in His Word, and our loyal love for His Son, our Saviour, may transform our own lives and win others to the kingdom.

SUNDAY

THE FUTURE LIFE.

"What shall I do to inherit eternal life?"—Luke 18:18.

Nothing we love more than life. From the eager delight of the smallest child to the oldest of saints, life is the supreme quest. This thing we love so has in it also our greatest perils. Too often we become intoxicated with its tempting cups and rush madly into excesses or dangers. So brief is it that we quaff its cups of pleasure for a season, intending to change some time and spend it for good and God; but before we are aware of it, before we have scarcely begun to rejoice in its inspiring morn, noon has come and numerous signs warn us of impending night.

But we believe that the soul is imperishable and that the pleasures and treasures of this life are but passing and should not take first place in our lives. The future is far happier and is crowned with immortality. Should it not be valued as our supreme aim, and should we leave any effort unspent to secure the blessed prize?

Prayer.—Our Father, we desire to make every exertion for the acquisition of virtue during this life, that we may obtain the most glorious prize and the greatest hope. Forbid indifference. Send us forth to Him the crown of eternal life. Amen.

To waken that music, to win that approval, to please God—surely that is the highest and holiest object for a human life.—Selected.

THE CALL FOR HIGHER PATRIOTISM.

(A Study of the Book of Jonah.)

BY MRS. JOSEPH FIX.

This twentieth century is often designated as the "golden age" of idealism and revelation. Some particular groups make known that they believe that our age has a standard of world progress which no other age ever reached, regardless of its height of glory, power and majesty. And certainly there has been a wonderful revelation to our age of scientific and materialistic attainments. We, the constituents of our modern Church, pride ourselves on the idealism and revelation of the problems of the kingdom of God on earth. In making a survey of the lesson on higher patriotism, taken from a study of the Book of Jonah, I have almost lost my mental equilibrium in pausing long enough to wonder just how far we have gone in reaching that certain idealism and making use of those divine revelations from God. With all these centuries of divine revelation, we are something of spiritual paupers still, because we have not gotten the real, meaningful interpretation.

Those of us who have been privileged to hear the leaders of Church affairs in recent conventions and conferences recall that the marks of our age are idealisms toward world peace, the unity of the followers of Jesus, and the evangelization of the world in this generation. Some 700 years before Christ, we have the record of God revealing to man His ideal of the brotherhood of man in the great family of God. This revelation was made to Jonah, who lived from 832 to 792 B. C., who was born at Gath-hepher, a village three miles northeast of Nazareth, in Galilee. He lived during the reign of Jereboam II, in whose time the prophet Amos accomplished his mighty works. The little book of Jonah is composed of forty-eight verses, divided into four chapters. It touches the high-water mark of Old Testament theology; it also touches the high idealism of New Testament Christianity. From its message we see that Jehovah, Israel's God, is the God of the heathen also. This God was concerned about the Assyrians, a people who made up a nation which was recognized as the most cruel and rapacious power in the world. From its story we find God calling a great pagan city to repentance and accepting its sign of contrition. "Here God appears as the God of all flesh, calling all peoples to repentance, willing to have mercy upon all. And the heart of the ideal of God is expressed by showing that higher patriotism is not that patriotism which loves and serves one's own country and people alone, but that patriotism which is higher and which finds the love of its country best exemplified, national prosperity best promoted, and national honor best served by brotherly regard for other lands and practical heed for their best interests. From this lesson we should learn anew the perils of exaggerated nationalism and the need for that highest patriotism which has room for all nations.

For a presentation of the book as a whole, I shall divide it as follows:

1. The call of a man (chs. 1 & 2).
2. The cowardice of a man (chs. 3, 3-17).
3. The conquest of a man (chs. 2 & 3).
4. The chagrin of a man (ch. 4).

The Call of a Man.

1. In verses 1 and 2 we read: "The word of the Lord came unto Jonah, the son of Ammittai, saying, Arise, go to Ninevah, that great city, and cry against it for their wickedness has come before me." God, throughout all ages, has depended upon men to do His work. I believe it is an unchallengeable statement that the happiest people in the world are those whom God has called, not necessarily in some miraculous way, but through that simple, still, small voice; they whom God bids do His work, and who do it to the best of their ability. We are always happy when we live the way God directs us to live. Even when hardship comes, we are happy under the burden, because we have a faint recognition of why it is thus. And when we are happy in our way of working and living according to God's plan, there is no room for fear.

The Cowardice of a Man.

2. The coward is generally the man who has committed wrong. The honest, straightforward, square-living man does not live with fear. We read in verse 3 that Jonah rose up to flee unto Tarshish from the presence of the Lord. Jonah sought to flee the presence of God. As Adam and Eve, in the Garden of Eden, after they had sinned, they tried to hide from God. God asked why did you go away, and they answered and said, "We were afraid and hid ourselves." So Jonah tried to hide from God. Many of us who sin try to lose ourselves and ease the hurt of conscience by getting busy with something else, instead of asking for forgiveness. We, like Jonah, often take ship and set out to sea, and the first thing we know the storm is so great that we are lost from the sunlight of God's own face (Psa. 139).

The Conquest of a Man.

3. In chapter 2 we have the beginning of a conquest. This chapter begins, "Then Jonah prayed to the Lord his God," etc. Then after prayer came work. The voice of God came a second time, "Arise and go to Ninevah." It would probably have been easier for Jonah if God had asked him on his second commission to have gone to some other big city. But God said, "Arise and go to Ninevah." God does not want us to be doing the easiest things. God is speaking to each one of us to arise and go to our Ninevah. You know what it is. God speaks directly to men. Have you failed to heed God's commission? Is God having to speak time and time again to you, saying, "Arise and go . . .?"

After prayer and after work came the victory. The people of Ninevah were not deaf to words of God, and they repented of their sins and asked God's mercy in not destroying them and their possessions.

The Chagrin of a Man.

4. In the closing chapter of the book, Jonah is pictured as being angry with God. He has a double cause: first, wounded pride—his words are proven false; and second, indignation because the God of Israel should pity heathens and show mercy upon them—heathens, whom Jonah appreciated and estimated to be worth nothing save fuel for fire. This is a portrayal of the jealousy and narrowness of man contrasted with the compassion and bigness of God. Jonah is angry. He goes outside the city and sits alone to sulk. He is like some children, and some adults who say, "If you do not play the way I say, I won't play at all." The parable of the gourd. Jonah's feeling of pity for the gourd is just enough. A withered truth is always a sad sight. Yet on this gourd, child of night, he had spent neither labor nor strength. How much more should God, of whose goodness man's highest virtue is but the faintest shadow, pity and spare the helpless and ignorant works of his own hands, who filled the streets of Ninevah with pathetic appeals for forgiveness.

The divine question, "Shall not I have pity?" remains unanswered. Its echoes are heard in every crowded haunt of men. Above the stir and din and wickedness, the infinite compassion is brooding. And as we behold the unfinished task of making God's kingdom come on earth, may we not ask ourselves the question concerning the people of all lands, "Shall not I have pity?"

From this story of the importance of the people of Ninevah, we find God trying to teach us that He had chosen Israel, not to be a group of bigots and exclusives, but to be an instrument in His hand through which His love and goodness could be expressed to all peoples. The Book of Jonah stands as a rebuke to those who have a little God, to those who are exclusive, to those who are non-missionary in spirit and in giving.

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

This is the last report for the year 1930, though it comes in the month of January, 1931. We always hold our books open the first week in January to get in all the delayed offerings taken in December and make our final financial report for the year. We regret very much that we did not reach our goal in our support account, but when the Churches do not make their offerings large enough we just cannot climb up to the goal. Our offerings during the month of December were very satisfactory, but the offerings during the year up to December were so far below normal that we could not overcome the deficit up to that time.

We are thankful that the Lord has been as good to us as He has and permitted us to help one hundred and twenty children during the year. We want to thank every one who has contributed during the year to help us in this work of love and charity. We trust that God's richest blessings may rest upon you and that you will help us more during the year 1931.

Following is a list of articles sent in since our last report: W. B. Williams, Newport News, Va., 1 box clothing; Philathea Class, Winchester, Va., 1 box useful articles; Woman's Missionary Society, Lowell Christian Church, Roanoke, Ala., 1 quilt; Monticello Sunday School, Brown Summit, N. WHAT IS RELIGION?

Much of the time we human beings think of religion as the performing of certain acts. Saying our prayers, for instance, is not religion, though the religious man will pray; going to Church is not religion, though the man who is religious will want to go; giving of our means is not religion, although the man who is religious will give, that the message may be heard around the world. The religion of Jesus is not like a suit of clothes that we don in the morning and remove at night. It is life. It is a part of us. We think it. We treasure it. We live it.

The great examples in the earthly ministry of our Lord all tend to emphasize this fact. The thing that awakened His sympathy and love for the "man who fell among robbers" was the fact that he was a man, and, regardless of ceremony, he broke through that "form of godliness" to help the man. The priest and the Levite might be sticklers for ecclesiastical regularity—Jesus was a stickler for life! Ceremony and doctrines, rightly understood, are only helps to the man.

The story goes that one time Lord Tennyson was walking in his garden with a friend. This friend was anxious to know what the poet thought of Jesus. Turning to him, he said, "Will you please tell me what you think of Jesus Christ?" Mr. Tennyson dropped his head in meditation as they approached a rosebush on which there was blooming a beautiful red rose. Then spoke the greatest poet of the Victorian age: "Do you see that rose? What the sun is to that rose, Jesus Christ is to my life. You know, and I know, that the rose could not have beauty or fragrance or even life itself without the sun, neither can we without the Son of Righteousness." "I came that they may have life, and may have it abundantly." —Ritchie Ware, in World Call.

ELON COLLEGE

of the

CONGREGATIONAL CHRISTIAN CHURCHES OF THE SOUTHEAST

ELON was founded to train Christian leaders for the New South.

ELON has done its task well—one graduate in seven being in the Christian ministry. The other six express Christian leadership in the various professions and vocations. Experience teaches that spiritual leadership must be indigenous.

The South is now a New South ready for an inclusive Church, the type of Church for which Elon has stood for forty years and for which she is prepared to produce capable leadership.

With no Church in the community, save the College Auditorium, ELON has practiced Christian Union for faculty, students, and community for four decades.

Its contribution to Christian Education is nationally known and approved.

Its Christian Education Building, providing laboratory facilities for religious leadership training, is unique and is the first college building of its type in the world.

ELON confines itself to undergraduate liberal arts work with that religious emphasis which befits the Christian College.

In ELON the Congregational-Christian Church has an asset of marvelous hopefulness.

The South needs her Yale, her Oberlin, her Carleton, her Pomona for the intellectual leadership of the United Church. Many regard ELON as strategically located and spiritually endowed to become such a center of illumination and leadership training.

OBITUARIES.

MADREN.

Cecil M. Madren, son of Mr. MacD. Madren and Mrs. Lillian Madren, was born April 5, 1914, and died as a result of an accident from falling under a freight train November 23, 1930. Cecil only lived for a few minutes after the accident.

Bro. Madren lost a brother and a niece October 21, 1924, by a similar accident in Lynchburg, Va., and so soon was called upon to give his own boy. The friends were many and the floral offerings were beautiful.

Cecil was a member of Memorial Methodist Church, South. Funeral services were in charge of the writer, assisted by Revs. A. L. Franklin, his pastor; W. A. MacLean, pastor of College Hill Baptist Church; John L. Satterfield, fairview Heights Disciples Church, and S. H. Perkins, of Englewood Baptist Church. Interment in Spring Hill Cemetery. May God bless the bereaved.

G. C. CRUTCHFIELD.

BUTLER.

Mrs. Cora Victoria Butler, wife of D. R. Butler, Franklin, Va., was born June 27, 1877, and died December 10, 1930, aged 53 years, 5 months, 13 days. Mrs. Butler had been confined to her bed since about the middle of May. She suffered much, but was patient and hopeful unto the end. She united with the South Quay Baptist Church at the age of 11 years; in 1910 she transferred her membership to Holy Neck Christian Church when the family moved into that vicinity. In 1920 the family moved to Franklin, Va., and in 1923 they became members of Franklin Christian Church.

Mrs. Butler was a good woman, a splendid neighbor, and possessed a fine Christian character. Funeral services were conducted at the home in Franklin by the writer, assisted by Rev. J. W. Fix and Dr. N. G. Newman. Those who mourn their loss are a husband, D. R. Butler; four children—Cora Lee, R. T. and D. R., Jr., of Franklin, and J. K., of Farmville, Va.; one brother, P. O. Duck, of South Quay, Va., and two half-brothers, G. F. Duck, of South Quay, and J. T. Duck, Jr., of Franklin, Va. May God bless and comfort the bereaved ones.

Mrs N T Farmer

.. THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY ..

By DR. W. C. WICKER.

SIR WILFRED GRENFELL HONORED.—

Dr. Greenfell has been presented with the Livingston gold medal by the Edinburgh center of the Royal Scottish Geographical Society, in recognition of his outstanding service in which the principles of geography have been applied to the benefit of the human race. Such a recognition is worthily bestowed, will be worn with pleasure to the recipient, and honor to the society which recognized the value of such service as Dr. Grenfell has rendered humanity.

DEFER CONSIDERATION OF WORLD COURT—

By the close vote of ten to nine, the Senate Foreign Relations Committee decided to postpone consideration of the World Court protocols until the first Wednesday of the regular session of Congress in December, 1931. Senate leaders believed this would serve to avoid complications that might have made necessary a special session of Congress in the spring, though in Washington it was regarded as still a possibility that President Hoover might call a special session of the Senate to consider the World Court issue immediately after the March 4th adjournment.

BIG BEQUESTS.—

Many educational institutions receive big bequests from people of wealth, and no greater humanitarian service could be rendered by people of wealth. Recently a gift of $150,000 was made by Mrs. Frances T. A. Junkin for the construction of a new dormitory for the new Western Theological Seminary plants in Evanston. This is the largest single gift ever made to this institution during its history. People who cannot make large gifts for such purposes while they live would do well to remember some such worthy cause with a liberal bequest to live after them in the hearts of coming generations.

PASTORS' CONFERENCE.—

Minnesota has a State Pastors' Conference, held at Minneapolis. This is the first State ministers' conference ever held in Minnesota. It is promoted by a volunteer committee representing thirteen denominations and five interdenominational agencies, including the Minnesota Council of Religious Education and the State Federation of Churches. It would be stimulating and instructive for such conferences to be held in other States. It broadens our vision, strengthens our appreciation, deepens our knowledge, and widens our horizon to enter group thinking on the great themes of religion with people of different faiths.

COLLEGE BIBLE TRAINING CRITICISED.—

"In a paper read before the National Association of Biblical Instructors at Union Seminary two weeks ago, Dr. George Dahl, professor of Old Testament literature at Yale, severely criticised the quality of biblical training afforded prospective theological students in colleges, maintaining that such instruction was usually 'sketchy, inexact and confused.' Dr. Dahl said that almost any course, even 'home economics' or 'cattle-raising,' was more to be advised than 'some of the stuff now branded as biblical literature. He stressed the need for courses in which the student was made acquainted with the Bible itself through the reading of original documents.' The time has passed when superficial study of any subject, but more especially the Bible, will meet the needs of the student for the ministry.

WESLEYAN MILLION.—

Wesleyan University, Illinois, has just concluded a campaign for funds which resulted in raising more than $800,000 by pledges and cash to meet the conditions of raising the $750,000 to make the subscriptions binding.

Our college has set its goal at a million dollars for the liquidation of present indebtedness and endowment. It would be a great achievement for the college and the Christian Church if we could reach this goal within the next five years. If we could secure the combined financial strength of our people up to their ability with Christian sacrifice without unnecessary burden, we could reach the goal. In Christ, God gave the best He had, gave Himself with His gift, and revealed Himself in His gift. As He revealed Himself in Christ and as we follow Him in Christ, we should make our gifts mean the same in spirit.

CHURCHLESS MINISTERS.—

It is reported by good authority that many ministers in America are Churchless because, in some communities under congregational government, there are so many country Churches are passing out of existence or uniting with other Churches, and the tendency of larger Churches to go pastorless, together with an insistent demand for well-trained, active men in the prime of usefulness. In some parts of the country where the full quota of men entering the ministry is steadily maintained, the Churches with ample opportunity for choice are selecting the best-equipped pastors, often to the embarrassment of good but less well-prepared men. Young men preparing for the ministry today should look well to their preparation for long, efficient service; as time passes, leaders in every kind of work must be better prepared to meet the demands of the age.

HENRY VAN DYKE.—

Dr. Henry van Dyke addressed the theological students of Princeton Seminary on the growing movement for the use of established forms of worship, so that the laity can participate in the service, and for dignity in the conduct of the worship of God. He discussed also companionate marriage, the abolition of war, original sin, modern literature and other subjects. On companionate marriage, he said: "Marriage is a holy rite; this companionate business is licensed concupiscence." He told the students that the heart of Christianity is personal loyalty to Jesus Christ as Son of man and Eternal Son of God. When man realizes that He is the Son of God, who is good enough and great enough to sustain a fatherly attitude toward him at all times, he will take a filial attitude of love and loyalty which will cause sin to appear exceedingly sinful and lead to the highest good.

DR. CADMAN CELEBRATES.—

Dr. S. Parkes Cadman recently visited Pittsburgh to celebrate the first ten years' service of KDKA. Dr. E. J. van Etten, rector of Calvary Episcopal Church, was the first pastor to broadcast a sermon from a Church and is leader in the anniversary movement. Many of the veterans of the radio-service who first broadcasted their sermons will be on the platform at the celebration. Radio preaching has done much to break down narrow denominationalism; it has brought stirring messages to the shut-ins; it has carried comfort to sick soldiers, to the patients of hospitals it has brought cheer; it has awakened religious interest in the devotional hour; it has helped to magnify the Church in the minds of the people; it has compelled the minister to toil mightily on his sermon to make it better. Dr. Cadman's voice has been heard in many a program, answering religious questions which were instructive, edifying and inspirational, and he may well participate in the tenth anniversary of this station.

ABBE DIMNET.—

Cannon Dimnet, author of "The Art of Thinking" and dean of Cathedral of Cambrai, in a recent lecture in New York City, commented on the award of the Nobel prize for literature to Sinclair Lewis. Canon Dimnet said, "He gets the prize as a first-rate satirist. There is no other such satirist in America or in the world, and this is why he gets the prize. But the effect of its award to Lewis will be bad abroad. They will read 'Babbitt' and will think Babbitt is a portrait of a typical American, which he is not."

Billy Sunday says: "If I were God, I would have come down and cuffed that man Lewis; he'd never have gone to Stockholm to collect that Nobel award."

Dr. Joseph Fort Newton, criticising the award to Lewis, says: "Lewis would give the impression in his 'Elmer Gantry' that Americans are engaged in wild religious debauch." None of these criticisms are over-drawn, nor unjust to the writer of Babbitt, for which the prize was awarded.

NOTES-PERSONALS

"For as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God" (Rom. 8:14).

Preachers do not need to preach hard times. Their people already know and feel the pressure. Why not preach something the people do not know and have not felt about Him who said, "Take my yoke upon you and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart, and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For my yoke is easy and my burden is light" (Matt. 11:29, 30).

Rev. G. D. Hunt, Roanoke, Ala., writes: "While we are in the midst of the most depressed condition that has come to our section of the country, I feel like the solution of our problems lies within the Church. If people will go to Church and support the Church with their prayers and presence and give to its needs as the Lord has prospered them, we would soon reach normal conditions."

Our heartiest congratulations to Superintendent C. D. Johnston, of the Christian Orphanage. Despite the cry and fact of hard times and depression, the Orphanage, under the sane leadership of its superintendent, had its best year, both in securing funds—a total of $45,118.36 ($15,000 of which, however, came from the Duke estate and $2,000 from insurance on the barn that was burned)—and also in the number of children cared for, reaching during the year 120, the average cared for being about 112. This is a source of gratitude, not only to Superintendent Johnston, who has wrought so faithfully, but to all who take a pride and delight in sweet charity and good benevolence. Heartiest felicitations to the manager of our Christian Orphanage!

"A brother from Charlottesville writes the Times-Dispatch, wishing he might be able to see a sane and sensible editorial on prohibition in that paper. Brother, you just as well expect to see a cow sitting on a telephone wire singing like a mocking bird!" The above, from the editorial page of the Richmond Christian Advocate, rather indicates the Advocate indulges little hope in the editorial columns of his neighbor and contemporary, the Times-Dispatch of Richmond, so far as a sane and sensible editorial on prohibition is concerned. One would judge from not a few of our dailies that the cause of prohibition is a lost cause. One wonders how much the liquor advocates and the associations against prohibition are spending to influence and prejudice the editorial writers of the whiskey-soaked dailies.

Dr. W. P. Minton, Dayton, Ohio, now a secretary of the Board of Commissioners for Missions of the Congregational and Christian Churches, is to sail from New York today, January 22nd, for a trip of inspection and visitation in Porto Rico. He goes in company with a group from our Congregational constituency who unitedly hope to complete the merger of the Christian-Congregational and United Brethren missions in Porto Rico. In future this work will come under the head of home missions, since Porto Rico is a part of the United States and for years has been under the supervision of the Home Board of the Congregational and other Churches. We are wishing Dr. Minton and his fellow-travelers a great trip, the sorrow of our heart being that we cannot enjoy the tropical sun and the balmy breezes of sea travel with them. "Bon voyage" and a safe return!

Friday, February 20th, is to be observed throughout the world where Christianity is known and preached as the "World Day of Prayer." On this day, possibly millions will gather in their Churches or in their class-rooms, or in their group meeting places, to spend the day in meditation, in praise and in prayer to God. In city and village and hamlet, as well as in many rural places, Christian people will come together to pray for world brotherhood, for the world-wide reach and spread of the gospel. Every year this movement grows in numbers and momentum. Often the women take the lead, and, through their missionary societies, send out the call to the whole Church to come together and observe the day of prayer. Sometimes by the pastor, sometimes by the Sunday School superintendent; but in any and every Church where there is some one who cares, the people may be brought together to spend the day in prayer for world-wide friendship and salvation. It is not too early for missionary groups, pastors and others to be planning to observe February 20th as the "World Day of Prayer," when people in Christian centers around the world will be gathered in a similar sacred service.

The members of the Woman's Missionary Society of the Burlington Christian Church are holding open house at the Church, beginning at 10 A. M., January 27th, for any and all women of the missionary societies in the North Carolina Conference who can come and be with them for the day. A good and a great day is planned by the women, that they may give themselves for the day to prayer for missions, for world-wide friendship, and to the study of the mission study book, "India Looks to Her Future." The book will be taught by Rev. Stanley C. Harrell, of Durham. Those who come are expected to bring sandwiches for their lunch, and the Burlington women will furnish coffee to complete the lunch. A good social hour is anticipated, and it is planned to have the program of the day closed by 4 P. M. Mrs. C. H. Rowland, president of the North Carolina Woman's Board; Mrs. W. H. Carroll and Mrs. W. R. Sellars, committee on the part of the women at Burlington, are exceedingly anxious for a large delegation, representing the various societies in the Conference, to be present and enjoy the day together. All who can avail themselves of the privilege should be present and enjoy the day, which promises so much in information and inspiration.

Dr. Charles E. Jefferson, noted New York divine and pastor for thirty-two years in Broadway Tabernacle, New York, who the past week has been preaching and lecturing to the people of Greensboro and surrounding territory, was a very welcome and a very agreeable visitor with Dr. and Mrs. C. H. Rowland, at Elon College and its various offices and apartments last Thursday. Dr. Jefferson, on leaving, said he was now better acquainted with the plant and buildings of Elon College than he was with any in this State, which says much, since he has been periodically, for the last twenty years, a welcome visitor, especially at commencement season, to institutions in the State. Dr. Jefferson is not only an outstanding minister of the Congregational Church, but of the United States, and is very favorably known abroad, where he has often preached and lectured. The beauty of his life and of his preaching is that he exalts Christ above all other persons, powers and principalities as the one who alone is able to redeem and save this sin-cursed world. The complacency and joy of his personality radiate from the man and from what he says, and make one feel better for being in his presence. Over 150 ministers of Greensboro and surrounding towns heard him one day at a luncheon served by the Kiwanis Club of Greensboro, and we all came away saying, "What a man, and what a message of might and majesty, of sweetness and of persuasive power!" all because we felt that here, indeed, was a man of God whose life was wrapped up in that of the Man of Galilee.

THE BLESSEDNESS OF GIVING.

A few days after I entered my first pastorate, an old Scotch farmer was introduced to me as one of the deacons of my Church. Being interested to know the kind of Church officials I was to have, I inquired about this man. I was told that he had lived alone since the death of his wife two years before, that he paid one-fifth of the current expenses and missionary gifts of the local Church, and that he had contributed generously to many religious and charitable enterprises outside his community.

After I met this good man, a laborer in a neighboring village, whose family depended on his wages for a livelihood, suffered a long illness. But the grocer and the landlord continued to be paid, and before long it leaked out that the old Scotch deacon was responsible for this. At another time a poor man's house, with its contents, was destroyed by fire, and the old Scotchman furnished beds and clothing for the stricken family. In this way he filled his days with generous deeds.

Yet some said that he was close-fisted. I did not understand this until, one day, he invited me to his unpretentious little house for dinner. To my great surprise, there was scarcely enough food to satisfy my hunger. But there was no apology—except that when he could sell eggs for more than two cents each, he did not eat them, because it was not profitable. After the meal, we sat on the veranda and chatted; and I learned that it had been the habit of his life to spend very little on himself. With singular impressiveness he talked about the virtues of simplicity and self-denial. Then, suddenly sitting erect, he said, with a noble pride, "Because I have not spent much on myself, I have been able to give a big share to God and humanity." Then he sat gazing quietly out into the dusk, with the light of peace and joy on his face. And I recalled the words of the Master: "Whosoever shall lose his life for my sake shall find it."—E. B. Williams, in the Christian Index.

POUNDED.

On December 23, 1930, my good friends of Hank's Chapel thought of their former pastor when a number of the good brethren and sisters brought, and those that couldn't bring sent, him a nice lot of good things for the pantry, such as meat, meal, sugar, coffee, canned goods, dried fruit, dried beans, sweet potatoes, and many other good things for him and his family to enjoy on the Christmas holidays. It was presented to us by Bros. Herbert Ferrell and Bennett Sanders. We certainly enjoyed the spirit of the givers as well as the pounding.

They are fine people. I haven't been pastor of this Church for several years, but keep in touch with them and know they are doing a good work there. In the last few years they have built a new Church and have paid for it, and also have met Conference requirements.

May God's blessings continue to abide with them. Many thanks to you all. Pray for me.

Your brother in Christ,

J. S. CARDEN.

CONGREGATIONAL NEWS

REV. E. C. GILLETTE, Editor; REV. F. P. ENSMINGER, and REV. M. J. SWEET, Associates.

WINTER PARK, FLA.: Dr. C. A. Vincent, pastor, had as his guest preacher on January 11th, Dr. Frederick Lynch, of New York, the well-known editor, educator and world peace leader.

A SUNDAY SCHOOL RECORD: The Sunday School at Miami Beach, Fla., gave away in benevolences over $500 during the year 1930. This result was due largely to education and training in giving.

REV. W. T. SCOTT, pastor at Salisbury United, left his home last week for Evanston, Ill., where he is called to attend the midwinter meeting of the Extension Boards. On January 25th he will preach in his old pulpit in Dayton, Ohio.

THORSBY INSTITUTE, Thorsby, Ala., held its quarterly trustees' meeting on January 8th. It has eighty students this year, does thorough work, and keeps its bills paid. Miss Helen Jenkins is principal, and Rev. E. W. Butler, former superintendent, registrar, and treasurer of the Alabama Conference is treasurer.

WEST TAMPA, FLA.: Rev. Carl H. Corwin, pastor of the Latin Church, as usual was the first to send in a check on the 1931 apportionment. This Church always pays its apportionment 100 per cent. The pastor reports 2,175 calls made in 1930. Any pastor who can beat that record please send his name to the editor.

DR. CHAS. JEFFERSON at Greensboro, N. C. Under the combined invitation of the Church of the Covenant, Presbyterian, and First Methodist Church, Greensboro, Dr. C. E. Jefferson, noted Congregational minister of the famous Broadway Tabernacle Church, New York City, gave fourteen addresses to crowded houses during the week of January 11-18.

NEW SMYRNA: This Church, under the leadership of the pastor, Rev. Watson L. Lewis, held an interesting "all together" supper on the evening of January 6th. It was a well-organized affair and all who attended made their pledges for Church support for the coming year. This was followed up by a canvass of those who were not present. The State superintendent was present and enjoyed the affair.

ANNUAL MEETING at Salisbury a great success. Reports from the various departments indicated progress and a fine spirit. A new constitution was presented, and under it new officers were elected. The treasurer's report was one of the best, and it showed that the finances of the Church are kept in bank-like style. The Sunday School should be reported as making new efforts to interest and to serve young people.

MEXICO: Dr. E. A. King is giving a series of illustrated lectures on Mexico at the Community Church, Miami Beach, every Sunday evening. The Church is full for each lecture, and in fact the Church has been filled for the morning service during recent Sundays. Dr. King attended the seminar in Mexico, led by Dr. Hubert Herring, and brings to this course not only a wealth of first-hand information, but a beautiful collection of pictures which he gathered.

CHATTANOOGA, TENN.: The Pilgrim Church Herald for the Sundays before Christmas and after carried original poems by the pastor, Rev. C. Rexford Raymond. The one for December 26th was a New Year hymn, the opening line of which was "Christmas sheds its glory of a New Year's day," and was designed to be sung to the tune, "St. Alban." The pastor's sermon for January 4th on the subject "Good in All Things" was printed in the Chattanooga Times the following day.

DR. GARDNER S. BUTLER.

Only a day and a half after a slight stroke of apoplexy, Rev. Gardner Smith Butler died in Demorest, Ga., on December 28th. At the time of his death, he was the revered and beloved pastor-emeritus of the Union Congregational Church of Demorest. In former years he had been pastor of this Church at two different times. He had a fruitful pastorate for nearly ten years in the Circular Church of Charleston, S. C.

DR. GARDNER S. BUTLER.

Dr. Butler was born near the Canadian line of northern Vermont in 1849. In 1877 he was ordained to the Christian ministry and served a number of Churches in New England. The one he referred to mostly was at Three Rivers, Mass. By people inside the Church and outside he has often been called Demorest's first citizen—a high tribute. Long and efficiently has he served the Church, Piedmont College and the community. At one time he was mayor of Demorest and was on the public school board. For some twenty years he has been one of the most active trustees of Piedmont College, and to the students and faculty he has been a source of strength at all times. In order to release the present pastor to motor a load of Piedmont players to Rollins College, Dr. Butler preached on December 7th what proved to be his "swan song." Those present testify that he never preached more vigorously and on a favorite theme of history, "The Values of the Bible." On December 21st he worshiped with the congregation, and the largest offering given in response to an appeal to complete for 1930 the Church's budget for missions, was, as usual, by Dr. Butler.

Funeral services were conducted by Rev. H. B. Mowbray, and people from all walks of life came to show their respect. His nephew, Prof. C. L. Percy, took the body to Somersworth, Mass., for burial with the body of his wife, who died twelve years ago. On January 6th the college Y. M. C. A. had a service of appreciation of his sterling worth.

NEW CHURCH BURNED.

On December 21st, the Congregational Church at Phoenix City, Ala., was burned. During the service of that day the Church had been crowded by the audience which came to witness the Christmas exercises. After the program, the people were scarcely settled in their homes when their new Church was discovered to be in flames and was partly destroyed. At the service that evening an empty barrel had been placed in the vestibule and was well filled with packages of fruit and candy for the community Christmas tree. One of the pastor's first thoughts was for the barrel with the gifts for the children, and was rejoiced to find it saved.

This beautiful brick-veneer Church was dedicated on June 8, 1930. The pastor, Rev. C. W. Smith, who was a building contractor before he became a minister, has built five Churches in Alabama and West Florida, and this is the first one to be injured by fire. Our Phoenix City people acted in accordance with the name of the city when the officers of the Church unanimously voted to rebuild at once, and now the hard-working pastor has another chance to use his talent for building, and we expect to see the Church rebuilt in due time.

INTERESTING LECTURES.

Dr. H. Samuel Fritsch, pastor of the Union Congregational Church, Jacksonville, Fla., is giving, through January and February, an interesting course of lectures on "The Culture of Personality." The course is attracting large audiences. The subjects are as follows: "The Culture of Will Power," "The Culture of Memory," "The Culture of the Feelings," "Culture of Common Sense," "Culture of a Sense of Humor," "Culture of the Imagination," "Culture of Beauty."

Dr. Fritsch has not only marked ability for the choice of subjects, but has remarkable ability for giving in his publicity an interesting summary of the particular subject. For instance, under the caption of "The Culture of Will Power," we read: "The wonders of the human will. How to generate will power. Don't be a dumbbell; be a dynamo. Don't be a mule; the will is located in the head, not in the heels. Be the man in command and in demand. Learn the secret of a powerful personality. It's not 'purseonality' but personality that counts."

OFFICIAL NOTICE.

This is to advise that the board of directors of the Conference of Congregational Churches of the Carolinas will hold a meeting at the Charlotte Hotel, Charlotte, N. C., January 27th, at 10:30 A. M. Matters to be discussed are time, place and program of the next meeting of the Conference; overtures to the Christian Churches looking toward uniting local Conferences or Associations and related subjects; methods by which to secure full payment of Church apportionments to missions by December 1, 1931; report of the registrar on the Orangeburg matter, and Cooper's Chapel and the Country Life Academy. The members of this board of directors are: Moderator Rev. John Brittan Clark, D. D., Tryon, N. C.; Mrs. George N. Edwards, Charleston, S. C.; Miss Ida S. Robinson, Southern Pines, N. C.; Mrs. F. W. Crandall, Tryon, and the registrar, Rev. Milo J. Sweet, Salisbury, N. C.

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to commune or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

CHRISTIANS AND DISCIPLES OF CHRIST.

These two communions are, by many, taken to be one. This is because, in many sections, the Disciples call themselves, and are called, Christians. There is a difference, a wide difference in practice, between the Disciples of Christ and Christians. There was never "a split," resulting in the two bodies. They were never one. In 1831, Rev. Barton W. Stone led a movement, with some fifty Churches following, in Kentucky, Tennessee and Ohio to unite with Rev. Alexander Campbell, who was then founding what has turned out to be the Church of the Disciples of Christ. Because Stone and the Churches he led had adopted the name "Christian" from being affiliated with the original Christian Church, the name persisted, and does persist, and no one has the authority or desire to prevent the use of this appropriate name by all followers of the Christ.

The outstanding practice that emphasizes the difference between the Christian Church and the Disciples of Christ Church is that of baptism and the communion. The Christian Church has always held that the mode of baptism has ever served as a bone of contention and a mark of division between the real followers of the Christ. Therefore, the mode of baptism should be left to the individual, and Christian character should be made a test of fellowship, rather than any method or ordinance that divides and separates the people of God. The Disciples, on the other hand, insist on "the meaning of baptism that it is for the remission of sins," and that John, who preached such a baptism in the wilderness is a sufficient authority and one whose example in this respect can be relied upon and should be followed. Christians practice baptism as a rite and ordinance through which the believer declares to the world that he has accepted Jesus Christ and, in Him, hath put on the new man, his sins having been pardoned and forgiven through belief in the Lord Jesus Christ as Saviour and Redeemer. Another and even greater distinction between Christians and Disciples is the belief and practice concerning the Lord's Supper. An authority for the Disciples declares, "We invest the Lord's Supper not with the awfulness of a sacrament, but regard it as a memorial feast and keep it on every Lord's Day, recognizing neither open nor close Communion." On the other hand, the Christian Church has ever recognized the Lord's Supper as a sacrament through which the believer seeks, through confession and penitence, to commune with his brethren in the Lord and with his Lord as the Head, and the only Head of the Church.

These are the chief distinctions in practice of the two Churches. The legal name of the Disciples of Christ is the "Church of Christ"; that of the Christians, the "Christian Church."

That which has barred the doors to Christians in seeking union with the Disciples is principally that of the mode of baptism and the practice of Communion service. These differences seem to be fundamental, and thus far have not been overcome.

Many members of the Christian Church believe only in baptism by immersion, but they do not believe, so far as we know, that they have a right to make others believe in that mode of baptism, or rule them out of their fellowship if they do not so believe. Christians, on the whole, believe that baptism with one mode or another should not be made a test of fellowship, which test separates Christians rather than unites them. There are many members in the Christian Church who believe that baptism by pouring or sprinkling is a sufficient mode, but they are not ready to compel others to adopt that mode in order to claim fellowship in Christ with them. The Disciples have maintained, on the whole, that every believer must come by way of immersion, or he will not be admitted to membership and fellowship in their communion. The Disciples also believe that the Lord's Supper must be regarded not as a thing sacred and a real sacrament symbolizing communion with one another in Christ Jesus, but a memorial to Christ through which His resurrection is declared every Sunday.

Other than these practices, the Disciples and Christians are, for the most part, in accord, and but for these practices there is no reason why they should not be one. The method of government is the same, both being congregational. Their polity is largely the same—that of exalting Christ and the Scriptures and inviting all followers of Christ and believers in the Lord to unite in one common brotherhood. As tolerance becomes more prevalent, and as distinctions and differences are one by one put in the background, and essentials only are sought and emphasized, there is reason to believe that the Disciples of Christ will be one with their kindred in government and in polity, viz: Christians and Congregationalists, or rather Congregational-Christian. STAYING ON BROADWAY.

Broadway, New York, is typical of other broadways, thousands, tens of thousands of them, in this and other lands, for up along Broadway the throngs and the masses of humanity come and go, push and pull, hurry and worry. Let one stand on Broadway, in New York, for half-hour, and if he could penetrate the hearts and the minds of the passers-by, understand the movements and the motives of the pressing throngs, he would in that time see all the world go by. Along Broadway the cares and the cures, the burdens and the blessings, the agonies and the angels of humanity pass and re-pass. On Broadway, the world is alive, on the alert, going somewhere; some are running, some are walking, some are hurrying, others are scurrying; some are rich, some are poor, some are up, some are down—they all go along Broadway. Besides the high current of this passing population stands Tabernacle Congregational Church, and for thirty-two years one man occupied the pulpit of that Church and gathered into its membership an enormous catalogue, and faced all kinds and conditions of people. Dr. Charles E. Jefferson, noted Congregational divine and one of the world's eminent preachers, is the man, and he told 150 of us preachers the other day how he did it. It was all so simple, so plain, and yet so wise and wonderful. Here is something of how it was:

First: At all times and under all circumstances he upheld and presented to his great congregation the Larger Christ.

You know there is a lesser Christ and a larger Christ. The lesser Christ is the one who, though a great man, is just a man; though a great teacher, is just a teacher; though a wonderful hero, is just a human hero. Unitarians, for instance, preach of a Christ like that—an outstanding and a good man, but just a man.

The larger Christ is altogether different. He is unique. He stands alone. There never was one like Him before. There will never be another like Him. He is the Son of the living God. He is the incarnation of the meaning and might and majesty of God. Man! Yes, but far more than any man before or since, because He is the one begotten of the Father, the one who came amongst us and without sin Himself suffered, bled, died on the cross, that He might conquer sin and, through His resurrection, prove to the world that in Him was life, and the light that should lighten the world. This is the larger Christ that Dr. Jefferson said he preached to the throngs who came in to hear him off Broadway.

Second: He preached the larger and the better Bible. There is a lesser Bible. It is in this sense a mighty good Book, inspired like Shakespeare is inspired, filled with wisdom and good learning like Socrates and the Greek philosophers, a book among other books, even better than any or most of them.

Then there is the larger Bible—that Bible that is not like other books. It is the Book. It stands alone. It is a thing apart. It is separate and distinct. It is unique. No man had ever written a book like this before, and no one ever will write another like it. This is God's Book, and through it God is revealing Himself by word and contacts and lives that march through the Book, as the Father of the human race, as the Creator of all things, as the one supreme Power in this universe. One reason why Dr. Jefferson could stay on Broadway and preach to the passing throngs for thirty-two years was because he held up to his people the one Book whose message has the might and the power to reach and to satisfy hungry souls.

Third: Another reason why Dr. Jefferson remained on Broadway thirty-two years was because he preached the larger and the better Church. There is a lesser Church. This Church is a human sort of thing, in line with fraternity houses, clubs, halls for civic assemblies and political meetings. A mighty good thing, yet just an institution along with other institutions of mankind.

The larger Church is different. It is unique. It is a thing apart. There never was anything like it instituted of man. There never will be. Christ instituted the Church. Paul told, especially and emphatically, what it was—the Body of Christ. Through the Church, Christ carries on His work in the world. It is more than a human institution; it is divine. It is not in competition with clubs, benevolent societies and fraternity halls. Its function is to hold up Jesus Christ to the world, to make known to mankind the saving power of the Christ, and to reveal to those afar off, as well as those nearby, that there is a Christ who can reach, redeem and save, and that there is an institution on this earth that exalts Him and is, in deed and in truth, His Body—the Church.

Dr. Jefferson never resorted to spectacular advertising, sensational sermon topics, unspeakable themes and subjects. Year in and year out, through every service, he sought to bring to his hearers a message of the larger Christ, of a Christ who is the Son of the living God, sufficient to reach and to save all who put their trust and faith in Him.

No wonder Dr. Jefferson remained on Broadway thirty-two years. He fed the hungry multitude on the Bread of Life—the living, loving Christ, revealed in the Book of books and now in the world and at work in the world through the Church.

PLEDGES.

One often hears good people, Church members, say: "No more pledges for me. I will give when I have it. When I don't have it, I will not pledge." Comes along now the Christian Index (Baptist, of Georgia) with this quotation:

"Too bad! The man who never makes a pledge cannot have a telephone in his house, for the telephone company will not put the phone in unless he agrees to pay the bill. The same is true with the electric lights, water, groceries and everything in his home. He cannot be a married man, for he would need to make vows to get married; he cannot own property, for he will need to make a pledge to pay taxes; he cannot be a citizen of the United States, for he will need to pledge his support to the government. Yes, you do believe in making pledges, but when it comes to the Lord's work you are just hard up for excuses and this is the only one you could think of on short notice. Make your pledge to the Church budget and then pay it in full. It will do you good and bring honor to our Lord. 'No pledge, as a rule, means no pay.' Be honest with yourself."

Then having quoted, the Index comments:

"Having read the above quotation, what about making your pledge Sunday. It will cheer the heart of your pastor, and the best and most appreciative preacher needs your pledged financial support. It will strengthen the hands of your brothers who are tugging at the ropes trying to get the vessel off the bar of selfishness. It will reassure the missionaries and the denominational agents of your good will toward the cause of Christ and those exclusively engaged in His work. Make your pledge to the Church just as you make it to your merchant, or your doctor. It will help you and add to the impact of a united effort of our people."

It will not hurt—it might help—some of our Christian people to read and think on this brief sermon to Baptists by the Index.

J. O. A.

Repentance is not merely for the alien sinner. The Lord wants "all men everywhere to repent." Every sin must be repented of, if, indeed, we shall dwell with the immortals in glory. The determination to quit certain sins is not a difficult undertaking, but the keeping of that determination to the end is the great problem.

FALLING FROM GRACE.

We sometimes hear people say, "The saddest thing that we can imagine is that one who has once known and loved Christ should fall from grace and finally wake up in hell." This indeed would be a sad thing, if it was possible. But for a believer to believe that a child of God who has been washed in the precious blood of Christ, who has been made partaker of the new nature, and has received the Holy Spirit, could ever be found in hell would make the finished work of Christ on the cross a failure. In John 10:28, the blessed Lord says, "And I give unto them eternal life and they shall never perish, neither shall any man pluck them out of my hand." Here we have a written guarantee, Christ's own words, that we shall never perish. This is one of the greatest blessings that can come to the believer in this life. The greatest question that can come to a believer after accepting Christ is, "Can I ever lose my salvation?" I thank God that the Scriptures not only teach that the believer is saved, but saved as well from the judgment of the condemnation (John 5:24). In John 14:19, Christ says, "Because I live ye shall live also." If Christ condemns me He first must condemn Himself, because in first John 4:17, Christ says just as He is so are we in this world.

The only time I remember reading in God's Word about falling from grace is found in Gal. 5:4. This Scripture has been used countless times to deny the security of the believer, and that he is no longer a child of God, but is again back under the judgment of condemnation. This Scripture is addressed to justified but immature believers. They were giving up the free grace which had saved them, and were trying to add law as a means of justification, just as a great majority of the Churches are doing today. Therefore, they are slighting the precious work of Christ; they are making it of non-effect.

One of the saddest things in this life is for a believer who has been born again to stand up and deny his birthright account of some failure on his part. It all springs from unbelief, and failure to know God's word. I believe I have a life that is never going to end. I believe I am just as sure of going to heaven as if I was already there. I believe I am just as sure of walking the golden streets as if I had on my heavenly shoes now.

And all this security is nothing I have done or can do, but what He has done for me. I thank God that the believer is eternally saved and cannot be lost. (Rom. 8:38-39.) The believer's life is hid with Christ in God. (Col. 3:3.) The devil himself cannot get the life of any believer. The saved cannot be lost (John 3:16).

CHURCH ANNIVERSARY.

The United Christian Church, Lynchburg, Va., celebrated its sixth birthday anniversary Sunday, January 4, 1931. Six years ago a small band of believers met in an old storehouse on State Highway 170, then in Campbell County, but since has been taken into the city of Lynchburg, and organized what is today United Christian Church. The Church was organized with thirty-seven charter members; today it has a membership of one hundred and fourteen. Rev. M. F. Allen, now of Newport News, Va., was the leader of the band and was responsible for the organization. In those days, I am told, the going was hard, and both pastor and people suffered no little hardships in the attempt, but, thank God, they were made of the material that stuck. Some of that number have fallen; others have drifted, but some of the faithful still linger and are true to Him whom they promised to follow.

The Church here had a peculiar origin, for one man (and I refer to Mr. A. S. Dunn) had been a member of the Christian Church for many years at Liberty, N. C., and was a subscriber to and a faithful reader of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, introducing to the congregation the Christian denomination and thus the Church. There is more to the history of this Church than time or space will permit one to tell, but every move of the Church has been a satisfactory proof that God wanted a Church here in Lynchburg, for in the six years of its history the congregation, though small, has averaged $1,000.00 per year on the Church debt, in addition to the running expenses of the Church.

The Church is beautifully located in one of the new developments of the city; and in the coming years we anticipate great progress for the Church. It has practically no competition with any other Church in the immediate section, although the denomination is new to the city and it is rather hard to explain to the inquiring folks the difference between it and the Disciples of Christ, for they go under the name of the Christian Church. Yet time removes and remedies all things.

The day was an overwhelming success, for at both morning and evening worship there were large and interested congregations to greet both speakers. Our Mission Secretary, Dr. J. O. Atkinson, brought us one of his great messages at the morning worship that moved the hearts of his listeners. Rev. M. F. Allen was present and brought us a fine message at the evening service, which was enjoyed by all. It was a pleasure and a delight to have with us on this day and to stir our hearts these two men. May God bless them.

When one stops and begins to think how it all happened (for we know that the road to success in any endeavor is no easy one), and with the splendid progress it has achieved, one cannot help but think of the words of the poet, "God works in a mysterious way His wonders to perform; He plants His foot upon the sea and rides upon the storm."

Brethren, we need your prayers. Pray for us, that we may be fruitful and always be found in Him, who said, "Greater things than these shall ye do, because I go to the Father."

RICHES OF THE COMMON LIFE.

O God of all the rolling years,
Within whose sheltering love we rest,
Whate'er life brings of smiles and tears,
Help us to welcome as the best.

The old year ends! Forgive, we pray,
Its petty aims, its futile strife;
Lift up our hearts to feel today
The riches of the common life.

We count our blessings o'er again,
The joys of home and friends and love;
Thy comfort in our hours of pain—
The daily task, the bliss above.

The new year dawns! May radiant light
Illumine all the path ahead.
Make strong our wills! Arm us with might!
Guide us in ways that Love should tread.

Help us to find new light and truth;
New dreams; new ways of doing good;
A quiet life without reproof;
The spirit of true brotherhood.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

On Monday evening, January 12, 1931, "Pussyfoot" Johnson spoke to a large congregation in Suffolk Christian Church, representing all the Churches of Suffolk, on the prohibition question. No man working in the cause of temperance has such a wide reputation as "Pussyfoot," and no man deserves such reputation more than he. He has given his life and one eye to the service of mankind. Years ago he was sent, as an agent of the U. S. government, to Oklahoma to break up the gambling joints that were a menace to that Territory. He made a great success of that difficult undertaking and did most of his work at night. He crept about quietly, as a cat creeps after mice, and thus won for himself the name of "Pussyfoot" Johnson, and he has been known by that title ever since.

His great success in breaking up gambling joints led to his entrance into the work of the Anti-Saloon League as a world temperance leader. He has been in this work three times around the world, is better known, and knows more about the conditions and the minds of men on this subject than any other man on earth. His personality, his address, and his experience combine sound judgment on the beverage alcohol question. No matter what view an individual may profess to have on the liquor question, and especially prohibition, respect for a man of such consecration to the welfare of mankind, and such information on the question of temperance, must win the respect for such a temperance leader. His address in Suffolk had the attention of a great audience that represented the Churches, the business and professional men, and social leaders of women, and they all paid quiet and eager attention to his great message. It is a rare privilege to listen to a world character on a world question, for temperance is not a national but an international problem. Its solution touches the character of the individual, the welfare of the home, the standing of the Church, and the future of nations.

"Pussyfoot's" address, after personal contact with all the nations, reveals the fact that there is a world-wide concern for deliverance from the beverage traffic in and use of alcoholic liquors. The wet opposition may keep alive the prayer of the Church and the activity of the league until this great movement will put the liquor business out of commission as it did slavery and lottery. His visit and address in the Church, and the high school auditorium the next morning, was an inspiration to temperance men and women and an education to the students—the younger generation.

Dr. David Hepburn, superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League of Virginia, accompanied "Pussyfoot" (Wm. E.) Johnson to Suffolk and made a stirring address in the interest of prohibition. By competent critics, Dr. Hepburn's address was considered very fine. Whatever may be the opinions, expressions, paper propaganda, organized effort, and expenditures to defeat prohibition, the fight is on, and will continue until alcohol as a beverage will not be used except by law-breakers.

W. W. STALEY.

ELON LETTER.

Religious education officially began in colleges in the United States during the academic year 1909-10, and Dr. W. S. Athearn offered the initial course for college credit in this subject, teaching it in Drake University. Since then more than 300 colleges have instituted courses in religious education.

A recent investigation which I conducted in regard to the status of religious education in our colleges, together with objectives and programs of instruction, reveals the following facts:

1. Two objectives stand out in the field of religion (including both Bible and religious education) in our colleges—to lead young people to become religious persons and to fit young people to be teachers of religion to others.

Most of the colleges are more completely committed to the former objective. They have a sense of obligation to their constituencies to motivate their students to live Christian lives. They expect to achieve this by atmosphere, chapel and other religious services, some initiated and often-times required by the college, and others student supported, with strong and sympathetic administrative backing, the Christian example of faculty members, the Christian quality and approach in all subjects of the curriculum, and particularly by the teaching of courses in Bible and religious education. One president, for example, says: "Religious education is largely a matter of atmosphere, and for thirty-odd years we have been carefully building up and conserving the religious atmosphere of this college. Our Bible work is distinctly religious in its character. This does not mean that it is not scholastic, but we are not afraid or ashamed of what some people term 'Sunday School methods.' In no sense do we do denominational work in our college classes, but the spiritual side of the Bible and its bearing on life is greatly emphasized. We believe that the Bible is the only real source of faith and practice. It is difficult to describe exactly how, radiating from the Bible classes as a center, the religious life of the school goes on."

There is a growing tendency, however, to insist on the second objective also. To this end, methods courses in teaching religion are being increasingly offered; courses in no wise less scientific than those offered in the department of education. There is growing recognition, too, that there should be laboratory facilities in the field of religion in the Church colleges. The department of religion (variously called) in not a few colleges co-operate with the leadership training departments of the affiliated denomination in the issuing of credits, the denominational board accepting the college certification in lieu of its own examination as evidence that the units have been completed.

2. Most of the courses offered in the field of religion in the colleges are material-centered and factual. They offer instruction about religion, but do not teach religion. On the other hand, there is no department of learning in any college that offers so fine an opportunity to make experience the basis of the curriculum as does the department of religion. There should be a readjustment of the offerings in this department of our college during the next decade that will place the department of religion in the very forefront of leadership in education conceived as the continuous reconstruction of experience.

3. Uncertainty as to what religious education is and as to what its principles are, or should be, confront us on every hand. This is not to be wondered at when we consider that only since 1903 (in the University of Chicago) has religious education been offered in our graduate and professional schools, and in under-graduate colleges only since 1909 (in Drake University). A further study should be made of the principles of religious education. There is no adequate treatise on the subject now, and, as we have said, great uncertainty as to the whole matter.

4. A decided tendency to increase the quantity of offerings in the field of religion is evident in all the colleges. Many of them offer majors, and more will undoubtedly do so. Religion as an intellectual discipline in our colleges, seems to be as popular today as it was absent in 1916 when a committee of the Association of American Colleges, in defining the efficient college, saw need for only eight semester hours in Bible for the entire college course and no need at all for religious education, assigning the Bible work to the professor of Latin. This very popularity constitutes for the council a challenge as well as an opportunity.

5. A conviction, too, is gaining ground in the colleges that an institution is Christian not in part or in spots, but by its unified impact and spirit. In its dealings with its employees, its students, its alumni, its community, its constituency, the general public, it must, therefore, make use of the principles it teaches.

6. The curricula of the colleges are beginning to suggest the idea that vocational guidance and personnel work in the department of student welfare should be associated with religious motivation and buttressed by religious sanctions. This is a wholesome sign, a situation that promises redemption of the soul of America from threatening materialism. Here is, in our judgment, an open door for the denominational college, in keeping with the spirit and purpose of its founding.

7. An all but universal acceptance of the view that religion in the truest and best sense can be taught, and that a primary duty of the Church college is to see that it is taught. Christian personality fruiting in Christian character and in the progressive establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the sense of obligation to carry this on to others—that is the satisfying aim and purpose of religious education in our colleges.

PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE LETTER.

GO FORWARD.

It is impossible to estimate the good that is lost to the world as portrayed in the words "lingering," "delay," "tomorrow," "procrastination." While we linger, convictions within us get feeble and fainter, and the pleading voice of the spirit is heard less and less. The difficulties of life multiply and strengthen, habits of life harden, and character crystalizes.

The naturalists tell us of a little plant called the "sensitive plant." You may touch it and it will vibrate in every limb and leaf. You may keep on touching it, and it will vibrate every time, but less and less every time you touch it. Under repeated touches it will cease to vibrate and become flabby and unresponsive—it has been touched to death. The soul is more sensitive than the finest violin string or any plant, but it will cease to vibrate if we fail to answer the touch and call.

Here we are brought face to face with the awful power of human influence. What we do is transacted on a stage of which all in the universe are spectators. What we say is transmitted in echoes that will never cease. We cannot be neutral, for living we act, and dead we speak, and the whole universe is the mighty company, forever looking and listening, and all nature furnishes the tablets which forever records the deeds, thoughts and passions of mankind.

It is a high, solemn, almost awe-inspiring thought for every person that his earthly influence, which has a commencement, will never through all the ages have an end. What is done has already blended itself with the boundless, ever-living, ever-working universe and will work there for good or evil, openly or secretly, throughout all time. The life of every person is as a well-spring of a stream, whose small beginnings are, indeed, plain to all, but whose course and destination, as it winds through the expanse of infinite years, only the Omniscient can discern.

There are many who have lost the guiding star of their lives, and have thus lost the way to happy and useful lives. Youth of today too often depend upon their own resources and judgment to guide them through life. Threads of industry are lost by the idle and profligate who have no employment and do not want any, for the world owes them a living. Threads of virtue are lost by scorning the advice of friends and listening to the plausible statements of the destroyers of character.

It is the man that has an aim that accomplishes something in this world. A young man fired with a determined purpose to win in a particular thing has fought half the battle. One predominant aim has made men great in the past. Names of great men at once suggest their life purpose. No one thinks of Watt aside from the steam engine; a Howe suggests a sewing machine; a Bell, the telephone; an Edison, the electric light; a Morse, the telegraph; a Cyrus Field, the Atlantic cable; Marconi, wireless telegraphy. A man with one talent fixed on a definite object accomplishes more than a man of ten talents who spreads himself over a large surface. To keep your gun from scattering, put in a single shot.

Born in an age and country in which knowledge and opportunity abound as never before, how can you sit with folded hands, asking God's aid in work for which He has already given you the necessary faculties and strength, as the Lord said to Moses, "Why criest thou unto me? Speak to the children of Israel, that they go forward."

WEDDING ANNIVERSARY.

"It was the night before Christmas, when all through the house not a creature was stirring" but the good wife and housekeeper at the home of Mr. and Mrs. A. S. Dunn, of Lynchburg, Va., when they heard a clamor and when they looked to see what was the matter—well, it was the children, wives, husbands, neighbors and friends gathering in to celebrate Mr. and Mrs. Dunn's thirty-fifth wedding anniversary. The crowd was happy, bringing gifts of a miscellaneous sort; but that was not all. They were bringing supper with them, so the lady folks began to busy themselves with the job of arranging the tables and setting on the fine things that had been brought in. When we sat down, it was all one could wish, for it was a gorgeous spread, so nicely planned and executed. It was a sure-enough surprise to this thirty-five-year-old bride and bridegroom, but nevertheless they welcomed it and greatly enjoyed it. While all this was a surprise, the climax came when one of the boys who is a member of the U. S. Army and whom they did not expect to have home for Christmas, came in—and only a mother can know the joy of a child's return.

Mr. Dunn is an employee of the Southern Railway Company, in the capacity of a section foreman, and it was made known that he had not missed a pay day since September, 1893, and but once since 1889. This to Bro. Dunn was a great delight, declaring that God had certainly blessed him with health. This good couple are among the faithful in the Church in Lynchburg and can always be looked for when the doors are opened for services, and everything else that goes along with Church life.

After the supper, all remained to talk over past experiences, renew old acquaintances and to enjoy good fellowship together. So we parted with exchange of the season's greetings, that they might go to their own homes and make ready for the arrival of old Santa. May the blessings of the Lord be upon this good couple whose lives have been so rich with experiences and good things, and may they be given health and happiness in these their later years. Here is a case of the truth of the Bible, "that the children shall rise up and call them blessed." May not only these two, but all the family and friends so live that when they are through gathering one by one, they shall enjoy a fellowship that will be unbroken through all eternity, and be able to sit down with the Lord around the great supper—the marriage supper of the Lamb.

ABOUT PROJECTS.

Some of you who have been most actively engaged in the promotion of projects have probably met this question, "Why should we select projects when we know our money does not go to the project selected?" It is surprising how often this and kindred other objections are offered. Of late, perhaps because of the article which appeared recently in the Christian Century, we have heard it more often. We are constrained to suggest the following outline of the way your missionary dollars get to your projects. We have tried to explain it before in paragraph nine of the leaflet, "The Project Plan," which was published by the Commission on Missions last January. Evidently, we did not make it clear.

A Church's projects are on file in the Conference office. When you send in your benevolence apportionment gifts, all you need say is, "This is to be applied to the support of our projects as on file in your office." The money is then automatically divided according to the State percentages—part goes to the American Board treasurer, part goes to the treasurer of the home boards. These amounts go into the general treasuries, from which, in regular monthly installments, according to the budget (upon which projects are based), payments are made to all the projects. It happens that almost half of our money comes in from Churches during the last two months of the year. What would the poor project do if he had to wait until December for his authorized support?

The boards and the State offices, in good faith, because you have selected a definite part of the support of a group of missionaries, forwards the money in monthly payments to each missionary. Surely by this method each missionary is getting the amount which you intend him to, plus the remainder of the budget item which your Church may have been unable to supply. Of course, you are at perfect liberty to designate your gift, and such designations are rigidly followed, but think of the staff of bookkeepers which would be needed in every State and national office if every gift came in designated for each individual project! —Congregational News (N. Y.).

The 1931 "Christian Annual" is being sent out this week to the secretaries of the various Conferences—just twenty working days after the copy was received from the last Conference.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Secretary.

A PRAYER.

(January.)

O great Jehovah, God of all time and eternity, hear. Thou who changest not, whose covenant with man never can fail, forgive, we pray, the weakness which causes us sometimes to forget our covenant with Thee. As the scroll of time rolls back another year, cover, O God, every blot and blotch, every deed and word of shame or hurt. Behind Jesus' cross of pain and love hide even the trace of soil and stain, and day by day as turns to view the fresh, clean page may it not become sullied by the record of unforgiven committed sin or the sadder doom, "Ye did it not." In our Saviour's name. Amen.

A SLOW AND PAINFUL PROCESS.

Perhaps there are three major difficulties which the preacher faces today in the presentation of his missionary message. In the first place, whereas practically all missionary information heretofore has reached his people through missionary journals and religious papers, today it often comes to them from secular sources tinged with pessimism, materialism, and criticism. Newspapers, magazines, and the public platform, while recognizing missions as never before, frequently bring to the Christian mind a decidedly negative outlook on the missionary enterprise. In the second place, these broadcast statements, together with revolutionary outbreaks, such as those in China and India, and the difficult financial problems which the missionary cause has recently faced, have set the minds of many people in the mold of "problem psychology."

I am reminded of the little city boy who wanted a dog. His people lived high up in an apartment house—a poor place for a canine. The boy insisted on having a pet until his father purchased him a little dog. The animal proved to be a perfect nuisance. It carried off the shoes, muddled the carpets, tore up valuable clothing, and then began to bite the neighbors' children. They could neither sell nor give the dog away. Finally, in desperation, the father said, "I am going to hire a man to shoot the dog." The little boy, broken-hearted, asked for two days of grace to see if he could get rid of his pet. His father reluctantly granted it. On the second day, he came running into the kitchen and shouted to his mother, "I have got rid of the dog, all right!" "How did you do it?" inquired the surprised mother. "Oh, I have traded him for five puppies," exultantly replied the boy!

Because of the complicated age in which we live, the transitions throughout the world, and the new problems since the war, it seems that whereas there was one problem with regard to missions ten years ago, today there are five. In the third place, we are reluctant to accept "the way of the cross" and momentary defeat in any enterprise here in America. Our talk has been about forward movements, a going concern, great campaigns, crusades, etc. We are impatient for visible and measurable progress. The spirit of propaganda and whirl-wind achievement, born out of the war and great material progress, dies hard. We have insisted too much upon results at the front that could be tabulated and graphed. Business men on Church boards, and even pastors, are reluctant to accept the fact that kingdom-building is a slow and painful process. E. Stanley Jones tells of his vision of the thorn and the flower on the slope of the Mount of Olives during the missionary conference in 1928. Others of us had similar experiences at the wonderful meeting. A little group of the delegates were strolling over the Mount of Olives on Easter Sunday afternoon, picking flowers for notebooks as mementos of our wonderful experience in the source city of our faith. One of the number stumbled on a jagged thorn, and as he picked it up he remarked that the thorn was a more valid souvenir of the Mount of Olives than flowers. How true! Jesus said, "If any man will come after me, let him take up his cross and follow me." We are going through some Gethsemanes in the missionary enterprise; but did Jesus turn back because of Gethsemane? Perhaps the real revival in missions depends on our discovery in this fast-moving age of the glory of the thorn and the cross.—"The Preacher and His Missionary Message," by Stephen J. Corey.

NEWS ITEMS

The Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Society of Rosemont Christian Church met in regular monthly session with the president, Mrs. O. S. Mills, on Wednesday, December 31st, with twenty-two present. The devotionals were conducted by Mrs. O. F. Smith, our spiritual life superintendent. We feel that this part of our meeting is very important, as it emphasizes prayer and consecration. Two brief new year talks were made by Mrs. H. C. Hedley and the writer. The first chapter of our mission study book, "A Cloud of Witnesses," was discussed by Mrs. H. E. Roane. Our missionary offering amounted to twenty-three dollars. Following this program on New Year's Eve, a social session was enjoyed and refreshments served by our hostess.

Dr. Atkinson was with us the Sunday preceding this meeting, and we feel that his sermon was a wonderful inspiration to our society for beginning the new year. We love our missionary society at Rosemont, and feel that it comes next to the preaching service in the help and instruction it gives to our women. May God help us to use both our lives and our money for the furtherance of His cause.

MRS. J. F. MORGAN.

THE HAPPINESS ROAD.

"It's just a little road,
The road that leads To happiness. It's made of faith
And kindly deeds:

"Of pleasantness, of words that bless,
Of thoughts that heal;
Of very silent giving up
For other's weal.

"The road that leads to happiness
Is easy taking;
Beside it grass springs fresh and green,
And buds are breaking.

"Oh, there are folks from far away,
And folks we know there:
So let us two take hand some day,
And oh, let's go there!"

—Mary Carolyn Davies.

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

We want to just have a little heart-to-heart talk with you and let us think together just a few minutes. You have always been so kind and courteous to me that it has been a joy and a pleasure to be the superintendent of your Christian Orphanage and to try to do a work here that would be worth while. For fourteen years I have been your servant in this institution, and if I know myself, I have done my best to give you honest and faithful service. In this work we know no hours. Sometimes the twenty-four hours out of twenty-four hours, if sickness or other circumstances demand it. The year 1930 had its troubles as well as its joys. Four children had operations for appendicitis. One boy operated on for stone in the kidney. Twenty-six children had tonsil operations. These children spent the equal of 144 days in the hospital for one child.

We had sixty-one other children sick and confined to their bed, the equal of 201 days for one child, which would make 345 days of illness for one child last year.

During the year 1930 we gave 38,841 days of care for the 120 children. We had 23 full orphans, 26 mothers dead, 54 fathers dead, 17 both parents living (but financed). Our income for the year 1930 was $45,118.36. Now, read on and let us see where this amount of money came from and just how much our Church gave to support one hundred and twenty children for one year.

Let us put down $45,118.36. Let us deduct the following items, which come to us from sources outside of our Church: B. N. Duke will- ed $15,000; Duke endowment, $2,256.87; insurance on barn, $2,000; L. S. Hart endowment, $900; friends not members of our Church, $4,- 643.94—total from outside our Church, $24,- 800.81. Let us deduct this amount from the $45,- 118.36 and we will have $20,318.36. Now, let us deduct from this amount $3,618.40 (new-barn fund) and we will have $16,699.96.

Now, let us deduct from this amount the cost of new silo, $500, and we will have $16,199.96 sent in last year by our Church-folks to care for 120 children and pay all expenses of the institution. This was $13.50 per child per month. It cost us $20.20 per month per child. To finance the difference between $20.20 cost per month per child and $13.50 per month amount sent in to support them is the thing that turns your superintendent's hair gray and would make wrinkles in his face if he did not keep them ironed out.

We wanted to make this plain statement to let you, as members of the Church, know just what we, as a Church, are doing. We want you to have the facts.

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON,
Superintendent.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE.

Lesson V—February 1, 1931.

JESUS THE GREAT PHYSICIAN.

GOLDEN TEXT: "Surely He hath borne our griefs and carried our sorrows."—Isa. 53:4.

LESSON: Luke 4:31-5:39.

"And He rose up from the synagogue"—it was Jesus' custom to attend services in the synagogue regularly. He recognized the value of fellowship in worship, and the contribution which public worship had to make to the inner man. Those who look upon Church-going as a stern duty have missed the point altogether. For Jesus' attendance at services of worship was a privilege and an opportunity. There are a great many Church members who need to face the whole matter of Church-going from a new viewpoint.

"And entered into the house of Simon. And Simon's wife's mother was holden with a great fever . . . and He rebuked the fever; and it left her." From worship to service—this is the divine order of things. Hard by every Church, always close at hand, there is human need. And Church worship never finds its fullest meaning until it expresses itself in Church service. After all, attendance at Church is not an end in itself, but a means to an end. It is a means of grace to build up men and women, boys and girls in Christian character, and to inspire them to Christian service. He profits most from Church-going who harnesses the inspiration he receives in Church to practical service outside the Church.

"And immediately she rose up, and ministered unto them." Her gratitude found expression in action. Alas, how many there are who never render any return for the blessings which God daily gives them.

"And when the sun was setting, all they that had any sick with divers diseases brought them unto Him; and He laid His hands on every one of them and healed them." Here is a miracle from the ordinary point of view. It cannot be explained on merely natural grounds. But is it, after all, strange that the one who was the Great Miracle, the one who has so deeply and widely affected mankind and human history, is it strange that He had within Him the power to heal disease at a touch, or even at a word? Is it not, after all, the most natural thing that He had at His disposal at an instant the powers of healing that usually manifested themselves in a process. One thing is certain—here is a graphic way of setting forth the truth that God is interested in man's physical life; that He is the source of ultimate healing.

"And demons also came out from many, crying out and saying, Thou art the Son of God." Here is evidence that Jesus was Master not only of the forces of disease, but Master of demonic powers. The hostile forces of life recognize His authority and His power. They knew that all things have been committed unto His hands, and such hold as they have upon life is only tentative. They cannot ultimately triumph over mankind, for they have already been brought into subjection by Him who is Lord of all.

"And multitudes sought Him." Quite naturally. Then as now, there were those who were more concerned about physical limitations and illness of body than they are about spiritual poverty and illness of soul. Then, too, there are always those who respond to the spectacular, but who do not have the stability to persevere in season and out of season. There are always those present at a Christmas or Easter service, or at some spectacular service, who are seldom, if ever, present at the usual services of worship. Folks haven't changed much since Jesus' day.

"A man full of leprosy"—a pathetic, outcast, doomed man, the last word in loathsomeness and helplessness. "When he saw Jesus, he fell on his face and besought Him"—he had a deep sense of need, he had a sincere spirit of reverence, he had a vital faith, although he was not quite sure whether Jesus would do it. "If Thou wilt, Thou canst make me clean." And he, that is Jesus, "stretched forth His hand, and touched him"—there was the personal touch which in so many instances in our modern life we are losing in things religious—saying, "I will, be thou made clean." "And straightway the leprosy departed from him." Here is another instance of the healing power of Jesus, an evidence that He was superior to the powers of disease. Here is, of course, an evidence not only of His ability, but of His willingness.

"And He charged him to tell no man." Jesus did not want to be known as a wonder-worker. He did not want to be known primarily as a healer of disease. He did not want a wrong emphasis to be placed upon His ministry. His mission was primarily spiritual. Such works of healing as He performed were means to an end. It goes without saying that Jesus did not heal all the sick people or cleanse all the lepers in His day. He simply gave evidences, concrete manifestations, of what ordinarily are mysteries.

"But He withdrew Himself in the deserts, and prayed." There were still great multitudes coming to hear Him, and there was still much to be done, but the Master withdrew secretly and prayed. Here is a lesson for every minister and every Sunday School teacher and every religious worker. There will always be much to be done, there will always be many calls, and there will be the subtle temptation to keep eternally busy, even in what we call Christian service. Let the Master's example here teach us that He who would do the most effective service must, from time to time, get away from people and things and renew the inner man through that communion with God which gives spirit and life.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

By JEWEL TRUITT.

Sunday, February 1, 1931.

TOPIC: "The Young People's Society in the Program of the Church."

SCRIPTURE: 2 Tim. 2:1-15.

For this meeting it would be well to arrange with the pastor to hold the regular Christian Endeavor meeting at the Church hour. The pastor could be assigned a talk if he is to be present. A program is given below that is suggestive of the type of program that may be rendered.

Use as your theme "The Service of Youth." All who are taking part in the program should "The devil . . . departed from Him for a season." He did not leave Jesus once and for all. Again and again he tempted Him. He does not leave us for long, either. He who sets himself to walk in the ways of righteousness must always watch and pray, and must always have on the whole armor of God, that he may be able to withstand both the stealthy approach and the open attack of the devil. But let all such remember that there hath no temptation taken us know what they are to do and be prepared to do it in order that they may give attention to the spirit of the meeting.

The Program.

1. Piano prelude.
2. Call to worship. To be read by the leader of the meeting.
"I was glad when they said unto me, Let us go into the house of the Lord" (Psa. 122:1).
"Oh come, let us sing unto the Lord:
Let us make a joyful noise to the rock of our salvation.
Let us come before His presence with thanksgiving;
Let us make a joyful noise unto Him with psalms.
For He is our God,
And we are the people of His pasture, and the sheep of His hand" (Psa. 95:1, 2, 7).
"God is a Spirit; and they that worship Him must worship in spirit and truth" (John 2:24).
3. Hymn: "Softly Now the Light of Day" (1, 2, & 4 stanzas).
4. Scripture reading: 2 Tim. 2:1-15.
5. Hymn: "He Leadeth Me" (1, 2, 3).
6. Prayer.
7. The offering.
8. Special music: This might be a solo, "There is a Wideness in God's Mercy," sung to the tune of "What a Friend We Have in Jesus."
9. Three five-minute talks:
(a) "What Christian Endeavor Meant to Me," by an older person.
(b) "Christian Endeavor Today," by a member of the society.
(c) "The Purpose of Christian Endeavor," by a member of the society or the pastor.
10. A closing worship program:
(a) Leader: The influence of Christ upon this world of men did not begin with the birth of the Babe at Bethlehem. Before Abraham was, I am, He said. And all down the ages He has called men to be prophets, and men have answered His call.

These were no mere dreamers, but stern wrestlers with life, righteous men with great convictions about the nature of God and God's purposes and God's demands upon mankind, and a real desire to make these convictions known to other men and to live them out.

The voice of the prophets is the voice of the Eternal Christ.

Five young people go to the front of the room to read from Bibles the words of the prophets: Isaiah: Read Isa. 6:1 and 8.

Jeremiah: Read Jer. 1:4-7 and 9.

Amos: Amos 7:14 and 15.

Peter: Matt. 4:18-20.

Paul: Acts 9:1-8 and 19-20; Acts 26:19.

Leader: Read Heb. 11:32 and 33; Heb. 12-2a.

(b) Prayer hymn (Sung by all with bowed heads; tune: "Just as I Am)."

"Just as I am, Thine own to be,
Friend of the young, who lovest me,
To consecrate myself to Thee,
O Jesus Christ, I come, I come.

"Just as I am, young, strong, and free,
To be the best that I can be,
For truth and righteousness, and Thee.
Lord of my life, I come, I come."

—Marianne Hearn.

(c) Benediction.

YOUTH FELLOWSHIP.

The Youth Fellowship set as one of its goals for the coming year to secure one thousand subscriptions to THE CHRISTIAN SUN, two hundred to the Missionary Herald, two hundred to the Congregationalist and Herald of Gospel Liberty. It is also a goal to have one copy of the Sunday School Herald and one copy of the Wellspring in each Sunday School. This is a very significant movement. Most of us are quite complacent over the fact that THE SUN is not self-supporting, merely because we know that the Southern Christian Convention stands back of it and will make up the deficiency. We somehow fail to realize that this money is needed elsewhere. When THE CHRISTIAN SUN suffers, it necessarily means that other causes equally worthy must also suffer.

Now here is an opportunity for the Youth Fellowship to do some real constructive work. If we can reach our goal it will mean the saving of two thousand dollars for the Southern Christian Convention. Is this not a worthy task? Surely all ministers and Christian workers will co-operate in this campaign. It is a test of our loyalty. It is a challenge to our faith. Let us do our best and God will be our Helper.

ROBERT LEE HOUSE,
Supt Dept of Publications.

NOTICE.

A copy of the "Christian Church Bulletin," issued by Dr. F. G. Coffin, President, and Dr. W. H. Denison, Secretary, calling attention to the Seattle Council meeting, says: "The dates of the meeting at Seattle, Wash., are June 25th to July 3rd. It will be a great meeting. There we will meet in joint session for the first time since our union was voted. The Constitution for the united body will be adopted. We believe it will be a forerunner of a still greater union. Plan to go at any sacrifice. Round-trip rates will be cheaper than clergy fare." The delegates to this Convention from the Southern Christian Convention, elected at Raleigh at the last session of the Southern Convention, are: Ministers—A. W. Andes, J. O. Atkinson, H. C. Caviness, B. J. Earp, J. W. Fix, P. H. Flexing, H. S. Hardcastle, Stanley C. Harrell, W. C. Hook, J. D. Dollar, I. W. Johnson, J. Lee Johnson, G. O. Lankford, F. C. Lester, J. E. McCauley, J. F. Morgan, N. G. Newman, C. E. Newman, J. W. Patton, O. D. Poythress, C. H. Rowland, C. C. Ryan, W. C. Wicker, R. L. Williamson, G. D. Hunt. Laymen—E. E. Holland, J. E. West, Miss Graham Rowland, Miss Jewel Truitt, J. A. Williams, W. V. Leathers, M. J. W. White, Mrs. M. J. W. White, Mrs. John A. Williams, Mrs. R. T. Bradford, Dr. J. E. Rawles, Mrs. W. V. Leathers, Mrs. M. L. Bryant, J. A. Kimball, K. B. Johnson, Mrs. J. H. Harden, F. F. Myrick, Mrs. C. H. Rowland, Mrs. W. A. Harper, C. D. Johnston, Mrs. S. C. Harrell, T. J. Holland, J. H. Abell, E. L. Moffitt, J. M. Darden. Members ex officio—W. A. Harper, W. W. Staley, L. E. Smith, W. H. Denison, G. O. Lankford, S. L. Beougher. It will be a great Convention and a great trip. Any delegates not planning to go should notify Dr. Smith in order that alternates might be selected.

"And when the devil had ended all the temptation, he departed from Him for a season" (Luke 4:13). That is the character of the devil even in his dealings with the best saint—he will depart only for a season.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE
One of our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy.

"If thou wilt make the Almighty thy treasure . . . then shalt thou delight thyself in the Almighty . . . and thou shalt make thy prayer unto Him and He will hear thee."—Job 22: 25-27.

MONDAY.

THE FRUIT OF HIS WORD.

"The Gospel of Christ is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth."—Rom. 1:16.

It is of highest importance to have the pure doctrine of God's Word. Without it we are lost. By it we are regenerated and kept in living fellowship with the Lord, which is the only means of growing into spiritual perfection. It preserves the life in the liberty of grace. It produces fruit of righteousness. It is the touchstone on which all doctrine, our faith and our works are tested. It is "the washing of regeneration and the renewing of the Holy Ghost." It is the means of ingrafting of Jesus in our daily life.

Prayer.—Holy Father, sanctify us through Thy truth; Thy word is truth. Amen.

TUESDAY.

A GLORIOUS ESTATE.

"The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit that we are the sons of God."—Rom. 8:16.

Freedom from guilt of sin, from the dominion of temptations, from death—such are the children of God.

Enemies to this estate are anger, malice, uncleanness, drunkenness, gluttony, covetousness. One cannot be possessed of these things and claim the estate. He who would possess it must struggle continually and persistently against these enemies and live in simple and trusting prayer to God. To honestly fight on for this brings the reality of the Spirit testifying with our own spirits that we are children of God and joint heirs with him to heaven's glories.

It is glorious to realize that to any extent we reflect in our lives God's Spirit. This is blessed sonship! This is access to the Father! This is the hope of glory!

Prayer.—Give us grace, our Father, to lead saintly lives, to endure with patience, to realize the witness of the Spirit within us, and gives us the assurance that there awaits the heritage of well-being and eternal happiness in glory for faithfulness. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

GOING STRAIGHT.

"Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them."—Matt. 7:12.

Because of conceit and unbridled thoughts, it is hard to apply the Golden Rule. These traits are wholly opposed to truth and charity. Our opinion of ourselves may be in flat contradiction to the word of God. Our own wills may be exactly reverse to the will of God. Such is the case unless we apprehend Christ in such a way as to accept His will with willing hearts and hold fast to His truth. We must love God above all things else, and our neighbor as ourselves. Christ said more than this. He said we must love our enemies and do good to those who despitely use us.

To know one's self as unworthy and unable to rise to the Christ life without Christ in the soul; to bend one's thoughts and practices to the way of God; to have faith in a God who doeth all things well to those that love and serve Him; to lose one's self in the desire and the effort to be a blessing to others; to deal with others as we would deal with self; to be willing to stand for right and take the consequences; to be always depended upon by others—this is the straight and narrow road. God Himself works in such a one to will and do His pleasure.

Prayer.—Lord God of us all, Thou who hast opened to us the gate of life in Jesus our Saviour, lead us through this gate, that we may become to us the way, the truth and the life. Amen.

THURSDAY.

FAITH THAT COUNTS FOR RIGHTEOUSNESS.

"His faith is counted for righteousness."—Rom. 4:5.

This fact of God's word and of His work in the soul is the most important article of our religious experience. This particular reference is spoken of Abraham, stating that it was the secret of his success in realizing God in his life and in rising to the sublime heights of Christian example. It means this, that because of faith and the undying and undaunted determination to be God's men, a thousand inadvertent and inerrant faults may be overlooked. This is the realm of God's mercy, for if we were dealt with after our sins and faults we would be most miserable. But God's grace and mercy is extended to us like a father's love for an infant child. When we abide in such faith, we are stripped entirely of our own strength and we are filled with a dependence on Him that is like the simplicity of a child.

To be sure we cannot count such faith a state of perfection. Our souls still live in the flesh, and this flesh of ours may prevent us from acting worthy of the majesty of God, so faith is not righteousness, but it is counted as such for the reason that God is pleased with such a heart.

Luther says, "Christian righteousness depends first on faith; and secondly, God counting that faith righteousness," the latter meaning that He pardons our sins as though they had not been committed. To believe in God, trust also in Him, and follow Christ brings us to His righteousness.

Prayer.—O God, imprint blessed faith indelibly on our souls, and let us be among those who are blessed with His righteousness. Amen.

FRIDAY.

EVERY CHRISTIAN'S COMMISSION.

"If thou warn the righteous man that he sin not, and he doth not sin, he shall surely live."—Ezek. 21.

It is our duty to warn the unsaved of their dangers, and, if possible, save them. In fact, we dare not warn them lest we be held responsible for their loss. We are all created for heavenly glory and eternal communion with God. We are all on the way. But there are many allurements from the straight and narrow way. There are many by-ways men take in which there are pitfalls. We ourselves are to build a safe way as we go along for those coming after us, that they may travel safely. We are to stick up the road-signs for them who come on. Will we, for the sake of some sordid pleasure, or selfish motives, or easy going, neglect our duty?

Prayer.—Lord, Thou great and glorious Saviour, give us hearts after Thee. Give us of Thy Spirit, that our minds and our tongues may be true prophets of Thee. Convert and save the erring and keep Thy righteous children from falling again. Amen.

SATURDAY.

A SIGN ON THE CHRISTIAN HIGHWAY.

"Hereby know ye the Spirit of God."—John 4:1-4.

To follow the Christian highway is as natural as following the natural courses of our living. All sensible people apply a test of quality and strength to anything with which he has to deal. They do not accept everything, "lock, stock and barrel." In religious matters, however, they are not so careful. Love is kindly and trusting—it thinks no evil; it believes all things, and hopes all things; it puts the most charitable construction on every thing: but at the same time it is watchful and as sensitive as the eye against that which is false and wicked. At no step of the way can we feel secure. The pitfalls are almost everywhere. The arrows and shaft of the wicked one are aimed at us from within as well as without. The matter of hanging a window-shade may be a great provocation. There is no relief from the opportunity to get away from the Spirit of Jesus in our every-day life. But "where sin doth abound, grace doth much more abound."

In our text the Holy Ghost gives us a sure token by which we may know the way—the things that are not of Christ and which are enemies to our souls. It is a blessing to us to recall that John said, "Ye are of God little children, and have overcome them (anti-Christ); because greater is he that is in you than he that is in the world." Therefore, "be as wise as serpents and harmless as doves"; walk in the light and have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness.

Prayer.—O God, let Thy light and Thy truth be with us, let them guide us to Thy holy place. When evil is around, keep us and help us to stand steadfast against every enemy of our soul, always speaking the truth in love. Amen.

SUNDAY.

GOD IS IN CHRIST.

Lesson: 1 Tim. 6:13-21.

There is none other God than the God revealed in Christ, and there is no true revelation of the true God but in Him. However, this revelation of God in Christ means very little to us if we do not yield obedience to the truth. But through obedience to His truth in Christ, God is revealed and His glory illumines us. Then we learn the sweetness of His love, the power of His might, His guiding and saving grace, and His power over sin, and to use all things for heavenly glory. The non-believer simply does not know and cannot appreciate a Christian.

As faithful Christians, we are called upon to show that we are children of the Heavenly Father, and are like Him! We are called upon to prove His Spirit in our lives and bring forth fruit which leaves no one in doubt about the reality of what we profess. It is the wonton failure of many professed Christians which has broken down the faith in many a soul and which is responsible today for so much infidelity and atheism. True Christians will do that which is truly good. None others do. Let us try to become rich in a good life and in good works.

Prayer.—Merciful and everlasting God, help us to believe in Thee in Christ and to serve Thee and to live our whole lives in Thee. Make us free from the world and teach us to make it our servant in the way of reaching heaven. Amen.

REV. JOSEPH W. FIX, Preacher.

JESUS AND THE SICK.

BY DR. R. C. HELFENSTEIN.

"Many followed Him, and He healed them all."—Matt. 12:15.

The Man of Galilee, our Saviour and Lord, was deeply concerned about men and women in every condition of life. He was concerned about the moral, the intellectual, the social, and the physical, as well as the spiritual, welfare of every man and woman. His healing miracles show how His heart of loving compassion went out to those who suffered physical pain and to those who were physically handicapped. The bulk of the teachings that He left us for our spiritual enlightenment is closely associated with His ministrations to the health of those who were physically incapacitated. To take away Christ's teachings that are associated with His works of healing would be to leave but the shell of His gospel for His healing ministry was His gospel put into practice.

What we term Christ's miracles of healing are but the natural expression of His sincere human sympathy. People who find it difficult to accept the healing miracles of Jesus as authentic should first refute the power of mind over matter, or the theory of mental therapeutics. Any student of psychological phenomena knows that the physicians of our day are making more and more use of the power of the mind over the body. The physician seeks first of all to create a response of hope and faith in the mind of the patient in order that the self-healing powers of the one afflicted may be brought into play. Without this mental response, the physical response to the medicines or treatments will be discouragingly lacking. The successful physician seeks first of all to establish confidence in the mind of the patient. He knows that he must have it, else his labors will be in vain. So with all branches of the healing science, the doctor in each case realizes how important it is for the patient to believe in the efficiency of the medicine, the adjustments, the treatments, or whatever method of health ministry is administered.

The power of the mind over the body is great, but it is not absolute. The body is the servant to the mind. And as the mind is superior to the body, so is the spirit superior to the mind. If one man can minister to the health of another by thinking health for him, by letting the power of his mind exercise itself in his behalf, think you what ministry one person may give to another's health if he exercise his soul, letting the power of his spiritual life go out in behalf of the one in need. You do not know how much your health is affected by the thoughts of those with whom you are associated. You do know that you are not only mentally and spiritually, but also physically, refreshed by the fellowship of noble minds and spirits.

Every one who thinks and observes, knows that our physical health is largely affected by our thought-life, and by the thought-life of those who are interested in us. If we could trace directly this influence of our thoughts upon our bodies, the results would seem next to miraculous. You let a man or woman think evil thoughts, let them brood over their troubles, and those thoughts will register their affect upon their physical strength. Evil thinking writes a very plain hand on the face of its victim. Let a man or woman think true and noble thoughts of love, purity and good will, and those thoughts likewise register their effect not only upon the face but also upon the life of the one who thus thinks.

Moreover, let others think evil of you, let them plan in their thinking against your well-being, and, though unconsciously yet surely, you are affected physically, mentally and spiritually by their thinking. And let others think good of you, let them plan in their thinking for your happiness and well-being, and, though unconsciously yet surely, you will be helped by the power of their thinking. And the purer, the more sincere, the nobler, the truer the life of the one who thinks well of you and who wishes that the best may come to you and who plans lovingly for your happiness and well-being, the stronger will be the impact upon your life for good.

That being true, it is easy for us who have meditated upon that sinless life of the Man of Galilee, to understand how that when men and women came in contact with his purity of life and nobility of character their physical and mental, as well as spiritual, self unconsciously responded to the re-creating power of his noble thoughts and his inspiring love. As men today have power with their thoughts over the bodies of others, certainly it seems but natural that Jesus, whose life was the embodiment of all that was good and true, would have power by His capacity of mind and supremely by His capacity of soul to impart strength and health to all who came in contact with Him. We are all agreed on the power of the mind over the body. God, forbid that our spiritual vision should be so dimmed as to keep us from seeing that the power of the soul is infinitely greater than the power of the mind. The power of the soul is supreme.

I know the difficulty involved in trying to accept some of the miracles recorded in the Old Testament and in the New Testament. And I realize that some of them may seem to be more mythical than historical. Some of them may seem to be more the product of an active imagination than statements of fact. It does not take much of a student to discriminate between the miracles of spiritual significance and those of simply narrative interest. Do not think that your right to being a Christian rests upon your readiness to accept every miracle without question. Neither should a person exclude all miracles from his acceptance simply because there are a few that seem incredible.

Jesus' miracles of healing were but the natural expression of the power of soul over matter. It is far less strange that men's bodies should respond to the healing power of his love than that their bodies should respond to the healing properties of medicine. God is the source of all healing. Every wise health doctor, regardless of his method of ministering to health, recognizes that God is the Author of life and of health. It was God's love that put the healing properties in the herb, the plant, the mineral and all the rest. It was God's love that put the health values in the air, the sunlight and the water, and in the wholesome food. It was God's love that gave us life. It is God's love that has provided for life's continuance.

When Jesus walked among the Galilean hills, calling men to be His disciples, His passion was to serve them in whatever way they needed His service most. The people who find it hard to understand Christ's miracles of healing need to ponder over the invincible power of love. His life was the incarnation of love. He was love. He came to help men understand that the open secret of the universe is the fact that God is a person whose manner and being is love. The purpose of love is to help. The mission of love is to serve. The passion of love is to save. If men could only appreciate the power of love they would understand how Jesus helped, and served, and saved the men and women of His day. And how He seeks to help, and serve, and save us today. As He imparted health to men and women by the power of His noble thoughts and His perfect love, so He would have us to be mediums of His divine power by pure and noble thinking and unselfish love.

Jesus, when here in the flesh, desired to help men and women face life's experiences successfully. He sought to help them experience their largest self-realization. He was interested in everything that ministered to the physical, the mental and the spiritual efficiency of men and women. He came "that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly." And His challenge to His Church today is that it shall concern itself with the physical, the mental,

RELIGIOUS BOOKS

W. A. HARPER, BOOK EDITOR.

(Any book reviewed in this Department may be had of The Christian Sun at the publisher's price.)

BIBLE STORY BOOK. By Frances W. Danielson. The Pilgrim Press; $2.50; pp. 187.

Miss Danielson is an expert story-teller for children. She uses language they can and do understand. This book is valuable, too, for another reason: It uses only such Bible stories as give a Christian idea of God. It is certainly a desirable gift book for children.

SEEKERS OF LIGHT. By Clarence W. Cranford. The Judson Press; $1.25; pp. 113.

Here is a young man, student in seminary as yet, who has, during his undergraduate days, served as pastor and so gripped student audiences in their summer camps that he has been urged to put his messages in book form. Religion is to him the interpretation of life in terms of belief in God. He knows youth, he knows science, and he has had a warm and intimate experience of God. At least that is the impression his ten chapters which make up the book leave in the reviewer's mind.

HE TOOK IT UPON HIMSELF. By Margaret Slatery. The Pilgrim Press; $1.50; pp. 88.

This clarion call to individual responsibility is exactly what our day needs in its blind confidence in social organization to bring in the kingdom of God. Whenever a great achievement has been wrought for Labrador fishermen or Hottentots in Africa or aliens in the Chicago packing-house area or the poor and suffering anywhere in the world, it has been the work of some man or woman who took it upon himself, felt it to be his individual responsibility. Her devotion to the Church, too, is tonic.

THE BASIS OF BELIEF. By William Y. Ballantine. Crowell; $2; pp. 230.

Research has lost its bearings, according to Dr. Ballantine. All reasoning is the same, he insists, whether you employ the inductive or the deductive method, so-called. The book is entertaining, and topics ordinarily dry as dust become interesting under his handling. At times the reader thinks the book was written to satirize Einstein's dictum that parallel lines meet. Not until the last chapter is reached does the real purpose stand out—to show the reasonableness of belief in God, God as a person. It is a fine piece of work, well done.

EDUCATIONAL MOVEMENTS OF TODAY. By Walter Albion Squires. The Westminster Press; $1.25; pp. 268.

Dr. Squires occupies what might be called the conciliatory ground between such leaders in religious education as Bower and Coe, on the one hand, and Betts and Richardson on the other. He is a correlationist rather than an integrationist, we should say. In light of his fundamental viewpoint, he examines Dewey's philosophy and Bower's experience-centered curriculum and discards both. He adopts Whitehead's and Hocking's philosophical views and the organization and curriculum plans of the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A. in religious education, and against these as backgrounds takes a look at our religious education system today. The greatest note in his book is the insistence that Jesus should be central in all efforts at religious education. He can be that only however, as He enters into the experience of living men and women. No mere appreciation of Him, intellectual, aesthetic or otherwise, can win for Him that centrality. At times, Dr. Squires seems to forget that.

and the spiritual welfare of the race, to the end that all may have an opportunity to experience "the abundant life."

Christ's power to help all who are sick is just as real and just as available today as it was when He walked along the shores of Galilee, for those who truly believe Him and with their whole heart are trusting Him. The power of religious faith in ministering to physical and mental health of an individual has been proved time without number. Many of us in our strongest moments of faith have been conscious of God's response to our prayers for physical strength. What a pity that our faith is not always strong! What a shame that our lives are not always "in tune with the Infinite" by pure living and noble thinking! Christianity is for all of life and for every life. The gospel is more than good advice on moral and spiritual conduct. It is the good news of salvation for our whole life.

"The healing of His seamless dress

Is by our beds of pain;

We touch Him in life's throng and press,
And we are whole again."

Let us not forget, then, to thank God for health sustained or for health regained, for without God's help all other help is helpless in our behalf. The doctors, the nurses, and all who serve in the ministry of health but co-operate with the God of all life. We should cherish sincere appreciation for the co-operation of all His servants in the ministry of health, and we should never fail to thank and praise our Heavenly Father by whose grace we live and by whose love we are made strong in body, mind and soul.

CONGREGATIONAL CHRISTIAN CHURCHES OF THE SOUTHEAST

ELON was founded to train Christian leaders for the New South.

ELON has done its task well—one graduate in seven being in the Christian ministry. The other six express Christian leadership in the various professions and vocations. Experience teaches that spiritual leadership must be indigenous.

The South is now a New South ready for an inclusive Church, the type of Church for which Elon has stood for forty years and for which she is prepared to produce capable leadership.

With no Church in the community, save the College Auditorium, ELON has practiced Christian Union for faculty, students, and community for four decades.

Its contribution to Christian Education is nationally known and approved.

Its Christian Education Building, providing laboratory facilities for religious leadership training, is unique and is the first college building of its type in the world.

ELON confines itself to undergraduate liberal arts work with that religious emphasis which befits the Christian College.

In ELON the Congregational-Christian Church has an asset of marvelous hopefulness.

The South needs her Yale, her Oberlin, her Carleton, her Pomona for the intellectual leadership of the United Church. Many regard ELON as strategically located and spiritually endowed to become such a center of illumination and leadership training.

WALKER.

Mr. George B. Walker died suddenly at the home of his niece, Miss Sadie Fonville, in Burlington, N. C., December 15, 1930, being 68 years of age. His parents were Rev. George G. and Mary Sellars Walker. His sister, Mrs. L. J. Fonville, passed away just one month and three days before him. For about two years he had made his home with the Fonville family. Prior to that time he had lived in Oklahoma for approximately forty years. He was the last of this distinguished family.

Mr. Walker was a good man, quiet, unassuming, retiring. He was optimistic in attitude and radiated good cheer wherever he went. He was a great lover of children and was greatly loved by them. He was devoted to the members of his family. His Church membership was in the State of Oklahoma.

The funeral was conducted from the Fonville home by the writer, and interment followed in Pine Hill Cemetery, in Burlington. May his soul rest in peace, and may comfort and strength be given abundantly to the bereaved.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

Mrs. N. T. Farmer

By Dr. W. C. WICKER.

EINSTEINS.—

The Einsteins, the scientist and his companion, are traveling in California. They visited San Diego and were given a typical California reception by the citizens of San Diego and representatives of the California communities about the city and by contingents from the naval base. It is a great thing to have great men of science, religion, education, literature, or other great achievements visit our country. Such visits by men of distinction inspires the youth of our country to undertake great things and achieve great things in similar fields.

MISS MAUDE ROYDEN.—

Miss Maude Royden is resuming her ministry after a break-down in her health. Miss Royden is the world's most famous woman preacher and has been recuperating her health during an extended period in Egypt and has been greatly improved. She will return to her work in the ministry at Eccleston Guildhouse, London, at once and continue her splendid work. There is room for woman's genius, skill, tact, intelligence, culture and accomplishments in the Christian ministry, and such abilities will reap the reward of their merit as in no other field.

PENSION FOR MINISTERS.—

The Methodist Churches of Southern California have been raising during the past few weeks a $300,000 fund to supplement the endowment for their retired preachers, and at the present time, while they are not entirely through with the campaign, they are far enough along to be assured of success in their undertaking, even in time of financial depression. Would it not be a fine thing if the Christian Church could have a similar fund for its retired preachers, so that the prospect of the faithful servants of God, when the shadows of age lengthen, might be lighted up with hope for the comforts of this life till the end of the journey.

NEW MINISTER AT BROOKLYN.—

The Church of the Pilgrims, Brooklyn, N. Y., has elected as its new pastor Rev. John C. Walker, formerly assistant minister of the First Congregational Church, Montclair, N. J. Dr. Walker is a graduate, with a doctor's degree, from Edinburgh, and a master's degree from Union Seminary, and is well qualified to serve this old historic Church with pleasure to himself and honor to the congregation. This is a day and a time in which ministers are being prepared better and better in other denominations, and the Christian Church must wake up to the fact that greater things should be undertaken each year for a better educated ministry.

ENEMIES OF CHRIST.—

It is reported that the American Association for the Advancement of Atheism, which has branches in all the large cities of the country, now has a membership of ten thousand members. Such an organization is the religious, or the best religious, side of Communism from Russia and other radical countries. Its influence is working like deadly poison in our colleges and universities, among our young people in their revolt against all restraint, in their laxity in morality, in their defiance for suggestions from older and wiser council. They may call it freedom, or creative intelligence, inventiveness, initiative or whatever they wish, but atheism is defiance to God and the Christian religion.

COMMUNISM AND CAPITALISM.—

Dr. H. E. Fosdick recently, in a radio sermon, said: "We still have a chance to build a humane, co-operative, economic life that, as Jesus said, will prove itself the greatest because it is the servant of all; but one has only to look abroad upon the world today to see that it is a narrow chance. Communism is rising into a prodigious world power, while all the capitalistic nations are arming themselves to fly at each other's throats and cut themselves to pieces." It seems that Communism and capitalism might adjust themselves to each other in such a manner to conserve the interests of each and save both for mutual destruction, but nothing less than the principles of Christianity will settle their antagonisms.

FUNDAMENTALISTS LOSE CONTROL.—

The fundamentalists in Los Angeles, Calif., have dominated the ministerial association for several years, but recently a change has come by the election of a new group of officers of the more progressive type and more representative of the active pastors of the city. It is time for the fight over fundamentalism and modernism to be over, and a combined front against sin should engage all the energy and intelligence of both branches of the Church. The trend of Christian thought is toward modern methods of thought concerning theology and theological problems. There should be a scientific method in the study of theology based upon the facts of experience rather than traditionalism and authoritarianism.

JOINT COMMUNION.—

A union Communion was recently held in Plainfield, N. J., under the direction of the ministerial council, in which eleven pastors, representing six denominations, and their congregations participated. What more beautiful symbol of the genuineness of their Christian fellowship could have been used during the week of prayer than the Communion taken together along with their co-operative prayer for the great world problems? It is a great thing to find and exercise a wider fellowship among Christian people, though there may be minor differences of administration and theological doctrines. The kingdom of God will include people of the wider fellowship, and it is fine to practice that fellowship to hasten that glad day.

DR. CAMPBELL WHITE RESIGNS.—

Dr. J. Campbell White, former head of the Layman's Missionary Movement and recently secretary of the Church League, has resigned the latter office. He is to be ordained to the United Presbyterian ministry and will accept the pastorate of a small mid-town Church in New York City which has agreed to adopt his program and to become a community Church, with full social-settlement features. The community Church idea is the solution of the small community problem for better religious service. Instead of four or five Churches playing at Church by having only one service each per month, with poorly prepared and poorly paid pastors, with the community Church can have one strong pastor for his full time, with adequate support, giving his full time to real pastoral service and preaching.

EFFICIENT MINISTERS.—

In the Ohio Pastors' Conference, the subjects elected by the members of the convention indicated what interests ministers most. The theme of the conventions was "The Technique of an Efficient Minister," and the program committee split this general topic into eight sub-topics to be considered in two-hour conferences for two consecutive days. These conferences were to take the form of discussion groups. Of the first 209 ministers who filed their advance registrations for the convention, fifty-three asked for the topic, "The Minister as a Preacher"; forty-three asked for "The Minister as a Pastor"; forty-three asked for "As a Student of Present-Day Problems"; twenty-seven requested "As an Administrator"; fifteen studied "The Minister as an Educator"; the three remaining groups are interested primarily with the minister's personal problems and attitudes, rather than with his technical questions. Ten registered for "The Minister and Christian Co-operation"; nine registered for each of the following: "The Minister as a Citizen" and "The Minister as a Man." From this distribution, it is clearly seen where a minister's interest is greatest, viz: as a preacher, which is his first and highest duty; a second interest is in his pastoral work, with the study of present-day problems as of equal interest. There is certainly a sense of need on the part of every wide-awake minister for constant study and better preparation, but frequently it is a question of where best to use his time for study.

NOTES-PERSONALS

"The Christian Annual" out! Being sent to pastors and Churches even before two-thirds of January had elapsed. Three cheers and congratulations to our worthy publishers!

Dr. L. E. Smith, Christian Temple, Norfolk, was unable from sickness to occupy his pulpit Sunday evening, January 18th. Throat trouble and deep cold housed him in for repairs. Dr. N. G. Newman, Holland, Va., supplied for him in his temporary absence.

"Heirs of God and joint heirs with Christ; if so be that we suffer with Him, that we may be also glorified together. For I reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us" (Rom. 8:17-18).

Bro. C. D. Johnston, circulation manager, is making an appeal to pastors to help him out in securing renewals and increasing subscribers to THE CHRISTIAN SUN. We earnestly trust this worthy and timely appeal will be heeded by these faithful ones who are in position to help. The pastors can, if they will; and the cause is urgent.

One of the zealous and fervid workers in Christian education, and with a corps of teachers and an adequate plant, to carry out a great program, is Rev. H. S. Hardcastle, pastor of our Suffolk Church. He believes in preaching the gospel in the old-time way, and he believes also and enthusiastically, in getting hold of the young people and training them also to receive and live the gospel as and when it is preached.

In submitting her first quarterly report of the year as treasurer of the Woman's Board of the Eastern Virginia Conference, Mrs. W. V. Leathers says: "It is the best we have ever had in January." If by some push, pull, prayer or project we could get the men of the Church as much interested in the spiritual task of the Church—missions—as the women are, there would be more spiritual life and power in the Church and the Church would hasten on the glad day of the coming again of our Lord.

We wonder if this can be said of our Christian Churches? It is said by the editor of the Methodist-Protestant of and to his people, which, if true among any people, is nothing less than deplorable: "Three-fourths of the people in almost any Church do not read any missionary literature whatever. How helpless they are unless the preacher brings them the message! Again and again I have heard earnest people say, 'My pastor never preaches on missions.' And then the editor quoted declared quite truly: 'The hearts of the people are hungry for these messages if they are presented rightly. There never was so much material available to aid the preacher as now.'"

At the 11 o'clock service of the Franklin, Va., Church, Sunday, January 18, the Mission Secretary had the privilege of conducting the consecration ceremony for the young child, Joseph Wood Fix, of the pastor and his wife, Rev. and Mrs. J. M. Fix, and also of preaching to a patient and attentive congregation. One of the chief joys, besides that of speaking to this splendid congregation, in visiting Franklin Church is to attend their wide-awake and thriving Sunday School under the faithful and very enthusiastic leadership of Bro. "Ross" Jones. One feels like preaching, or trying to do something that is good, worthy and worth while after going through a session of that Sunday School.

In the passing away of M. A. Reitzel, of Elon College, from his home here on the night of January 22nd, the community loses a quiet, peaceable and beloved neighbor and citizen, and many a student of former days at Elon a warm acquaintance and a good friend. For a generation or more "Uncle Mike," through his mercantile business, came in contact with students who came and went, but none ever found him to be otherwise than honest, faithful, a law-abiding citizen and good friend. He leaves to mourn his going a widow and two daughters—Mrs. J. N. Pridgen, of Raleigh, N. C., and Miss Nannie D. Reitzel. A large concourse attending the funeral and beautiful wreaths of fragrant flowers gave evidence of the esteem and affection in which he was held.

We mourn to learn of the passing away from his home at Henderson, N. C., of our long-time acquaintance and good friend, D. I. Langston. "David" was true, loyal and faithful to the Church of his choice and loved the Church, of which he was a member, from early youth. When in our Church at Henderson we as much expected to see David Langston as we did the pulpit and the pew and the other fixtures of the Church. He passed away Sunday afternoon, January 18th, at the age of fifty-five, leaving to lament his going a widow and five children, besides a host of other relatives and dear friends. The funeral services were conducted from the First Christian Church, Henderson, by the pastor, Rev. H. E. Crutchfield, and interment was in Elmwood Cemetery, Henderson.

J. B. Robertson, of Mexico, Mo., writing in his Church paper, the Christian-Evangelist, says that with which the editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN most heartily agrees: "Books in many fields have value for a minister, but from the point of view of a minister at work at his own God-given task, Stephen J. Corey's 'The Minister and His Missionary Message' is the best book in two years. It is chart and compass, answering 'Whither Bound' for minister and Church. It gives not only point and purpose, but much-needed inspiration from a spirit-filled fellow-traveler, looking toward a fuller ministry in this modern day." How we wish that our ministers and hundreds of CHRISTIAN SUN readers would purchase and read this marvelous book, "The Minister and His Missionary Message." It is so gripping, broad in scope and intense in purpose, that it is deeply beneficial and interesting not only to the minister, but to all and any who will read it.

INCREASING WANTS.

It is estimated, said Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick lately, that a hundred years ago man had seventy-two wants, of which sixteen were regarded as necessities. It is estimated that today man has four hundred and eighty-four wants, of which ninety-four are regarded as necessities. A century ago two hundred different articles were urged upon us by salesmanship. Today there are thirty-two thousand. In the same sermon, Dr. Fosdick quoted John Wesley's advice about property: "Get all you can. Save all you can. Give all you can." Dr. Fosdick said that his own city of New York was very strong on the first two, but had a lot to learn about the third.—Christian Leader.

WINCHESTER, VA.

The Christmas services of our Church were well and rendered in a way that was highly pleasing. On Sunday before Christmas, the young people's choir, under the leadership of Miss Margaret Richards, director, and Miss Anna Amelia Seabright, pianist, rendered excellent programs of Christmas music morning and evening.

Monday evening, under the direction of Mrs. Boyd R. Richards, assisted by Mrs. Roy A. Larrick, Messrs. Roy A. Larrick and Loy Hook, the Christmas pageant of the "Holy Grail" was impressively presented, to the delight of all present. All taking part acquitted themselves well.

Then, as a fitting close of the exercises of the season, on Tuesday evening the children, under the direction of Miss Anna Amelia Seabright and Mrs. R. L. Williamson, with Miss Margaret Richards at the piano, the children pleased parents and friends with a program that reflected credit not only on themselves, but on those who trained them.

R. L. WILLIAMSON.

METHODS CORNER

BY REV. ELISHA A. KING, D. D.

Miami Beach, Fla.

This is the first of a series of familiar talks to ministers and laymen about methods of Church work. It will be the purpose of this "corner" to suggest anything that seems worth while to help make Church work more efficient. Whatever is printed here will be based upon actual experience. Any one may send in suggestions or accounts of unique activities that they may have carried through themselves or seen done in the Churches. Whatever is sent in, however, must be very brief, as space is limited. No answers will be sent to questions unless return postage be included with the inquiry. We seek to be helpful in pointing out ways and means of improving our present methods. It is possible, of course, that nothing we suggest may be used in toto, but if some thought is started, some new idea suggested, the result may be sufficiently rewarding. So here we go. We will start today with a few words about books.

We believe in publicity. That is, publicity for the Church. Let people know that we are alive to our obligations and opportunities. If we have a pageant on Sunday night, have a good write-up in the newspaper giving the characters and names of every person who takes part. Newspapers like names. Let everything be announced in the newspapers. Bulletin-boards are valuable. They can be made of thin boards covered with white newspaper pasted on. Lettering with a brush, whether artistic or not, will tell the story and arouse people. There is usually somebody in the Church who can make posters. High-school boys and girls do such things; why not make them for Church use? Any one who desires to learn to letter or improve his lettering will find help in the following books: "How to Paint Signs and Show Cards," by E. C. Matthews, J. S. Ogilvie Pub. Co., 57 Rose St., N. Y., $1.25; "The Church and Printers' Ink," by Ralph V. Gilbert, Fleming H. Revell Co., N. Y. City, $1.25. Both books are good and are illustrated. Tell the people what you have in the Church, tell them what you are going to do, invite everybody. No minister likes to talk to the "wood family" (empty seats), because they are so uninspiring. Really, it is easy to fill a Church full of people if you have something they want or need, and they know that you have it. Tell them!

CONGREGATIONAL NEWS

REV. E. C. GILLETTE, Editor; REV. F. P. ENSMINGER, and REV. M. J. SWEET, Associates.

DAYTONA BEACH, FLA.: Rev. C. Arthur Lincoln was re-elected president of the Daytona Beach Family Welfare Association at its recent annual meeting. The budget for the association for the year's work was set at $12,000.

THE ANNUAL RELIGIOUS PARLEY will be held at Rollins College March 12-14th, this year. Dr. Everett R. Clinchy will direct the parley. This is especially planned to interest the thinking college young people in an earnest discussion of the problems of religion.

DR. SCOTT FUNK HERSHEY, pastor of the Church at Lake Helen, Fla., was stricken with a shock on Saturday, January 10th. According to latest reports, he was slowly recovering. The sympathy of all is extended to Dr. and Mrs. Hershey and the hope for a full recovery.

SHERWOOD COMMUNITY CHURCH, in Tennessee, is an example of an organization that has carried on well for months with supplies instead of pastor, having services each Sunday. This is due to the interested efforts of Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Miller and Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Willis.

ENVELOPE SERIES: For all those who are interested in foreign missions, there can be no better investment than 10 cents sent as a subscription for the envelope series of small booklets published by the education department of the American Board. Address them at 14 Beacon Street, Boston, Mass.

APPORTIONMENT RAISED: The following Churches in Florida raised their apportionment in 1930: Avon Park, Fort Myers, Interlachen, Lake Helen, Lake Worth, Miami Beach, Miami Shores, Palm City, West Tampa, Winter Park. Avon Park not only raised its apportionment, but raised the 20 per cent increase asked under the plan of advance.

MID-WINTER MEETING: The annual meeting of the Mission Boards and superintendents has been held during the past week at the First Congregational Church, Evanston, Ill. This item is being written before the meeting, and a fuller report of the meeting will be given next week. The meeting is an important one, at which all matters concerning missionary budgets, apportionments and programs are considered and discussed.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S BULLETIN is issued for leaders of young people in Congregational and Christian Churches by the Education Society, Rev. Harry Thomas Stock, editor. It is a bulletin brimming full of suggestions, help, challenging programs and inspirational material. No worker among young people and no leader among young people themselves can afford to be without it. If you do not now have it, send to the Education Society, 14 Beacon Street, Boston, Mass.

MISS PATTIE LEE COGHILL is holding a series of weekly teacher-training classes during a five-week period at West Palm Beach, Jupiter, Palm City and Melbourne. She has also recently visited the Church and Sunday School at New Port Richey, and also Coconut Grove and Coral Gables. During March, she participates in another series of interdenominational leadership-training institutes at Lake Worth, Orlando, Tampa, Sanford and Fort Myers.

ANNUAL MEETINGS: Many Churches have been holding their annual meetings. We have not received reports from most of them. Word comes from Winter Park "all bills paid and apportionment of $1,500 raised. The year of 1930 was a hard one for Churches as well as business, and many Churches suffered from bank failures and business conditions and cannot report "all bills paid." Nevertheless, there has been splendid courage and fine loyalty as the Churches have faced difficult situations.

THREE ALABAMA PASTORS who farm to make a living that will enable them to preach, are rejoicing after a hard experience. Because of the lower interest charge, they had borrowed money from the Federal Land Bank, which must foreclose on land if interest payments are defaulted. The drought and low price of cotton had left them without any money when interest came due. The local banks would not lend money to cotton farmers, and their friends were without ready means. They hoped and fought against despair. Some friends helped, and now all three farms are free and there is much rejoicing and thanksgiving to God.

EAST TALLAHASSEE CHURCH is an interesting place to a little nine-year-old girl, as reported in "Briefs," printed by the Tallahassee Mills. She had been going to Church and Sunday School a long way from her home, but it was so far from where she lived that she started going to the Church closer to her home. This Church, she said, was not anything much to begin with, but after a long time Preacher Barker commenced preaching in the Church and had it painted white, got a choir built, and then a pretty walk in front of the Church. She went on to say: "Mrs. Ethel came into the Church and started Ladies' Aid. Then they started Men's Aid, and they went on without a superintendent—just Ladies' Aid and Men's Aid." Later, the preacher's daughter got a letter from the superintendent, telling her to start a Christian Endeavor, and they organized a junior Christian Endeavor. "I joined," the little girl said, "and I just love to go. We have preaching at 11 and at night. My uncle, who is crippled, goes to Church there. I like Sunday School, Church and Christian Endeavor." The Men's Aid, which is mentioned here, was a grouping into which the women persuaded the men to go. It is chiefly financial, consisting largely of the exercise of paying dues. The women see to it that the men continue their Men's Aid. The Church has made many improvements in recent months, has an excellent orchestra, and is developing a good Church program.

PRAYER CIRCLE FOR WORLD SERVICE.

Are you using the Prayer Cycle? If not, we recommend that you send 25 cents to the office of the Commission of Missions, 287 Fourth Avenue, New York. We are sure you will receive and share a blessing by enrolling in the prayer group. Dr. Alden H. Clark writes concerning it: "You will agree with us, we are sure, that the way to make our world-wide missionary work spiritually more effective is to give it a larger place in our interest, our sympathy and our prayer. This is the purpose for which the Prayer Cycle for World Service is published. All great missionary enterprises started in intelligent interest and in prayer. The Prayer Cycle invites all who see it to intelligent interest and daily prayer. The editor, Mrs. Daniels, strikes a high note of spiritual challenge and aspiration. She brings before us in a vivid way the wide range of missionary work of our Churches.

EVANGELISM IN THE NEW YEAR.

Dr. Frederick L. Fagley, secretary of the Commission on Evangelism and Devotional Life has issued a four-page folder as a new-year message, bearing the above title. Concerning the evangelistic challenge, he says: "The way in which we respond to the evangelistic challenge of our day will have great meaning and influence. By the evangelistic challenge of our day, I mean this: that men's souls in this bewildered day need desperately the proclamation of the good news; the good news preached by Jesus Christ on which the Spirit of truth which He promised has thrown a flood of new light so that today we live in an ordered and righteous universe; that every new truth which is brought to light fits into all that we have known before; the truth prevails in this universe, and if any man believes for a moment that he can "get by" with falsehood in thought or character, he is simply setting himself at cross-purposes with the universe; that back of all we know and see is reason and truth which, through our deepest experiences, we know to be attributes of the Divine personality revealed by Jesus as our Father whose true name is Love. What a day in which to preach the unsearchable riches of faith and of knowledge of God and His universe! In order to meet this challenge, the Church must go about its work in a sensible as well as a determined way. And the sensible thing to do is to formulate a definite evangelistic program of preaching and of teaching and to carry through that program with entire fidelity."

Concerning the program, he says: "The program adopted by the Church must vary according to circumstances. Certain essential elements should, however, be considered. (1) The best evangelism is personal in character; (2) the best program is one that the Church itself has made, or made its own; (3) the evangelistic program must be accompanied by great preaching (the kind of preaching that helps men's souls); (4) the evangelistic program must be accompanied by effective teaching (teaching that reaches the will and the emotions as well as the intellect); (5) the plan adopted must work toward a definite goal, and it is greatly helped if there is a definite time schedule."

He then discusses such subjects as "Evangelism with Children and Youth," "The Pastor's Class," "Evangelism with Adults," "The Workers," "The Field," "The Goal," "Special Meetings," "Reception and Care of New Members," and finally "For Your Assistance," a statement concerning the literature prepared by the Commission on Evangelism.

NOT FOR OURSELVES ONLY.

But, while caring for our Church building, let us also care worthily for the great objects for which a Church exists. A Church that lives only for itself utterly misrepresents Christ, and such Church is not a living Church but a dying Church. Measureless blessings, seen and unseen, come to a Church that faithfully strives to carry out the will of Christ. A Church, to live and grow and command the blessings of Christ, must go with Christ's gospel, through all proper agencies, to help every human being possible. "To give is to live, to withhold is to die."—Geo. W. Truett.

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to commune or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

WHAT IS HUMANISM?

There are many humanists who do not profess to be such. They are humanists, in fact, without knowing it. They have not adopted the word, nor are they concerned about it. The philosophy of humanism, however, is their guiding philosophy. Fact is, the humanists have simply coined the word out of a prevailing belief of our time. Our Church pews on the Sabbath are occupied by not a few humanists, and our pulpits are by no means destitute of them. They are the folks who are saying that humanity is enough; that if they do a kindness, or render a service, or give a helping hand to human beings, they have done enough, and all that is needful. They think only in terms of human beings. They will tell you that service to humanity is not only the open road, but the only road, to all that there is of "salvation." The straight and narrow way of faith in God and belief in the power of the Son of God to redeem and save, is disregarded by the humanists and made the broad way of favor, benevolence or "charity" to human beings.

Humanism is an attempt to enjoy and to capitalize the fruits of Christianity without an attempt, or the self-denying effort, to cultivate the tree that bears the fruit. Humanism plucks the rose, smells its fragrance and passes it around for others to enjoy, with no thought whatever about the process of planting or cultivating the bush that grew the rose. The humanists exalt and revel in the achievements of Christianity, but absolutely ignore the Christ of Christianity and the God who brought about the achievement.

Reduced to its finality, the distinction between genuine Christianity and real humanism is that Christianity is Christ-centered; humanism is man-centered. Christianity says that Christ alone is sufficient for these things, and in Him is the power of God unto salvation." Humanism says that "humanity alone is sufficient for these things" and that "he who gives a cup of cold water to a human being who is thirsty shall in no wise lose his reward." Humanism thus ignores God and puts Christ out of the picture. The danger of humanism is that it goes to the Bible for much of its philosophy, and its argument, as in the above quotation.

Our Lord never taught that "if a man gives a cup of cold water he shall in no wise lose his reward." Notice just what the Bible says (Matt. 10:42): "Whosoever shall give to drink unto one of these little ones a cup of cold water only in the name of a disciple, verily I say unto you he shall in no wise lose his reward." To leave out the words, as the humanists invariably do, "in the name of a disciple," tears the heart out of this Scripture and leaves it bleeding and helpless in the hands of its ruthless victim—the humanist. In the verses previous to this, our Lord was talking about His disciples, and how, through His teaching and their relationship to Him, He and they had become identified, as the following in the context indicates: "He that loseth his life for my sake shall find it. He that receiveth you receiveth me, and he that receiveth me receiveth Him that sent me." All this was preparing the way for the broad principle of ministry indicated by giving the cup of water "in the name of a disciple."

Following the matter further, Mark, in his gospel, makes it even clearer and more forceful from the divine point of view than Matthew (Mark 9:41): "For whosoever shall give you a cup of water to drink in my name, because ye belong to Christ, verily I say unto you, he shall not lose his reward." Here Mark, by repetition, links up the giving with the real power and the personality that was to be behind the giving and in whose name the giving is done. This repetition being indicated "in my name," and, lest that be ignored, he repeats, "because ye belong to Christ." Yet, the humanist leaves Christ out entirely and brazenly stands up before the world or sits in the pew on the Sabbath in the institution, the Church, the very Body of Christ, and says: "Service to your fellow-man is sufficient."

It is doubtful if there is a more pernicious or insidious doctrine than this today. No wonder a great student of religion and sociology said a while ago, "The next most pernicious thing to vice in our day is that so-called virtuous word called 'charity.'" By charity he meant handing out a dole, or giving a helping hand to some one in need; and taking all the credit of it to one's self, patting one's self on the chest, as the Pharisee did, and say, "I am not as other men, because I help others and give not a little to those about me in need."

A recent writer, in defining humanism, says: "It denies the trustworthiness of God and affirms the trustworthiness of man. Humanism is a defense of things as they are, while Christianity is a protest against things as they are and a crusade for things as they ought to be. The humanistic heaven is not the eternal fruition of earthly dreams and efforts, but the full realization of human happiness here and now." There is a definition which many of us learned in childhood, "The chief end of man is to glorify God and enjoy Him forever." Humanism would change all this and declare, "That the chief end of man is to glorify man and enjoy the fruits of his labor."

In brief, humanism is a refuge "for those who want the values of Christianity without the responsibility of keeping the faith."

Humanism is not enough. It's an abstraction; it's a glorification of man; it's a subterfuge; it's a substitute. The Church of the day is saturated with it, and the world is revelling in it. Humanism has come out of Christianity and owes its life and existence to Christianity and, in some aspects, it's a noble product, but it degenerates into ingratitude and illegitimacy when it kicks down the ladder on which it has climbed so high, and substitutes the values of Christianity for the validity of Christ, who is none other than the one who said: "No one cometh unto the Father but by me," and of whom it is said in Holy Writ, and now verified through the experience of the ages, "Neither is there salvation in any other: for there is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved." NO SUBSTITUTE FOUND.

Almost every Church gathering, from the Federal Council to the "quarterly meeting" of the local Church, declares that the demand of the present is for evangelism. Without doubt, churchmen everywhere realize that the greatest need of the Church at the present is evangelism. Having said this, the real problem emerges. Ministers and pastors on all sides are declaring that a successful evangelistic meeting, or campaign, is carried on under increasingly difficult circumstances. Pastors puzzle their minds, burden their hearts, ransack their mental laboratories trying to solve the problem of evangelism and discover the best methods of reviving the Church and enlarging the Church roll. It is a problem.

Mr. Hermon Eldredge, writing recently in the Congregationalist and Herald of Gospel Liberty, says: "We know that such emotional outbursts" (such as comes from singing a song like "Since Jesus Came Into My Heart") "are looked down on these days by the 'intelligentia,' and any Church is poor, indeed, which builds on emotions alone, but there are too many of our Churches that have dropped the old emotional religion which they have tired of and have not adopted anything worth while to take the place of it."

Admit, if one will, that the "revival" is not productive of results as it once was; admit further that it was more or less surcharged with emotionalism; admit also that it is increasingly difficult to hold a successful revival—a sufficient and valid substitute has not been found. The chief business of the Church is evangelism—that of delivering the evangel of our Lord to those who have not heard or, hearing, have not given heed to and acceptance of that evangel.

But the Churches and faithful pastors, difficult as the task is, have not given up. The situation is not hopeless. The Church is not idle or unconcerned. The fact that Church assemblies, "where two or three are gathered together," are seeking a way out, trying with candor and consecration to find the solution, gives hope that the way will be found. The Federal Council and other Church councils, large and little, meeting in the closing weeks of the year 1930 and in the opening weeks of 1931, have declared that the way must be found, that the work of evangelism must be carried on, that the evangelistic note must be the clarion call of the near future, that the Church must exalt the Christ, and that under His leadership the way must be found that will again revive the Church and bring the unbelieving multitudes to a belief in Him in whom alone is sufficiency of life. THE PREACHER AND HIS SERMONIZING.

BY REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE.

(This paper was read and discussed at the monthly meeting of the Eastern Virginia Ministerial Association, Norfolk, Va., Monday, January 19th, and this association asked its publication in The Sun. If read, it will prove of great interest and concern not only to patrons but to the general reader as well. It is a very able and timely paper.—Editor.)

I.

No agency of religion is older than preaching. It is as old as the Bible itself, for Noah, the eighth person, was a "preacher" of righteousness (2 Peter 2:5). It held a prominent place in Old Testament times, coming to its fruition in the prophets. It was the method which John the Baptist used in preparing the way for the one who should come. And when Jesus Himself began His public ministry, He came preaching—"From that time, Jesus began to preach" (Matt. 4:17). Jesus in turn sent His disciples out to "preach the kingdom of God (Luke 9:2). The record of the apostolic Church bears witness to the fact that they took Jesus literally, for preaching had a prominent place in the work of the apostles. And when the early Church burst the bonds of Judaism and became conscious of its world mission, it went as a preaching Church, with Paul as its representative. It was Paul himself who said that "it pleased God, by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believed" (1 Cor. 1:21). Furthermore, preaching has always had a large and a legitimate place in the work of the Church. The great revivals have usually been characterized by dynamic preaching. This is true, for the agency for the spreading of a religion of persuasion must be preaching. Preaching is a necessary adjunct of a religion that is communicated to man by means of an objective and authoritative revelation, such as we have in the sacred Scriptures. The fact, therefore, that preaching has had such a large place in the work of the Church is not due to a mere whim of man or an arbitrary decree of God, but to the inherent nature of religion, and to the adaptability of preaching to that end.

Now, all this has meaning for the modern minister. It should remind him of the importance of preaching, and guard him against the subtle tendency in so many quarters, to crowd preaching out of the services of worship, or to minimize the sermon when it is included. Preaching still has a place in Christianity, and it always will have a place as long as Christianity is Christianity and as human nature is human nature. Let no ministry accept any substitute for this divinely appointed means of saving them that believe. Let every minister keep clearly in mind that preaching is his main business; that is, it is the heart of his prophetic office.

It should go without saying that the place and importance of preaching should challenge every minister to see to it that his sermonizing is done in as thorough a manner as possible, and in a spirit of deep consecration. In a sense, the sermon is the high spot of the preacher's life, and any man who grasps the significance and the possibilities of the sermon will not dare to come to his pulpit with careless preparation or in a merely formal or mechanical way. He will seek so to arrange his time and so to discipline all his powers that he will know and his people will know that the sermon represents his best. There will be, of course, circumstances which will make it impossible for the preacher to make as thorough preparation as he would like, and there will be also many times when he will come to the service ill prepared through no fault of his own. But let every minister hold a high ideal for himself for his sermons, and let him, with undiscourageable resolution, lay hold upon himself and upon circumstances, and let him give to the preparation of his sermons the amount of time and thought and prayer which they deserve and demand. As a great preacher once said, "Preaching that costs nothing, accomplishes nothing." "Let every man study to show himself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth," or as Dr. Goodspeed puts it, "Do your best to win God's approval as a workman who has nothing to be ashamed of, but rightly shapes the message of truth" (2 Tim. 2:15).

If preaching has such an integral place in the Christian program, and if the preacher ought, therefore, to make his sermonizing as effective as possible, how shall he go about it? What factors are there in preparing a sermon? What principles under efficient sermonizing? In answer to these questions, it needs to be said at once that there is no hard and fast rule that will apply to one and all alike. There is no Medo-Persian law in regard to sermon preparation. The method which one man uses would be utterly impractical for another man. For instance, it is said that Spurgeon, a truly great preacher, was in the habit of preparing his sermons at the last minute, his Sunday morning sermon being prepared either late Saturday night or early Sunday morning, and his Sunday evening sermon being prepared on Sunday afternoon or evening. Now that was undoubtedly a good plan for Spurgeon, but it certainly would not be a safe plan for the average minister to follow. There have been occasions, perhaps when all of us have been obliged to prepare our sermons at the last minute, and it sometimes seems that there was more of vitality in them than in some of the sermons over which we had worked for a long time. But the very emergency threw us upon the resources of God, and thus made us the more responsive instrument to the Spirit of God. It would not be the safe nor the fair thing for the average minister to adopt Spurgeon's plan as his regular practice in his sermonizing. On the other hand, there have been, and are ministers who because they are primarily preaching ministers, spend the entire week in preparing their sermons, and in some cases they preach only once at that. But again, if the average minister spent the entire week in preparing his sermons, his general work would suffer. Every man must discover and adopt the plan which, in all respects, is best adapted to him. But every man ought to follow certain general principles which, regardless of his individual method, will enable him to prepare and preach better sermons. These principles may be grouped under two heads, the first dealing with general preparation, and the second dealing with specific preparation.

General Preparation.

The first essential to really helpful and inspiring preaching is holy living. Men may be fluent speakers and even great orators, but unless they are good men they cannot do real preaching. The message is, of course, greater than the man, because it is of God, but the message comes through the man. The preacher's life is the life of his preaching. There is no substitute for holiness of life in the preacher who is supposed to be a man of God. If any one doubts this statement, let him read Paul's letters to Timothy and carefully note the emphasis which Paul puts upon Timothy's manner of life as compared with the emphasis which he puts upon Timothy's doctrine. Throughout these letters, written as a father to a son, there is an impassioned plea for a life of righteousness, godliness, faith, love, patience, meekness and purity. Paul knew that only such a life would enable a man really to preach. Every minister, therefore, should give heed to his manner of life. He cannot play fast and loose with the great fundamental ideals of the Christian life through the week and then expect to find any spiritual glow in either his sermon preparation or its delivery. Let every man who has been accounted worthy to preach the gospel of the Son of God give diligence to make his calling and his election sure in his private and his public life. Failure here is fatal.

Another aspect of a preacher's general preparation for sermonizing is his private devotional life. This is related to, but goes beyond, what has just been said. A man may be a good man and still lack that fullness and radiance of spiritual life which will give life and power to his preaching. Preaching is primarily a spiritual enterprise—the words that we speak should have spirit, and they should have life. But they will not have spirit and life unless they come from the overflow of a deep and real spiritual experience in the preacher which in turn is the result of an intimate and growing friendship with God. The minister who neglects his devotional life impoverishes the spiritual content and impact of his message. A minister, above all others, must "take time to be holy." He must be still and know God. He must have that growth in grace which comes from a regular and reverent reading of the Bible, from meditation, from prayer, from quiet, unhurried communion with the Father who seeth in secret, if he is to speak a message that calls to the deep places in the spiritual lives of his hearers. The hustle of our modern life, and the demands of our modern programs, constitute real menaces to the spiritual life of the modern minister. Many a minister, if he were honest, would be compelled to say what the servant of the king of Israel, into whose hands a man had been committed for safe keeping, said, "And as thy servant was busy here and there, the man was gone." Alas for the minister who, because he is eternally busy here and there, even with good things, has lost the man, the finer, spiritual man.

Then, too, the matter of general reading enters into the general preparation of sermons. Back of every sermon which a man prepares there ought to be a background of general reading. The wider and the more varied a man's general reading, the greater the wealth of material which he can bring to the sermon, and the richer and the fuller of meaning he can make it. This reading should not be confined simply to religious books and magazines. History, science, biography, poetry, fiction—there are so many good books that will broaden a man's knowledge, enrich his culture, and help him in his interpretation of life and the application of the principles of the gospel thereto.

And yet a word of warning is in order here. A man may read too much and think too little. One of the most subtle dangers in the matter of a minister's reading is the tendency to read everything else except the Bible. In spite of the fact that the Bible is the world's greatest store-house of the records of God's dealings with men, is the most complete and interesting reference work on human nature, and is the source and stimulus of much that is finest and best in the spiritual life of man, there are many ministers who turn to it, as a rule, only when they want a text or an appropriate Scripture lesson. Every minister ought to know the Bible and know it in its comprehensiveness. His general reading should include a constant and comprehensive reading of the Word of God. He who knows God and who knows the Word of God will never be at a loss for sermonic material.

A very vital factor in sermon preparation is pastoral calling. There are those who look askance at pastoral calling and who consider it a waste of time to devote time that they think could

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Whatever may be thought, said or written about any department of the Southern Christian Convention, THE CHRISTIAN SUN is the most important agent in serving all departments and the local Churches. It is the medium through which all members learn of what has been done, what is being done, and what is to be done. The two great factors in carrying on the work of the Convention, in its departments and in the local Churches, are the pastor and THE CHRISTIAN SUN. The pastor could hardly exist, as a pastor, without THE SUN; and THE SUN could hardly exist without the pastor. They co-operate without any formal agreement, but it is essentially a mutual expression of unity in the Lord's work. Since these are facts, and facts are stubborn things, there is a real obligation upon the pastor to support THE SUN, and that can be done only by increasing the list of subscribers.

It will, no doubt, be admitted that no regular subscriber and reader of THE CHRISTIAN SUN neglects his or her Church obligations in attendance, loyalty or contributions. If such a member can be found, it will be considered a great favor to report the same (privately) to the "Suffolk Letter" writer. If it is true that regular members of the Church who are regular readers of THE CHRISTIAN SUN are faithful members, then THE SUN is the best helper the pastor has. Following this, as an expression of what THE SUN does for the Church, preachers could do no better service than to make an honest and personal effort to increase the number of subscribers in their congregations. This suggestion is based on the value of THE SUN and its present need.

There are in the Southern Christian Convention one hundred pastors and thirty-two thousand members, and there are more than two hundred Churches. That means that there are, say, six thousand families. There are, of course, many individual members without families. It would not be a bad average to say that each pastor will strive to get a regular subscriber to THE SUN for every family. If that is too much to work for, split the number in half and say three thousand subscribers in the six thousand families. This estimate has been made on the idea of five members to a family. It would be a great service to the Church if one hundred pastors could secure 2,000 new subscribers to THE CHRISTIAN SUN. It would increase their attendance, the benevolent contributions, their salaries, and their spiritual influence in the communities where they preach and serve as pastors. The necessity for increase in the number of subscribers to THE CHRISTIAN SUN is a real challenge to pastors that is worthy of their real effort.

ELON LETTER.

When I conceived of teaching as a recitation, it was easy to proceed. "Get the next chapter or the next twenty-seven pages," I would say, and then when the class met in its next session I would prod the minds of my group—I had almost said my victims—with questions to discover how well they had covered the text. Preparation, presentation, assimilation, generalization, application—what a simple process! And how lacking in vitality! Students always rejoice when the teacher is absent from such a session, such an ordeal. It lacks motivation. It lacks life.

If education is the acquisition of knowledge, and if the teacher is a taskmaster to see that the knowledge is acquired, then the recitation method is ideal. But if education is understanding, and if the teacher is the growing person's assistant, guide, counselor, stimulator in arriving at understanding, then the recitation method is doomed. Even the so-called tool subjects of the curriculum can be transformed from tasks to be learned to projects to be pursued by skillful motivation. A professor of mathematics was scheduled to teach a class in the calculus. He said nothing about a textbook, but gave a number of engineering problems which they were urged to work out in any way they could. Some were solved by algebra, some by analytical geometry, some by trial and error. After some weeks of this sort of procedure, the professor took these same problems which his students had solved with such difficulty and showed them how simple the solution was when the calculus was used. He then gave them a textbook, which they mastered with avidity, finishing it three weeks ahead of another section taught by the traditional recitation method.

Last September I faced a group of ten juniors and seniors in religious education. At the first session many possible fields of investigation were suggested by the conference—discussion method. The psychology of religion, the philosophy of religion, comparative religion, the organization and administration of religious education, the total educational task of the Church, the curriculum of religious education, teaching methods in religious education, etc., were presented. Each possible course was investigated and evaluated. Two months were gone before we decided on the total educational task of the Church as our field of interest for the year.

Each step is a group decision. All decisions are tentative. The group is at liberty to turn aside at any time to pursue a lead that promises understanding. No textbook is used, but it is certain that each member of the group has made larger use of textbooks and other sources of information than would have been the case if the recitation method should have been employed. It is the hope that when the year is over, each of the ten will know the literature of the field and how to seek its light on any problem that may arise. It is further hoped that the ability to think for one's self will also be a result of the procedure.

The teacher in this process is companion in investigation and discovery. This may not be education, but it is interesting and it is leading to understanding, or so it seems.

WORK AND WAGES.

Jesus placed a premium on work when He said, "My Father works and I work." Jesus worked as a carpenter, preacher, teacher and healer; and at the close of His life brought His finished work to His Father for inspection, approval and reward. Manual labor is dignified both by the teachings and example of Jesus, which is in opposition to the Greeks and Romans who despised it. With Him, work was even one means of worship: "Father, I have glorified Thee on earth, having accomplished the work which Thou hast given me to do" (as a carpenter for thirty years and a world-redeemer for three years and a half).

Christ still further dignified toil by calling His earliest disciples from the ranks of manual laborers.

Work is not a curse of the fall of man, but a blessing to the race. Life is only worth while as it is measured in terms of work, and as a consequence of this, every man has the right to an opportunity to work. The Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man determine the relations, conditions, terms and spirit of employers and employees. The interests of employers and employees are mutual, and corresponding conduct is at the basis of all progress. The spirit of co-operation should lead to the settlement of all disputes, including those of labor, by conciliation and arbitration.

Where ability is equal, the quantity of work done determines relative merit; where ability varies, then it is not the absolute quantity of work done, but the ratio of the quantity to the ability. But, however great the diligence and zeal displayed or the amount of work done may be, no work can have any real value in the kingdom of God which proceeds from an impure motive. This is set forth in the parable of laborers in the vineyard.

"The laborer is worthy of his hire," and the hire must be worthy of the laborer. This implies the right to a living wage and the prompt payment of wages. By a living wage is not meant merely enough to keep soul and body together. There must be sufficient to live a decent and fairly comfortable, a cleanly and noble life. A non-living wage is sometimes due to indifference or ignorance, but often to greed of employers. Too low wages are responsible for about one-half the cases of primary poverty. A living wage is ethically and economically reasonable. Such wages would render child-labor and that of many women unnecessary.

Unsanitary work conditions, non-safeguarding in dangerous trades, non-provisions of old-age pensions, and lower wages paid to women who do the same work as men are sins against the working-men and women. Some of the sins of the working men are: refusal to allow another to take the place given up in case of strikes, proportioning the amount of work which a workman may be able and willing to do (either to his own profit or that of his employer) to the amount done by the least efficient workman, personal violence to non-union men, lack of interest in one's work (working by the clock).

The many and varied schemes now so vigorously undertaken by employers, of conciliation, co-operation, profit-sharing, and industrial partnership, represent a candid recognition of the fact that the wage system in its bare economic form must be supplemented, if it is not supplanted; that the line of division between employer and employed must be effaced by fraternalism, if it is not to be obliterated by socialism. Schemes of industrial reform must be incorporated with the business, adapted to the type of industry concerned, and charged to production. The proper payment for them is not gratitude, but loyalty. They are one form of evidence that the industrial order, imperfect as it is, may be developed by intelligence and ingenuity into a system of mutual advantage, which is certainly more accessible and may perhaps be more durable than the vague ventures which social revolution now so lightly proposes to make. God appreciates and rewards justly and generously all work, basing His judgment on the work's quantity, quality, spirit and social value. We should do our best with a full consecration to Him.

TITHING.

When we deal with the subject of tithing, we are dealing with a matter of supreme importance in its relation to Christian life, and it is also a subject that is much neglected by teachers and preachers of the gospel. Therefore, believing it to be a principle, rather than an expedient, I wish to treat the subject with that thought in mind.

In the first place, I want to state that tithing is not a Mosaic nor Jewish law, as some will say, but it is a law of the human race. This is proved by the fact that clay tablets found in the ruins of ancient cities show that it was practiced hundreds of years before the father of the Jewish race was born. We read in the first book of the Bible about Abraham paying tithes long before Moses came on the scene, so that it seems clear that it was neither Mosaic nor simply Jewish. But let us remember that the fact that it was an ancient custom does not prove that it is not fundamental in the teachings of Christian living today. The fact that Christ placed His approval upon it settles that for us, once and for all.

I believe that one of the principal mistakes frequently made in presenting the subject of tithing is that we consider it chiefly from the financial standpoint. This defeats our purpose in the very outset, because the money side of the question is not the one of major importance. It seems to me that one of the main purposes in teaching tithing is to get men to put God and His kingdom first in their lives. With many professing Christians, self, pleasure, home and business come first, and if there is anything left after these have received their portion of time, energy and money, the cause of God may get some. This order must be reversed, and when one is asked to practice tithing he is asked to establish a life principle of putting God first. This will not only get the tithe, but the tither also, and will give him a new and larger vision of the Christian life in all its relations. I think, too, that tithing should be thought of as an act of worship. True worship comes from the heart and consists of yielding all that we have and are to God. This includes our possessions, and since the tithe has to do with possessions, the true worshiper will want to fit into God's financial plan for his life. A careful study of the Scriptures, together with the testimony of many who have tried it, will prove that tithing is God's plan for the promotion of His kingdom on earth.

Another good reason for tithing is that it teaches system. The majority of professing Christians want to give as they feel like it, and the probability is that a good share of the time they will not feel like it. Men do not conduct their worldly business in such a haphazard, slipshod manner, and Christians should be ashamed to think of trying to carry on the work of God's kingdom without adopting His financial plan, which He so plainly states in Mal. 3:10.

One of the features of tithing that is worthy of note is that it places the person engaged in it in the proper adjustment to the promises of God, where God agrees to bless that individual. The Lord throws down the challenge, as it were, and bids us to prove Him by bringing all the tithes into the storehouse. Now, when we have fulfilled our part of the matter, God will fulfill His promise and not one word of all His good promises ever fails.

I wish, in closing this paper, to make one or two more observations. One is this, that the practicing of tithing means taking God into partnership in a correct way that will mean great benefit to any one. God furnishes brains, skill, strength and money with which to work, and we use it to His glory and return to Him what is due, and are made much happier and successful in our business career. God allows us to pay out the tenth to His glory after we consult Him, and when we enter this kind of partnership with Him we will delight in paying the tithe to whom it belongs.

My last thought is that the tithe is distinctly a debt, and not a gift. We pay and not give it. We would not insult our banker by offering to "give" him the interest we owe him, neither do we "give" the grocer the bill we owe him. Yet the tithe is fully as much of a debt as either of the old matters. We are all living under the law of the tithe, and we can obey it and reap the reward which honest men enjoy in paying their debts, or we can disobey it and suffer the penalties of disobedience. One penalty of neglecting the tithe is that it fosters covetousness. May God deliver us from this prevalent sin and help us to see the beauty of being Bible Christians.—Rev. J. F. Insley, in Wesleyan Methodist.

MAM LANGUAGE TRANSLATED.

Of the many languages spoken by the Indians of Central America, in only eleven has any part of the Bible been translated and printed. The eleventh language just added to this list is Mam, spoken by some 200,000 Indians in Guatemala. The American Bible Society has just received at its headquarters in New York City the first copies of the Gospel of John printed in this language and published at the Mission Press, at Quezaltenango, Guatemala, with the aid of the American Bible Society and Pioneer Mission Agency.

Mam is the most archaic branch of the Mayan family of languages, and has many of the throaty gutturals and explosives that are so difficult for the language-workers to identify and express in written form. When a Mam Indian opens the book and reads that well-loved verse, John 3:16, it will look like this: "Kun icsunju ulakjanmi Dios quij xjal, tun tsunju tsajtgon ocxcujun Tkual, tuntsun jniyu intxontanmi tij, mlai cubxitj, tuntsun titen angkbil jumajx."

Translation work has been done by the Rev. and Mrs. Dudley Peck, of the Presbyterian Mission, ably assisted by several native workers. Although a rough translation of the entire New Testament is now being made, progressing with the aid of two translators, at an average of a chapter a day, very careful study of the language is planned so that further publication shall be in the best form of the language and useful to the whole Mam group. Four districts have been selected, in which the newly published Gospel of John will be tried out and more effective wordings noted. Reading classes are also being held for Mam leaders in which this gospel will be used as a textbook. As the translators will serve as teachers in these classes they will have a splendid opportunity to study the effectiveness of their translation.

The burial place of three great kings of Ur of the Chaldees has been discovered in Mesopotamia, says a joint announcement of the British and the University of Pennsylvania Museums. They are the tombs of Ur-Engur, who built the magnificent Ziggurat or temple at Ur; his son, Dungi, and his grandson, Bur-Sin. The earliest of them reigned over Ur, said to have been the early home of Abraham, 4,300 years ago. All three kings ruled during the so-called Golden Age of Ur's history, and their tombs collectively are said to constitute one of the most monumental ruins existing in Mesopotamia.

Holman Jewel Testament
INDIA PAPER ONLY—Size 2½x4½ inches x¾ inch
The JEWEL is the latest and most attractive Pocket Testament made.

The TYPE is black, bold and larger than that in the famous Vest Pocket edition, and the book itself is smaller. It is printed exclusively on the famous Holman India paper, noted for its opaque quality and unusual tensile strength. One advantage of this India paper is that the leaves do not cling together.

The size, 2½x4½ inches, is so small that the book practically fits the palm of the hand.

The GEM TESTAMENT has been steadily growing in popular favor ever since its first appearance. In size, 3½x4½ inches, it is not much larger than the Vest Pocket. It is also the only Testament of its size with large bold type and pronouncing text.

The edition on India paper is ideal, and we know of no better gift at the price than one in the finer bindings.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Secretary.

A PRAYER.

(January.)

O great Jehovah, God of all time and eternity, hear. Thou who changest not, whose covenant with man never can fail, forgive, we pray, the weakness which causes us sometimes to forget our covenant with Thee. As the scroll of time rolls back another year, cover, O God, every blot and blotch, every deed and word of shame or hurt. Behind Jesus' cross of pain and love hide even the trace of soil and stain, and day by day as turns to view the fresh, clean page may it not become sullied by the record of unforgiven committed sin or the sadder doom, "Ye did it not." In our Saviour's name. Amen.

MISSIONARY STATISTICS.

Not a few CHRISTIAN SUN readers wish to know where our merged Mission Board (Congregational-Christian) is at work, how many missionaries are on the field, the total membership, the increase last year, etc. The following undertakes to answer the inquiry and give the facts as now available in the "Year Book of Missions, 1931," of the American Board (the name under which the merged boards work):

The countries in which we are now doing missionary work are Africa, China, India-Ceylon, Japan, Micronesia, papal lands (Czechoslovakia, Mexico and Spain), Philippines, Near East (including Turkey, Greece and Syria) and Bulgaria. In these countries the board now has 649 missionaries, of whom 224 are men, 425 are women. (Of this number, there are 46 physicians.) Native workers, 5,281; Churches, 695, with a membership of 105,442. Added last year 6,641 members. Schools of all grades, 1,345, with an enrollment of 91,221 pupils. To this work, the natives contributed $379,226. As an integral part of the missionary work in these fields, there are numerous hospitals, widows' and orphans' homes, child-welfare centers and dispensaries, and other benevolences growing out of the mission work. For instance, the Neighborhood House, Bombay, is a community center. In its classes were enrolled 465 pupils last year. The Child-Welfare Center and Dispensary, Satara, opened in 1928, has given 1,615 treatments. The American College at Madua has an enrollment of 456. The American Hospital for women and children, Madura, had last year 2,685 in-patients and 14,427 out-patients, with total treatments of 41,862. Jaffna College, in Ceylon, had enrollment of 516 last year. In the Mission Hospital, Cagayan, Misamis, P. I. (where Dr. and Mrs. M. J. White are located), had last year 485 in-patients, gave total dispensary treatments of 2,037, and visits to the sick in homes, 306. The Mission Hospital at Davao, in the Philippines, had 1,800 in-patients, 2,413 dispensary patients who received 6,700 treatments; surgical operations, 1,190.

These statistics of orphanages, hospitals, etc., only indicate the magnitude of the work being done and by no means give the total number of these institutions under the support of the American Board. A recent writer for the board stated that every day an army of 90,000 children and young people march to and from the day schools, colleges and Sunday Schools supported and carried on by the American Board (Congregational-Christian). Truly, a most noble work, and one which should stimulate the pardonable pride, the daily prayers, and the self-denial of all our Congregational-Christian forces. Truly the Lord is bringing great things to pass through the efforts the Churches are putting forth to make Him known even unto the uttermost parts—a work which the Church alone, of all institutions known to man, carries on. Christ instituted the missionary enterprise, and He carries it on only through the Church. If the Church does not do the missionary work, it will never be done. J. O. A.

ISLAMIC DISINTEGRATION.

The solidarity of Islam" is an expression which should never be found in the thought or speech of a Christian missionary. Too often have Church and convention platforms been given to propagators of a spirit of unbelief in the possibilities of work among Moslems by referring to Islam as a "solid rock." Such an attitude is not conducive to faith, zeal and investment in the missionary enterprise.

Mohammedan leaders admit the lack of Islamic unity. Islam never will be united again. The dismembering of the Turkish empire went far to break down that religious cohesion of the Moslem world which was the secret of its power. With the passing of Turkey from the place of Moslem leadership went the potency of the caliphate. The writer was deeply impressed several years ago by the message of an experienced missionary in Palestine who told about the difficulties encountered in preaching under Turkish regime. Missionaries in that very locality have now all the opportunities to preach that they can use, and more. The veteran missionary has lived to baptize Moslem converts where formerly no man would speak to him about Christ.

The wall of Moslem unbelief has not been broken down, of course, but there are plenty of cracks in it. To say that it still presents a solid front is no longer correct. Persia, the fair land that fell an early prey to the Mohammedan sword, is now the scene of a great spiritual movement. Hundreds of Mohammedans have accepted Christ as their Saviour. Other eastern countries can testify that in them also "a people for His name" has been brought to the pierced feet of Jesus.

SCIENTISTS VISIT MORAVIAN STATION.

On July 9th the whole body of the South African Association of Science set out to visit the old-time Moravian mission station of Genadendal, where some 4,000 colored folks pass their lives in quiet content, cut off from the world at large.

As the fleet of twenty-five motor cars threaded its way through the village street, children ran to the roadside shouting, faces appeared at doors and windows, for never yet did such an avalanche of cars descend upon this peaceful settlement. The visitors were received by the European minister in charge. Here hundreds of the inhabitants of all ages congregated to be present at the arrival of "die geleerde mense" (the learned people). In homely language, the minister welcomed the scientists and gave a brief historical survey of the founding of the settlement, which dates back to 1737. It is a curious coincidence that the day of the visit, July 9th, was the anniversary of the actual date of the landing at the cape, in 1737, of the first Moravian missionary. The minister told of a certain colored convert, a woman named Lena, who had proved to be a real "lady with a lamp!" For many years when there was no European pastor at the station, she kept alive the light of the gospel. The little Bible given to her by the departing missionary in 1744 is still among the sacred treasures of the community.—The Cape Times, in Moravian Missions.

MISSIONARY SOCIETY MEETS.

On Friday, January 9th, the Woman's Missionary Society met at the Monticello Christian Church. Some interesting discussions centering around the topic, "The Triumphs of the Bible on the Mission Field," were given by the members. Miss Russel McKinney was in charge. Mrs. D. E. Michael read the Scripture lesson from the 4th chapter of Matthew. Prayer by Mrs. T. M. Faucette. The following discussions were rendered: "Transformation of Savages in Africa," by Mrs. Faucette; "Results of Mission Work in the Congo Region," by Mrs. Michael; "Effects of Bible Teachings on the Citizens of China," by Mrs. W. G. Rudd; "The Spread of the Bible in Latin-America," by Miss Maude McKinney, and "Changes of Living Conditions in Burma," by Mrs. W. R. McKinney. A poem, "The Anvil—God's Word," was recited by Mrs. W. F. Burton. During the social hour, delicious refreshments were served by Mrs. W. G. Rudd and Miss Maude McKinney.

THE PREACHER AND HIS SERMONIZING.

be used to so much greater advantage, to going in and out among their folks, making pastoral calls. They feel that that time and energy could be better spent in reading the latest book, or in promoting the latest program. Now, of course, a minister can overdo the matter of pastoral calling. He may degenerate into nothing more than a door-bell ringer and a social humming-bird, flitting in and out, eternally busy at what he thinks is pastoral calling. To those who really like folks, it may become an excuse for the neglect of some real work in the study. A previous paragraph has emphasized the necessity for the preacher doing some hard work and for resolutely holding himself to a schedule of constructive study and reading. This paragraph would emphasize just as strongly the importance of pastoral calling. If it is intelligently and sympathetically done, an afternoon of pastoral calling will help ultimately just as much in sermon-making as will a morning spent in the study. In other words, we ought to do the one, but not to leave the other undone. For the minister is not only a preacher of the Word; he is a shepherd of the sheep. He needs to know the men and the women to whom he preaches. He needs to know their needs, their limitations, their sorrows, their joys, their fears, their failures, their aspirations and their hopes. He can only interpret life by life. There are, of course, a few great spirits who are primarily preachers, who have distinctive gifts for preaching. But the average minister must have living contacts with people if his preaching is to savor of life and to have life. The preacher who sees things through and sees things whole will find in judicious pastoral calling that which enables him to preach better and prepares his people to hear better.

These, then, are some of the things that will help the conscientious minister in the preparation of his sermons; things which are general—that is, things that furnish a background for the making of a sermon: a wholesome manner of life, a deepening devotional life, careful and regular habits of reading and study, and pastoral calling. They are the soil out of which spring the young sermon plants, which, under the careful cultivation involved in the specific preparation which we shall now discuss briefly, grow and bloom and give fruitage to the things that build men up in the knowledge of the Lord and lead them to do His will.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE.

Lesson VI—February 8, 1931.

JESUS THE WORLD'S TEACHER.

GOLDEN TEXT: "As ye would that men should do to you, do ye also to them likewise."—Luke 6:31.

LESSON: Luke chapter 6.

"Ye call me Rabbi, that is Teacher, and ye do well," said Jesus, "for such I am." So sound was His method and so penetrating was His insight into the abiding elements of truth, that we usually capitalize the word Teacher when applied to Jesus, for He was The Teacher. Modern pedagogy and the modern philosophy of education has simply rediscovered and is seeking to apply principles and methods that Jesus used in the most natural way.

With a whole chapter, which is another version of the Sermon on the Mount, for today's lesson, we can only touch upon some of the outstanding truths embodied therein.

Disciples—Apostles.

"And when it was day—after a whole night spent in prayer—He called unto Him His disciples, and of them He chose twelve, whom He also named apostles" (vs. 13). They were to be His disciples, that is followers or learners—they were to learn of Him, to catch His spirit. And then they were to become apostles—those who are sent—to go out to share with others the blessings they had received and the truths which they had received. This is the natural order—to learn of Christ, and then to go out for Christ.

"These twelve"—they were not saints with a halo about them, or with wings like angels. They were plain, ordinary, practical men of affairs, with varying temperaments and with a great deal of raw human nature in them at its worst. God can use rough tools to accomplish His purpose when those tools are put into His hands.

The Beatitudes.

"Blessed are they that hunger . . . that are poor, that weep, that are hated"—how strange these words must have sounded to those who heard them! They were just the opposite of the virtues that were extolled in the Roman world. The word that is translated here blessed is the same word that in other places is translated "happy." Jesus was trying to set forth the qualities of character that were to be representative of those who were in His kingdom. He was also saying that the secret of happiness was in certain qualities of mind and heart and not in the possession of material things.

Love Your Enemies.

The world of Jesus' day thought that enemies were to be hated, and that vengeance was to be wrought on them as opportunity presented itself. Jesus insisted that enemies were to be regarded in the spirit of indomitable good will. And as opportunity presented itself, good was to be done them. Men were to take their standards of action not from those who had done wrong or done them wrong, but from God Himself. In the spiritual kingdom which He sought to establish, men were to act from higher motives and to accept higher standards than did those who did not know His grace. The impartiality of God in sending His blessings upon those who unthankful and even evil was to have significance for His followers.

Be Merciful.

"Be ye, therefore, merciful, as your Father also is merciful." Because God deals with us in mercy, we are to show that same mercy in dealing with others.

Judge Not.

We are not to sit in judgment upon others. To do so would be the same thing as putting an inexperienced judge on the bench and to render a verdict without having heard all the evidence. We do not know all the limitations or the forces operative in other lives. We have no right to condemn, and in condemning others, we are passing judgment on ourselves.

Give Generously.

Those who were representatives of the new kingdom were to give unstintedly and generously. Their gifts were not to be doled out in a calculating or niggardly way. And strange as it might seem, to those who thus gave, there would come back into their lives blessings unmeasured and uncounted.

Motes and Beams.

Jesus introduces a bit of real humor here. In order to show what really happens when we pick flaws in others, or see their faults, he says it is like unto a man who has a large beam sticking in his eye, and who is trying to pull a tiny mote out of his brother's eye. As a matter of fact, that is just about what we do—we see even the smallest fault in others, while we are blind to much greater faults in ourselves. What an intimate knowledge of human nature Jesus had!

Fruitfulness.

"Every tree is known by its fruit." Not always at once, but eventually the inner spirit or quality of life will make itself known in conduct and character. In the long run, the good tree and the good life will bring forth good fruit, and the bad tree and the bad life will bring forth bad fruit. Fruitage is the ultimate test of life. It is important, therefore—tremendously important—that we keep our hearts with all diligence, for out of the heart are the real issues of life.

Hearing and Doing.

"He that heareth and doeth—he is a wise man. Obedience to what is highest and best is obligatory. He that heareth and doeth not—he is foolish, he will ultimately come to ruin.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

By JEWEL TRUITT.

Sunday, February 8, 1931.

TOPIC: "What Is Implied in 'God is My Father'?"

SCRIPTURE READING: Acts 17:24-31.

One of the most beautiful things about the Christian life is that we trust God; that is, if we are real Christians. Some, it is true, have to learn to trust God. After all these centuries, it is still hard for some individuals to realize that God cares for each of us. The birds of the air and the flowers of the field are constant reminders of God's ever-present and watchful care over the creatures and things that He created. Our work, our little cares about the things that may or may not happen, and other things fret and annoy us. The writer of these notes was very much relieved one day to discover a real message in some verses in Luke which she had read many times before.

But that day the message stood out plainly. She discovered that Jesus put worry (care) on the same basis as the riches and pleasures of this life. He said that "care" can choke our lives (Luke 8:14). In Luke 8:15 He suggests that we should work with patience. The little child does not fret about how his father will provide the things that he needs; he knows that his father will provide for his needs. We have no more reason to doubt God's care for us any more than the child should doubt his earthly father. "Except ye become as little children . . .," He said.

One important part of the message of Jesus to mankind was that God is a Father. He is our Father. Jesus often spoke of God as "our Father." In opening the prayer which He gave as an example for our prayers, He began with the two words, "Our Father." When we pray that prayer in spirit and truth, we are compelled to join hands in spirit with all our brothers of the world, and with them approach the Father. The color of our skin, the amount of wealth that we have, our social positions, our power to rule others, the kind of work we do—none of these things count with God. All men are alike to Him. All are children for whom He cares greatly and for whom He provides a way to live abundantly and fully. He is Comforter, Friend, Counselor, Guide and Father to all.

The things that have been said above have been said time and time again by writers and speakers, each in his own way, hundreds of times. And yet we do not do what they imply that we should do. We are "hearers and not doers." We fail to "do" in our market-places and on our streets the things that we agree in our Churches we should do. It is as if we said, "The theory is all right, but we dare not practice it." Oh, how we stumble and blunder along! Would that our words would turn to doing! Then our brothers to the ends of the earth would hear when we spoke. Then they could understand what we say.

Daily Readings.

Monday: "A New Birth" (John 3:1-8).

Tuesday: "A New Life" (Titus 2:11-15).

Wednesday: "God's Care for Us" (1 Peter 5:7).

Thursday: "Trusting God's Care" (Matt. 6:24-34).

Friday: "Accepting God's Discipline" (Heb. 12:4-11).

Saturday: "A Father's Love" (Luke 15:20-32).

PART OF YOURSELF.

The money a person earns really represents himself. He gives his energy, his talent, his intelligence, to some work and in return receives a certain amount of money. When he spends it, he is really spending himself. Some of it must be used for the necessities of life. For most people there is a surplus, large or small, which can be spent for other things. It may be used to work harm and injury, or it may be used in service, in spreading joy and health and life throughout the world. The choice that is made depends on—and also reveals—the character of the spender.

When the Church asks for contributions to help build up Christ's kingdom of righteousness and brotherhood, it is asking not for an impersonal material gift of hard cash, but rather for part of yourself. It takes whatever contribution you make and turns it back into terms of life. It is, therefore, not just your money that builds hospitals and schools and preaches the gospel of brotherhood and love, but it is you.—Rev. John F. Scott.

THE POWER OF THE GOSPEL.

BY REV. G. C. CRUTCHFIELD.

"I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ, for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth."—Rom. 1:16.

With these words, Paul sets forth his apology to the Church at Rome. There is a touch of fine pride in the utterance. It is a declaration of spiritual independence, an inspired challenge flung out with intrepid courage to all the ruling forces of life as they were gathered together in that city. The words bear remarkable confidence; they ring with the passion of spiritual certitude, carry the weight of personal experience and the note of authority.

Paul had tested the power of the gospel in his own life by now, and had demonstrated its redemptive scope. He knew it could triumph when all things else failed; hence the ring of certainty, "I am not ashamed of the gospel." It is as though he said, "I am not ashamed to be a Christian in Rome." I make no shame of it.

The day in which we live calls loudly for this inspired declaration of Christian experience. Great numbers of people are offering magic charms and infallible remedies for the ills of humanity. All kinds of substitutes are mentioned for the gospel of Christ. We would like to note a few of these substitutes, and to state the ground of our pride in Christianity as the one cement and solvent of human society.

First: There are those who come along and talk of cleansing the slums and elevating the masses of mankind by means of cleanliness and health and comfort. Cleanliness is a striking virtue; health is dependent upon it, and the greatest comforts will never be enjoyed until we are both cleaner and healthier; but sanitation is not salvation, and hygiene is not holiness. Environment is a determining factor in the development of life, but it is not the only one. It may be the woof of life, but it is not its warp and tissue. Environment can do much for mankind, but it has its limits. It is but right to work that the material conditions may be improved, because there is room for almost endless improvement; but we must not overestimate the transforming influence of environment on character. In the Scriptures we are told, in a moving story, of a man and a woman who lived in a garden, under the rays of a shining sun, where noble trees spread shadowed branches, jeweled with ripening fruits, and broad rivers flowed, making merry music, and springing flowers wafted rich scents on the breezes and God walked with man in the cool of the day. Perfect environment. Divine companionship; yet lo! these two stooped below themselves, they committed moral wrong. But when it comes to making the conditions of life better, to exalt the toiling masses and the alleviation and amelioration of mankind in the great biological furnaces, our modern cities, then "I am not ashamed of the gospel," because here is where it is destined to do its work if given a chance.

Second: Others tell us that ignorance is the root of all evil. They say people act in the way they do because they do not know better; they live the life they do because of their limited knowledge. Give man education and it will help to develop the best that is in him. Now it is painfully true that "Many sin from want of thought as well as want of heart." But culture and refinement and education are not enough to change the lead that is within us to gold. Our own country has the most liberal advantage of free education; we have more college graduates than any other country in proportion to population, and it is well known that we are steeped in political corruption. Germany, standing at the center of science, at the head of philosophy, leading in criticism, is a fair example of learning without Christianity. Education may develop the resources to serve a purpose, but it is the purpose we want, and when we move in the realm of purpose, we are in the realm of religion. But when it comes to culture that counts in life, that expresses itself in noble deeds stronger than all poetic thought, "I am not ashamed of the gospel."

Third: Again we are told that "will is the way"; that unless men shut their teeth and clinch their wills, they will never win through. This is a much-needed counsel, but it is not a gospel. When a man binds his will to a task, he can usually accomplish his end.

"If you think you are beaten, you are;

If you think you dare not, you don't.

If you would like to win but think you can't,

It is almost certain you won't.

If you think you will lose, you've lost:

For out of the world we find

Success begins with a fellow's will—

It is all in the state of the mind."

We are in dire need of this strenuous teaching of life that laughs at impossibilities and cries, "It can be done!"

"Somebody scoffed: 'Oh, you will never do that! At least no one ever has done it.'

But he pulled off his hat, and he took off his coat,

And the first thing we knew, he'd begun it.

With a lift of his chin and a bit of a grin,

Without any doubting or quit it,

He started to sing as he tackled the thing

That couldn't be done, and he did it."

Yes, where there is a will there is nearly always a way. We touch the heart of the problem here, but what of the man who has no will and where will that will come from? When it comes to placing a soul into the soulless, and a will into the man who has none, "I am not ashamed of the gospel." It is the power of God to lift man out of the tightening grasp of law and the advancing tide of matter. It will cleanse the man of poisoned passions and riotous appetites, and establish a will into his nervous frame. But the problem goes deeper yet. What of the man who has the will but is lacking in strength? Paul has actually passed through this experience. Listen to what he has to say: "I delight in the law after the inward man; but I see another law in my members warring against the law of my mind and bringing me into captivity to the law of sin which is in my members. O wretched man that I am! Who shall deliver me from the body of this death?" Then he goes on to declare the glorious deliverance which the gospel had brought to him. When it comes to giving man the will and the soul-stirring strength for the duties of the hour, "I am not ashamed of the gospel."

Fourth The evolutionist comes along and says, "Some time in the age-long process, a race will people this earth which will rise to the highest and best; then it will be the grand drama of existence." This is a grand law of progress. But it is not very encouraging and comforting to be told that some where, some time in the age-long process we shall gain the comforts we now seek. We want the comforts that come from the remedy in our life-time. We want salvation now, and the consolations of religion are now as well as in the future millennium. Some say "Christianity has failed," but the trouble is, man has tried to conduct civilization without Christianity. They have tried to get on without the Church; they neglect the claims, and ignore the appeals of religion, turn aside from its worship and sacraments, desecrate its Sundays, seek safety in riches, and when the hour of bankruptcy comes they say Christianity has failed. The truth is, they have never tried it. Christianity has not been tried and found wanting; it has been found difficult and not tried.

Amid the mighty movements of our time, when we are walking over hidden fires and the crust under our feet is thin and quivering like a living thing; in an age when the whole creation groaneth, waiting for some manifestation of reconciliation and reconstruction, and the fabric of civilization cracks in all its joints, I proclaim, "I am not ashamed of the gospel."

The gospel deals with the deepest questions of life—man's "whither and whence," and the life back of all life. The apostle felt that the gospel gave the best answer to these perennial human questions. The gospel was made for man; the gospel was made for the circumstances of life, (Continued on Page 13.)

MONDAY.

THE BEAUTY OF THE LORD.

"The barrel of meal shall not waste, neither shall the cruse of oil fail."—1 Kings 17:14.

The beauty and glory of the Lord is seen only where there is fertile field for it. The widow believed the words of the Lord spoken to her by Elijah; therefore she did according to Elijah's instruction. God took care of her in a very special manner.

We do not know whether she had been a sinner or not, or it may be that her trials were a means of bringing her to a more hearty realization and a deeper knowledge of herself and God. Be that as it may, this is evident: at the first meeting with the prophet, she leans to the will of God with an humble faith in His power and providence, and she gives a beautiful proof of her faith by her charity and hospitality.

The Lord promises such beauty to all like this. "Take no thought; your Heavenly Father knoweth that ye have need of all these things." "He who doth feed the fowls, and clothe the lilies, shall He not feed and clothe you?" "He that delivered up His own Son for us all, shall He not, with Him, also freely give us all things?"

Beware of incurring debt. One should not consume what the Lord hath not given him. Beware more of penuriousness. We need to invest much for the Lord. The widow smiled joyfully as she drew each day from her unfailing oil. So shall it be with thee. The beauty of the Lord is seen in this. Angels' hands often provide for us. No matter how long our lives, the loaf for life casts longer. If we see aright, "When sin doth abound, righteousness doth much more abound." "Trust in Him this year and He shall bring it to pass."

Prayer.—Dear Lord, again we come to Thee, praying Thee to teach us to accept our bread from Thy hand, to serve it out to others, and to partake of it ourselves with joy and thanksgiving. We pray Thee to make our living a fertile field for Thy pictures of beauty and glory, and our lives a living expression of simple faith that knows no bounds in Thee. Amen.

TUESDAY.

GOD IS REAL.

"Now I beseech you, brethren, through the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye all speak the same thing, and that there be no division among you; but that ye be perfected together in the same mind and in the same judgment."—1 Cor. 1:10.

The other day a young sailor said to me as he shook my hand, "Chaplain, I wish you and yours a very Merry Christmas." I thanked him and returned the compliment. In the conversation which followed, he told me of how he and his family had been at "outs" for some time; that things had been very unpleasant, but that the matter had been "thrashed out" and all were now united in a harmonious family spirit and that he was going home for Christmas, anticipating a very happy time. I said, "Boy, that is the real Christmas spirit. That is what Christ came to do. "For this cause came I into the world." This is the fruit of Christ's spirit. It is God working in man to do His will and pleasure.

Prayer.—Lord, teach us to believe in Thy goodness and mercy. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

GOD'S FRAUDS.

"The wicked borroweth, and payeth not again. But the righteous sheweth mercy and giveth."—Psa. 37:21.

The Lord is here declaring that those who are careless about fulfilling their obligations or who contract debts without thinking whether they will be able to pay or not are wicked people.

At the same time He is declaring that His children must heed the solemn warning to not live beyond their income. This is good advice for young folks just beginning life together. For such care and observances; His blessings are so much upon you that you need not doubt your success if your effort is made with prayer and earnestness.

"They that fear the Lord and practice justice and do good shall never want." "Mark the perfect man, and behold the upright: for the end of that man is peace."

Prayer.—O God, from the snares of the world and from the temptations and allurements of our own flesh preserve us. Prosper Thou our vocation, that we may always have a sufficiency and may abound in every good work. Give us a holy abhorrence of all fraud and injustice, and a holy desire to do good to all men. May we and all of our household be a blessing. Amen.

THURSDAY.

THAT ETERNAL SPRING.

"Thou shalt be like a watered garden, and like a spring of water whose water fail not."—Isa. 58:11.

It was the privilege of the author to visit his old Church at Spring Hill, Va., a few months ago. At this Church, down in a natural gulch, hardby is a bounteous spring which has been flowing strongly for the ages. It is a glorious spring. It is a stupendous blessing to that community. It is a place of genuine refreshing to all who pass that way. It is a charm to all who behold it. One loves to stand there and gaze into its cool, sparkling, rippling waters and feel happy. One can forget all his troubles in his contemplations here.

After eighteen years' absence, it was a great delight to go down to the old spring and drink not only of its waters but also of the spirit that is always found there. It was here the Spirit said something like this: "Thou shalt be like a spring of water whose waters fail not. As a spring pours out its waters year after year and century after century, and yet has as copious a supply as ever, so the goodness of the Lord is from everlasting to everlasting. Take of it and enjoy it; drink of it, and give unto others to drink with you." He is the eternal delight. He is the perpetual cheer to our hearts. He satisfieth our thirstings. He is forever in the midst of thee to satisfy thee with every good thing.

Prayer.—Dear Lord, establish Thou these truths in our hearts forever. Amen.

FRIDAY.

THE SUFFICIENCY OF GOD.

"God is able to make all grace abound toward you."—2 Cor. 9:8.

We are told of an orphanage when, in the beginning of its work, there were no funds. The founder sat down one day talking with his wife about means of obtaining the wherewithal for the prosecution of the work. Being in perplexity, he opened the Bible which lay before him, and his eyes fell on these words: "And God is able to make all grace abound toward you." He said, "That settles it. It will be done." The first mails were awaited anxiously, looking for contributions, but it seemed that only pleas for help came. He tried to repeat his text, but it brought him no comfort. Finally he went into his room and, upon his knees, reminded the Lord of His promise. He struggled in prayer a long time, and finally came out radiant with victory. It was not long before every need was provided.

God is omnipotent and never lacks power to help. He is rich in mercy and never lacks will. He is abundant in munificence and never tires. Wait on Him and He shall bring it to pass.

Prayer.—Dear Father, we thank Thee for Thy unspeakable gift in Jesus Christ and that wonderful unseen spirit that supplies our needs. Pour into our lives and hearts the love of Jesus, for we want to live in Him. Amen.

SATURDAY.

YE MUST BE BORN AGAIN.

"Every word of God is pure; He is a shield unto them that put their trust in Him."—Prov. 30:5.

Our subject usually takes us to the teachings of Jesus, and especially to those words of our Lord spoken to Nicodemus as recorded in St. John 3. But when we look for it we can find this truth almost any place. Romans 3:11 says, "The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God." That means that the natural man must have Jesus grafted in his life to discern the things of the Spirit, and that is the new birth. It is in this new life only that we learn that God loves us and that Jesus came to save us. It is in this new life, and this only, that we have a shield against unregenerate things. He who has not this new life understands nothing of this, and has no weapon against the devil. The woman with an issue of blood did not find healing of her body by seeking the world and what it could give, nor by adding to the words of wisdom and strength. She found healing only by going to Jesus.

He who is born again lets the Word of God govern his thoughts, govern his views of faith, govern his purposes and plans, govern his words and deeds. The Word is a light unto his pathway which he follows. He lives and moves in the humility and fear of the Lord; he works with the zeal of the Spirit. The Word is a shield to him, whether poor or rich. Both have their temptations. He studies the Lord and he knows the Lord. Living or dying, he is the Lord's.

Prayer.—Dear Lord, teach us to know the value of Thy Word and its power against temptations and wrong-doing. Remove from us vanity and lies and feed us with what we need. This we ask for Jesus' sake. Amen.

SUNDAY.

OTHERS MAY—YOU CANNOT.

"What do ye more than others?"—Matt. 5:47.

The following is quoted from a tract of the Free Will Society:

"God will let other people do things which He will not let you do.

"Other Christians, religious and useful, pull wires, push themselves, scheme their plans, but you cannot do it. If you attempt it, you will meet with failure.

"Others brag on themselves, on their work, their success; but the Holy Spirit says you cannot. If you do you will be led into mortification and despise yourself.

"Others make money, have legacies, have luxuries, but God keeps you poor because He wants you to have something better than gold, which is dependence on Him. He wants to supply your needs out of the unseen treasure.

"Others have honors and are put forward and exalted, but you are kept in obscurity. God wants some choice, fragrant fruit of you for Him in glory. This can only be produced in the shade of His wings.

"God lets some be great, but you are kept small. Others get credit, but you work and toil without credit. Some time others get credit for your work. The Holy Spirit puts a strict watch over you and restricts you, rebukes little words and feelings, or waste of time, while others go free and never seem distressed about these things.

"The lesson is: Give yourself to God and He will wrap you in jealous love. Others deal with the world. You are dealing with God. When thou hast found pleasure in any restriction that God imposes, you will have found the vestibule to heaven."

Prayer.—Dear Father, we worship Thee. May it be truly in the Spirit. Give unto us to be our Lord's and to have pleasure in us self-denial Christian living requires of us. Amen.

THE SUN'S PULPIT.

covering the whole life. The apostle felt that there was a blessedness in the gospel's influence. "It was the power of God." Then we might ask, what is power? Only one definition: something able to produce results. Looking back over the history of Christianity, we can see the slow but marked results it has produced from paganism to a higher state of civilization. Then looking at Paul's own experience and seeing how the gospel of Christ had transformed him, instead of a heart to hate and kill, he had one to love and sympathize. He knew what had happened to him could happen to any one. He saw in it a gospel that would permeate the individual life and the life of a nation as well. It could tarnish the gold of the miser and wean the drunkard from his cup. It could inspire life with its noblest enthusiasms and lift empires off their hinges; solve the problems of every human need; give comfort for the now and hope for the future.

Thank God for those who are not ashamed of the gospel and who are living witnesses to its power.

"PROGRESSIVE" IS OUR MOTTO.

The electric appliances have superseded steam, The old-time sailboat is but a faded dream;

We have our wireless telegraphy

And sail both air and sea,

We play electric pianos and never touch a key.

We have our electric railways, with their automatic switch,

Women wear silk stockings that were never knit a stitch;

Old-time cramp colic is appendicitis now,

We eat both cream and butter that never saw a cow.

We push a little switch, catch music from the air, Warm our homes, freeze our ice without moving from our chair.

"Progressive" is our motto,

IMPROVING YOUR SUNDAY SCHOOL. By Paul H. Vieth. The Westminster Press; 75c; pp. 184.

A practical handbook on supervision in the Sunday School. The author defines supervision as improving the teaching work of the school. This is to be achieved through raising the general level of the entire school, and so the title of the book is broadened to meet the scope of the discussion. It is written in plain, non-technical language and will be helpful to superintendents and other persons responsible for improving our Sunday Schools.

THE WHITE SUPERINTENDENT AND THE NEGRO SCHOOL IN NORTH CAROLINA. By D. H. Cooke. George Peabody College for Teachers; pp. 176.

This is a doctor's dissertation based on questionnaires directed to county and city superintendents of schools, on data secured in personal visits, and on the investigation of a great mass of documentary literature. The conclusions surprise in two particulars—that there is practically no discrimination against negroes in educational advantages, and that more negro supervision by experts is preferable. Negro education is shown to be a joint responsibility of both negroes and whites. It is well to have a scholarly and dispassionate study of this important problem.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN

1536 E. Broad Street, - - Richmond, Virginia

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

We are very grateful for the splendid co-operation we had last year from the Sunday Schools. The Sunday Schools are one of our strong arms of support. We did our best to get every Sunday School on our list of monthly givers last year. We regret to say that we did not get all of them on. We regret so much that we have a few schools that miss this real joy.

If the Sunday Schools who do not make monthly offerings would join in this year, it would help us so much, and we fully believe the schools would get a joy they have been missing all these years. I have never shown a kindness to or helped a needy person that did not bring a peculiar joy to my own heart. If our people just knew what a home in this institution means to a number of children, they could better appreciate the opportunity they have to assist the fatherless and motherless in helping to support them here.

I have in mind one particular case, where a mother has a number of children here. She has no home, she has no money, she has no health. She has been ill and not able to work for more than two years. She has no people who could take the children and care for them. What would have happened if this institution had not come to her rescue in this time of need? Have you thought what it means to her to know that her children are in a good home where they will have the best of care, training and an opportunity to go to school? She is a good woman and a member of the Christian Church. Don't it give you a peculiar joy to have a part in a work that can reach out and take little children by the hand and say to them, "The door of the Christian Orphanage is open to you; you have a warm welcome, and you shall surely be fed"? Then, don't it give you a peculiar joy to know you are helping lift a burden from the shoulders of a widow in distress and cannot help herself? If all of our Church people would help through their Sunday School or send individual offerings, it would assist us so much.

Now, in the beginning of this year, let us all resolve that we are going to do better than last year. Let every Sunday School do its liberal share. In 1930:

The Valley Virginia Central Conference had 23 Sunday Schools and 15 gave monthly offerings, or 65 per cent.

The Eastern Virginia Conference had 47 Sunday Schools and 36 gave monthly offerings, or 80 per cent.

The North Carolina and Virginia Conference had 37 Sunday Schools, and 32 gave monthly offerings, or 84 per cent.

The Western North Carolina Conference had 32 Sunday Schools, and 28 gave monthly offerings, or 87½ per cent.

The Eastern North Carolina Conference had 49 Sunday Schools, and 33 gave monthly offerings, or 67 per cent.

Georgia and Alabama Conference had 13 Sunday Schools, and 4 gave monthly offerings, or 30 per cent.

Alabama Conference had 21 Sunday Schools, and 9 gave monthly offerings, or 43 per cent.

Western North Carolina Conference stands at the head of the list in percentage, with North Carolina and Virginia a close second. Can't we make all of them 100 per cent in 1931? Let everybody help put it across.

OBITUARIES.

OWENS.

H. H. Owens was born on October 31, 1854, and died December 15, 1930. He was a loyal member of Rock Springs Christian Church for a great number of years. His health began failing a few years ago and was very bad for the last year. He loved his Church, but has attended only one service during the last twelve months. He was a devoted father and husband. He loved his family and his Saviour. He leaves to mourn their loss his wife, who is afflicted, and one child, who is a blind son, a few other relatives and a host of friends. He spent his entire life in this community.

Funeral services were conducted by his pastor and writer, assisted by Rev. G. D. Hunt. Interment was made in Rock Springs Cemetery. We humbly pray God's blessings upon the bereaved.

G. H. VEAZEY.

HARRELL.

Jesse A. Harrell, age 82, died at the home of his son, M. S. Harrell, near Buckhorn, Saturday, October 15, 1930. Mr. Harrell had been in declining health for several years. He had lived for the last several years alternately with his children. He was a member of the Holland Christian Church and his body was laid to rest in the Holland Cemetery. Funeral services were conducted at the Church by the writer, assisted by Dr. N. G. Newman.

Mr. Harrell is survived by three daughters and three sons—Mrs. E. T. Williams, Buckhorn, Va.; Mrs. T. L. Harrison, Carrsville, Va.; Mrs. R. R. Saunders, Suffolk, Va.; L. W. Harrell, Elwood, Va.; M. S. Harrell, Buckhorn, Va.; J. E. Harrell, Philadelphia. May it please our Heavenly Father to bless and comfort the bereaved ones.

W. M. JAY.

ARTHUR.

Mrs. Julia Everett Arthur died at her home, Gates, N. C., December 23, 1930, aged 57 years. The funeral services were conducted by the writer at the home and the burial was in Holy Neck Cemetery.

Mrs. Arthur was the daughter of the late I. W. Everett, of Route 1, Holland, Va., and wife of Willie Arthur, of Gates, N. C. She leaves, besides her husband, two sisters, Mrs. Fulton B. Norfleet, of Route 2, Holland, Va., and Mrs. C. B. Milteer, Gates, N. C., and one brother, H. B. Everett, Holland, Va.

The deceased had been a member of Holy Neck Church since early life, and was active in the work of the Church until her marriage and removal from the community. She had been in declining health for years, and in recent months she had been a great sufferer. May the God of all peace comfort and keep her loved ones.

N. G. NEWMAN.

GREEN.

At her home, near Mt. Jackson, Va., Miss Bertha Alice Green, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. N. Green, departed this life November 29, 1930, after a brief illness, aged 20 years and 16 days. Bertha gave her heart to God at the tender age of twelve and united with Wissler's Chapel Christian Church, to which she was faithful until death. She taught the primary class in Sunday School for some time, and will be sadly missed in both Sunday School and Christian Endeavor, of which she was secretary at the time of her death. She leaves to mourn her departure a loving mother and father, six sisters and four brothers, with lots of other relatives and a host of sympathetic friends. The friends attending the funeral and the beautiful floral tributes spoke of the esteem in which she was held. Her funeral was the largest the writer has ever seen at that Church. About two hundred and fifty people attended. Her pastor, Rev. B. J. Earp, conducted the funeral, assisted by Rev. John Dodson, at Wissler's Chapel Church, with interment in Mt. Jackson, Va., Cemetery. She rests in peace. May her loved ones be ever comforted by this thought and the ever-comforting power of God.

ELON COLLEGE

AN ACCREDITED COLLEGE
of the

CONGREGATIONAL CHRISTIAN CHURCHES OF THE SOUTHEAST

ELON was founded to train Christian leaders for the New South.

ELON has done its task well—one graduate in seven being in the Christian ministry. The other six express Christian leadership in the various professions and vocations. Experience teaches that spiritual leadership must be indigenous.

The South is now a New South ready for an inclusive Church, the type of Church for which Elon has stood for forty years and for which she is prepared to produce capable leadership.

With no Church in the community, save the College Auditorium, ELON has practiced Christian Union for faculty, students, and community for four decades.

Its contribution to Christian Education is nationally known and approved.

Its Christian Education Building, providing laboratory facilities for religious leadership training, is unique and is the first college building of its type in the world.

ELON confines itself to undergraduate liberal arts work with that religious emphasis which befits the Christian College.

In ELON the Congregational-Christian Church has an asset of marvelous hopefulness.

The South needs her Yale, her Oberlin, her Carleton, her Pomona for the intellectual leadership of the United Church. Many regard ELON as strategically located and spiritually endowed to become such a center of illumination and leadership training.

HARRELL.

Mrs. Nannie E. Harrell, a faithful member of Damascus Christian Church, was called home from her earthly cares to her final reward December 13, 1930, at the ripe age of 66 years, 10 months, and 1 day. She leaves to mourn their loss her husband, one daughter, one step-daughter, and three stepsons. Her death was a great shock to all who knew her, but her Heavenly Father knew best and called her home, and we must be submissive to His will.

We miss thee, dear mother, from thy home,

We miss the sunshine of thy face;

A shadow o'er our life is cast,

We miss thee from thy place.

We are sad and lonely without you, mother. You may not hear these words, but we hope and pray we'll meet some day on that happy, heavenly shore.

In loving remembrance by MRS. FRANK E. POWELL.

JAMES HARRELL.

ROSE.

God, in His infinite wisdom, removed from our midst our sister and friend,

Mrs. Omato Rose, on December 9, 1930.

The Woman's Missionary Society of Mt. Carmel Christian Church wishes to offer this tribute of respect in loving memory of her. "Her children arise up and call her blessed; her husband also, and he praiseth her" (Prov. 31:28). There is no more beautiful Scripture in the Bible than this; none could better express the life and character of our sister; no greater tribute could be paid motherhood.

Resolved, First: That our Church and society have lost one of the most faithful and willing members. Her going has left a vacant place that cannot be filled.

Second: That we extend to her bereaved family, husband and children, our deepest sympathy in this dark hour, recommending them to look up to the Heavenly Father for comfort and resignation to His divine will.

EDUCATION AND WORLD PEACE.—

There will be held in Chicago, February 10th, a conference on religious education and world peace, under the direction of the International Council of Religious Education. Dr. Hugh Magill, general secretary of this organization, has arranged an interesting program and secured some of the outstanding leaders in religious education to address the conference. Among the speakers scheduled are Dr. Sidney L. Gulick, D. Sherwood Eddy, Mr. Edward Evans, and Dr. Magill.

MISSIONARY APARTMENT HOUSE.—

Union Seminary, New York City, through generous donations of friends of the institution, will erect a missionary apartment house adjoining the seminary building. This house will accommodate not only missionaries on furlough study, but also members of the faculty and married men and women students. It will afford great help to those pursuing further missionary study. The association of missionaries and students for the missionary field will be a great inspiration and fellowship for those who live together under such conditions.

BRIGHT SIDE OF DEPRESSION.—

Cardinal Doughty, in an address at the convention of two hundred representatives of Catholic organizations assembled in the Cathedral chapel in Philadelphia on January 1st, said that "the present hard times may make us more far-sighted and dependent upon God. Our country has until recently been wallowing in luxury." It is true that luxury has always tended toward immorality and forgetfulness of our dependence upon the Supreme Power that makes for righteousness. Moral and spiritual good may make our country richer because of business depression.

HEAD OF SUNSHINE SOCIETY DIES.—

Cynthia Westover Alden, founder and president-general of the International Sunshine Society, died at the ripe age of seventy on January 8th, in Brooklyn, N. Y. Mrs. Alden had a varied career in life. She was school teacher, choir singer, customs inspector, executive secretary of New York's street-cleaning department, and editorial and free-lance writer. She organized the International Sunshine Society for blind children under eight years of age, for whom she found no other institution that would admit them, and also founded Sunshine homes for blind children in fourteen States.

WHITE PLAGUE.—

In the Philippines, tuberculosis leads all other diseases as a cause of illness and death, and the disease is steadily increasing. The reports of the director of health serve to show that in 1929 the number of deaths from tuberculosis was 32,814—a rate of 269 for each 100,000 of the inhabitants. The president of the Philippine Anti-Tuberculosis Society states that among the 13,000,000 people of the island there are at present 500,000 cases of tuberculosis. Some of the prominent Filipinos state the cases exceed this number. Official statements show that the disease causes over 12 per cent of the deaths in the Philippines.

MISSIONARY DECLINE.—

The Southern Presbyterians have been compelled to reduce their missionary force by recalling eighty-eight missionaries and native workers. The Southern Methodists have recalled two hundred of their missionaries and dismissed hundreds of their native workers. Other Churches have had to retrench their missionary work. Is this retrenchment due to financial depression or to lack of interest in missionary work. Too many Church people, in times of depression, neglect their religious obligations both at home and abroad and withhold from the Church what justly belongs to God.

"RELIGIOUS AILMENTS."—

Louis L. Mann, of Chicago, in an address two weeks ago in Philadelphia, lists the following ailments of religion: "pigeonhole religion, observed one hour of one day, and then forgotten for the rest of the week; static religion—the dead command, yesterday's rule over today's people; timidity in facing social problems; and the sin of superficiality." What should be the attitude of the Church towards war? What should it do toward the present labor problems? What about the movies that demoralize? What about the divorce problem? Is our religion too timid to tackle these problems and solve them in the right way?

PULPIT TOPICS.—

Many of the pulpit topics of the present day are expressed in the interrogative form. A recent survey of the topics announced for the Sunday services in the newspaper shows the following: "Do we believe the virgin birth?" "Can the God idea be saved?" "Who is the liberal?" "Does humanism offer bread or a stone?" "Will faith live?" "Empires crashing: Which will be the next world kingdom?" "Where is your God?" These topics suggest the trend of thought in present-day preaching. They tend to raise doubts and problematic situations which provoke thought and stimulate interest. Will all these questions be solved by the ministers in their sermons?

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION.—

Dr. George H. Betts, of Northwestern University, has recently visited Manila, holding a series of conferences on the problem of religious education. The Philippine Council of Religious Education, under the direction of President A. L. Ryan, of Union Seminary, is especially concerned at this time with the problem of building an indigenous curriculum. The conferences were held on the round-table style for the discussion of religious educational problems. More than two thousand young people have enrolled in this study and the outlook is that larger numbers will enter the study and prepare themselves for more efficient leadership in religious education.

CONVOCATION OF MINISTERS.—

The Interdenominational Convocation of Ministers of Illinois will convene this year at Springfield on February 9-11th. The subjects which will be discussed will include the following: "The Call for Constructive Unity," "The Place of Social Work in the Ministry of Christ," "Safeguarding Marriage," "Churches and Religion in Illinois," "Community Churches that Work," "What Shall the Church Teach to Industry?" "What is Happening in Our World" and "The Prohibition Situation." These are live questions that should engage the attention and prayerful thought of any group of ministers. Some of the best qualified ministers of the State of Illinois will be on the program at this convocation.

BILLY SUNDAY.—

Rev. William A. Sunday is at Buffalo, N. Y., holding a meeting at Churchill Tabernacle. The Buffalo Evening Times, commenting on his services, says that "Billy Sunday bears the same relation to genuine religion that a Fourth-of-July firecracker bears to political economy. He is a vulgarian, resorting to tricks of cheap showmanship to induce a kind of emotional joy in superstitious folks. Buffalo will be worse after Sunday gets through with us than it was before. It is easier to harangue than to teach. It is easier to mistake the hullabaloo for the substance. It is the lazy man's way to be satisfied with the shadow and let the substance go."

The evangelical ministers of the city, in their Monday meeting, passed the following resolution: "Be it resolved, That the Buffalo Evangelical Synod Ministerial Association herewith emphatically dissociate itself from the pseudo-religious campaign of bombast, ballado and over-wrought emotionalism now being conducted in Buffalo by Billy Sunday, and that it is the opinion of this group that his interpretation conveys a distorted impression of the sane and noble religion of Jesus." Evidently Buffalo does not approve Billy Sunday's harangue and emotionalism. His style of preaching, his emotionalism and spectacular method, and his psychology do not strongly suggest the method of the quiet, meek and lowly Nazarene.

NOTES-PERSONALS

"Nevertheless, when the Son of man cometh, shall He find faith on the earth" (Luke 18:8).

Say a thing briefly, but not too briefly to be remembered. Do a thing quickly, but not too quickly to be well done.

In her department this week, Mrs. W. M. Jay calls attention to a very timely item, namely: the "World's Day of Prayer for Missions," February 20th, to be observed in societies and Churches throughout the world.

Hines Chapel, Guilford County, N. C., Rev. J. L. Neese pastor, rejoices in the completion of another addition to its Sunday School rooms and other attractive improvements to its house of worship. THE SUN editor was present last Sunday in a delightful service with this wide-awake, progressive people.

Rev. H. E. Crutchfield, Henderson, N. C.; Rev. Stanley C. Harrell, Durham, N. C.; Dr. C. H. Rowland, Rev. J. L. Neese, Greensboro, N. C.; Dr. G. O. Lankford, Burlington, N. C.; Rev. W. T. Scott, Salisbury, N. C., were some of the pastors attending the Woman's Mission Study meeting at Burlington, January 27th.

The poet Edgar Guest sings a sermon in his song now and then. This, for instance: "The Church is all that lifts us from the course and selfish mob; but the Church that is to prosper, needs the layman on the job. For it's not by song or sermon that the Church's work is done; it's the laymen of the country who must carry on for God."

Dr. W. W. Staley and Rev. W. D. Nash were visitors for a short while Sunday in the home of the managing editor. Dr. Staley continues to grow younger as time passes. May he live many years longer to bless those with whom he comes in contact. We were very glad to see Dr. Staley and Rev. Nash, who is one of the most consecrated of our younger preachers.

Mrs. Elizabeth C. Beale, of near Windsor, Va., who underwent a quite serious operation two weeks ago at Memorial Hospital, Richmond, Va., is convalescing nicely, and her many friends will be glad to learn that she will be able to leave the hospital this week. Before returning home she will spend some time with her daughter, Mrs. John T. Kernodle, and her son, W. L. Beale, who is auditor for the hospital.

Mrs. R. G. Ayscue, Route 6, Henderson, N. C., has not only been a subscriber to and reader of THE CHRISTIAN SUN for forty-one years, but also in sending her renewal, says that during that time she has always paid up in advance and has never owed the paper, having paid up every year in advance before her subscription expired, and she wants "THE SUN to shine and to come into her home as long as she lives." This is a record, both of grace and graciousness.

Dr. L. E. Smith, Norfolk, President of the Southern Convention, is working on a suggested schedule and itinerary for the delegates in the South who contemplate attending our National Christian Convention and Congregational Council at Seattle, Wash., June 25th to July 2nd. Dr.

Smith feels that this is to be a most important meeting, vital to the interests of the Church, and that every delegate elected by the Convention should, if possible, lay his or her plans to attend the Convention. At an early date THE SUN will give a suggested schedule, with route and cost, to and from the meeting.

First Christian Church, Greensboro, celebrated, Sunday, February 1st, the seventh anniversary of the coming to that pastorate of Dr. C. H. Rowland. At the morning service a basket of flowers was presented to Dr. and Mrs. Rowland, with words of appreciation on behalf of the Church, by Attorney F. F. Myrick, of its congregation, response being made by Deacon S. B. Scott. The junior Church, meeting with the senior Church for the occasion, also presented a gift as a token of appreciation. At the evening service, Dr. W. Knighton Bloom, of Washington, D. C., preached on "The Open Door."

The Sunday School of Union Church, Union Ridge, N. C., having long since and greatly overflowed the capacity of the Church building under the aggressive leadership of good friend Walter Garrison as superintendent, has built, the Church co-operating, a very attractive "hut" close by for the classes of junior, intermediate and primary departments. The building is so artistic in finish and design that it adds to rather than detracts from the appearance of the solid stone and cement Church building. Dr. P. H. Fleming is the fortunate pastor of these good people, with whom it is always a privilege to worship and to whom it is a coveted opportunity to speak as did THE SUN editor Sunday, January 25th.

"The Christian Annual," the year-book of the Southern Christian Convention, is out, and we presume is in the hands of pastors and Church secretaries. This is Volume Fifty-nine of this publication and carries the proceedings of the Convention in biennial session at Raleigh, April 29th to May 2, 1930, the proceedings of the Woman's Missionary Convention, and also the proceedings of the seven Conferences of the Convention in their 1930 sessions. All Conferences in the Convention show a gain in Church membership the past year over that of the previous year, save that of the Alabama Conference, whose Churches had a membership in 1929 of 2,036, and in 1930 report a membership of 1,976, a net loss of sixty.

Rev. E. B. White, of Windsor, Va., writes: "Beloved, in these dark and trying days, don't forget that we have the promise of His Spirit to be our daily Guide; we have His boundless grace, and that is always sufficient. Put your trust in God, who is, from everlasting to everlasting, the Creator of all things, the Preserver of life, full of love and compassion. Let us walk in His footsteps of gentleness, patience and love. God is love, and I am sure He wants us to be like Him, to be growing into that likeness day by day. Our loving, Heavenly Father has honored us by asking us to be partners with Him in the glorious work of saving a lost world. Every true Christian should join in His splendid work for the eternal salvation of mankind. Yes, beloved, it is our solemn duty to individuals, classes, groups and nations. Remember that kindness sweetens everything, and the service of God is blessedness."

An intelligent layman, deeply interested in all the work of his Church and the kingdom, writes, under a recent date (this in a personal letter) to the Editor of THE SUN: "I was at Church Sunday morning and our pastor preached one of the best missionary sermons that I have ever heard. He took as his text, 'Go ye into all the world and make disciples of all nations,' and I never heard any man keep closer to his text than our pastor did. I feel that his sermon inspired those who heard him. The thought came to me during the service while listening at our pastor that if all the preachers of our denomination were to preach as strong sermons on missions as our pastor did on this Sunday, the Mission Secretary would have an easy job reaching the mission goal for the year." We are glad this layman was interested enough in the Sunday sermon of his pastor to want to tell others about it, for it will show that the preacher in the pulpit on the Sabbath never knows how much good he has accomplished and where the power and worth of his sermon faithfully prepared and delivered will reach, nor what it will accomplish. "The Word was made flesh and dwelt among us," may be said of the word of the consecrated minister who tries with his whole heart to rightly divide the Word of truth and righteousness to those who hear him.

Between seventy-five and one hundred women from various missionary societies of the North Carolina Woman's Conference had a great day of mission study and good fellowship at the Burlington Christian Church Tuesday, January 27th. Rev. Stanley C. Harrell had been asked by the women to carry them through the mission-study book, "India Looks to Her Future," in one day and to throw such light on the study as would make the book accessible and interesting. From 10 A. M. till 3:45 P. M., with the exception of an hour and a quarter for lunch and socializing, Bro. Harrell kept attention riveted on the high peaks and outstanding facts in this book and in Indian life and conditions at present. It was an exceedingly engaging and very forceful presentation and discussion. It was great and good to be there, and the only regret was that all the societies in the Conference who had been invited by the Burlington Society were not present to enjoy the physical, mental and spiritual feast. Mrs. C. H. Rowland, president of the North Carolina Conference, presided; the visiting women brought sandwiches; the Burlington women furnished chicken salad, hot rolls, pie and coffee, in addition to what the women brought, and in great abundance, and the long, well-loaded table in the dining-room of the Burlington Church was a beautiful sight to look upon as well as a good place at which to foregather for those fortunate enough to be there. It was, indeed, a worth-while day—a very illuminating study and discussion, a wholesome feast for all who attended.

THE SUN LETTER.

February is a most excellent month to renew for THE CHRISTIAN SUN. It is also a very opportune time to subscribe for THE SUN. The circulation manager is writing quite a number of letters to those who have overlooked the fact that their subscription has expired, calling their attention to the oversight. I appeal to our Church membership to help THE SUN by sending in your renewal, and if you are not a subscriber mail us a check for $2.00 for a year's subscription. Bro. J. D. Dollar, Lanett, Ala., has a new idea. He has employed a little boy to deliver THE SUN to the homes of his members and collect for it each week, and it seems to be working nicely. He has gotten up to thirty copies per week. That means that THE SUN visits thirty homes in his Church each week. This is fine. What other Church would like to try this novel idea?

CONGREGATIONAL NEWS

REV. E. C. GILLETTE, Editor; REV. F. P. ENSMINGER, and REV. M. J. SWEET, Associates.

DR. NEIL McQUARRIE visited friends in the Jacksonville office on January 26th. He was on his way back to Georgia after a period of recuperation in Florida. Dr. McQuarrie seemed much improved in health and was looking forward to returning to his work at Columbus, Ga.

DR. DAN F. BRADLEY, well-known pastor of the Pilgrim Church, Cleveland, Ohio, is spending a few weeks' winter vacation at Mount Dora, Fla. Dr. Bradley will speak at the Churches at Orange City and Winter Park, and possibly at other places during his visit in the State. His winter vacation is a gift from his loyal congregation.

DR. A. EUGENE BARTLETT, well known as a lecturer and who is called the "joy maker," is to be in the Southeast in February and March, holding a week's series of meetings in a number of Churches. Among those who have definitely advertised his coming are the Church of Wide Fellowship at Southern Pines, N. C., where he will be from February 15th to 22nd, and Avon Park, Fla., where he will be March 15th to 21st.

THE MIDWINTER MEETING.

The "Annual Midwinter Meeting" (so-called) was held at the First Congregational Church, Evanston, Ill., January 17-22. This meeting was attended by officers, directors and administrative secretaries for all the Congregational and Christian national mission agencies and by the State superintendents of Churches and the presidents of the State woman's missionary organizations throughout the country. At this meeting the annual budgets of the different organizations are discussed and plans are laid for the missionary work of the Churches during the coming year. Different boards and commissions hold their separate business sessions, and the conference of superintendents is also held. All, however, unite in the effort to find the ways and means for strengthening missionary work and to meet the responsibilities of the united denomination for the advance of the kingdom of God.

This is the first Midwinter Meeting that combined the representatives of the Christian and Congregational Churches and missionary agencies since the denominations voted to merge two years ago. A number of the representatives of the Christian Churches were present and shared in the councils of the united fellowship. Several delegates were present from the Southeast, among them being Secretary W. Knighton Bloom, of Washington; Mrs. Marston S. Freeman, of Chattanooga, a member of the Commission on Missions; Rev. William T. Scott, of Salisbury, N. C.; Rev. Fred P. Ensminger, Rev. Milo J. Sweet, and Rev. Edwin C. Gillette.

Among the most important matters considered by the conference was that of the missionary program for the coming year. The basis of the discussion was a report called "Our Charter for 1931." From this charter we quote certain paragraphs: "Believing that in a time of a certain amount of spiritual and religious confusion, of economic depression, and of shifting basis of loyalty and benevolence, it is inexpedient, if not unwise, to let financial goals take precedence, we propose to drop discussions of, or appeal for, the 20 per cent increase; because in popular thought it is so closely allied with this increase, to cease using 'Plan of Advance' as the title for our literature; to omit the conditional feature which characterized large individual gifts in the past year (as the Laymen's Advisory Committee recommends); and, while holding valiantly our present status and work undiminished, to seek to undergird our structure with new spiritual dynamic and more thorough education."

After stating the necessity for the maintenance of the present scale of financial support, the charter considers means, methods and suggestions, old and new, for the accomplishment of the purpose, discussing missionary education, training-conferences, round-table conferences, the use of missionary speakers and missionary literature, the use of the every-member canvass, and the solicitation of larger gifts from individual givers and the need of a new cultivation of a new generation of missionary supporters. The charter closes with the following noble statement concerning our purpose and spirit: "The development of greater missionary-mindedness cannot be attained unless the Churches are led honestly to feel that the administration of our missionary work is being constantly strengthened. The problems of sharing the religion of Jesus are quite as acute on the missionary field as in the local Church in the local community. Everywhere we are dealing with many baffling situations. Mistakes must be frankly admitted and a resolute effort made not to repeat them. Our Churches must come to feel, because it is the truth, that their missionary work is being conducted in a progressive way, in an economical way, on the principle of sharing and with a resolute purpose to develop indigenous enterprises at home and abroad. Increasingly must we make it clear to our people that not a dollar of their money is being used for denominational aggrandizement, but that their work is being conducted solely to build the kingdom of God and with a definite, statesman-like approach to ultimate Church union."

"If there is one note, more than another, that binds together the several paragraphs, it is the note of personal contact. We must go forward together. We must go deeper together. We must talk things over. We must act together. We must sacrifice together. This personal contact, however, can be really rich only as each one for himself has a deeper experience of Christ. The only hope for any larger fruitfulness during the year for which we are now specifically planning and the year which shall follow, lies in such a deepening of our union with Him in whom we live and who lives in us."

DR. SCOTT F. HERSHEY.

Rev. Scott Fund Hershey, Ph.D., LL.D., who has been pastor of the Congregational Church at Lake Helen, Fla., for the past eight years, passed away on Sunday, January 25th, after a short illness, following a paralytic stroke. The funeral was held at the Lake Helen Church on Tuesday, January 27th, being conducted by two Presbyterian and two Congregational ministers, the Congregational ministers being Superintendent Gillette and Rev. Thomas H. Derrick, of Orange City.

Dr. Hershey was born near Lafayette, Ind., in 1852, and was educated in the institutions of the Reformed Church, later, however, transferring his standing to the Presbyterian Church. He had served as pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of Boston, Mass.; the First Church of Wooster, Ohio, and the First Church of Newcastle, Pa.

Dr. Hershey was a man of very scholarly mind, a preacher of unusual ability, a writer of several books and magazine articles, and a leader in the educational realm, especially interested in religious dramatics and religious education. He was a man of genial humor and friendly relations with all those with whom he was associated. While maintaining his membership in the Presbyterian ministry, he was very loyal to the Congregationalism of his Church at Lake Helen. He was honored and beloved by the Congregational fellowship and will be sorely missed in our gatherings and will be especially missed in Lake Helen, where he was very greatly beloved. He leaves a widow, Mrs. Georgia Hershey, who has been a great worker in the Church and is also very deeply beloved by all who know her. The sympathy of all is extended to her.

METHODS CORNER

BY REV. ELISHA A. KING, D. D.

Miami Beach, Fla.

I wonder how many of you keep a diary. Very few, I suppose. Years ago I used to, but gave it up, never expecting to do such a thing again. But seven or eight years ago a friend gave me one of the most beautiful "business year books" I ever saw, and not wishing to offend my friend by declining to use it, I began to keep an account of the weather and the chief events of the day relating to the Church. I also kept an account of all my calls, weddings, baptisms, funerals and such things. Well, I have kept that up, and now I find it all worth while. It is handy in making up reports, it is valuable in answering questions about what went on in the past. For the minister it is invaluable. The clerk of one of the Churches in Ohio of which I was pastor (my first pastorate) kept such a diary and jotted down all important things that went on in the Church or affected the Church during the year. He incorporated these items in his annual report. This report was one of the events of the year and looked forward to.

Keeping records of Church business and activities is one of the most important duties of Church officials. We have had this fact put to a severe test in a law-suit brought against the Church by a firm of architects. Never mind the cause of this unfortunate episode, but please remember that the minutes and records and reports of our board of trustees were perfect and my diaries gave a complete story of every transaction leading up to this event, and all the information was placed in the hands of our attorneys. Also a history of every Church should be kept and carefully preserved. These things mean much in the years to come for future generations. Another fine thing to do is to keep a photographic record of Church activities. It does not cost much, but if pictures are put into an album, properly labeled and dated, the solicitor for funds or new members has a Church prospectus worth more than any amount of talking.

Many ministers have found Stall's "Pastor's Pocket Record" (Vir Pub. Co., Phila., Pa.) very valuable for records of calls, weddings, funerals, baptisms, etc. Some ministers do not keep such records, and find to their sorrow later that a mistake has been made. Membership records may be kept in books provided for such purpose by most denominational publishing houses. Records are valuable for reference and as history to those who come after.

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to commune or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

S. C. CONVENTION STATISTICS FOR 1930.

"The Christian Annual," our year-book, volume 59, is just from the press and is a book of 224 pages, giving the record of our Conferences, Churches, Sunday Schools and institutions of the Southern Christian Convention the past year. The following statistics may be of interest to CHRISTIAN SUN readers:

In 1929 the total Church membership was 31,719; in 1930 it was 32,609—a gain in Church membership for the year of 890. Every Conference in the Convention showed a gain in membership except the Alabama Conference, which showed a decrease in membership from the previous year of 60. The Conference making the largest gain in Church membership was the Eastern North Carolina, showing an increase of 262; the gain in the North Carolina and Virginia Conference being a close second, with an increase of 258 in Church membership. The increase in the other Conferences was: Valley Virginia, 123; Eastern Virginia, 97; Western North Carolina, 192; Georgia and Alabama, 18—thus making a total gain for the seven Conferences of 890, as given above.

While there was a gain in Church membership, there was a decrease both in Conference apportionments paid in and also in total amounts raised for all purposes. In 1929, the Churches of the seven Conferences paid in on their Conference apportionments $18,504.23; in 1930, $15,653.66—a total decrease of $2,850.57. In this decrease the Alabama Conference showed the largest per cent, dropping from $535.65 in 1929 to $240 in 1930; the Western North Carolina showed the smallest per cent of decrease in amounts paid on apportionments, dropping from $1,509 in 1929 to $1,506.61 in 1930—a decrease of only $2.39. There was also a considerable dropping off of money raised in the Churches of the Conferences for all purposes. The total amount raised in 1929 being $334,881.33; that in 1930, $295,833.70—a total dropping off in the Conferences of $39,047.63 from the amount of the previous year. This dropping off in totals was larger in the Eastern Virginia Conference than in any other, this Conference having paid in for all purposes for 1929 $190,022, but in 1930 paid for all purposes $169,958, a dropping off of $20,064. However, the largest percentage dropping off was in the Alabama Conference, which paid in to all purposes in 1929 $7,184.20; in 1930, $4,103.75. The only Conference in the Convention showing an increase paid in for all purposes for 1930 over that of 1929 was the Eastern North Carolina, with $22,440.09 for 1930 against $20,875.49 for all purposes in 1929.

"The Annual" affords an interesting study, and those wishing to get further statistics will find the same in this well-tabulated and well-printed book. The Central Publishing Company, Richmond, Va., is to be congratulated both on the mechanical work of the book and the early date of sending out the same to the Conferences. J. O. A.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR CELEBRATES.

The most powerful force that can be released on society is an idea come to its time. This thought is brought to mind in the celebration the past week (January 25th to February 2nd) of the fiftieth anniversary of the birth of Christian Endeavor. Like all great ideas destined to grow to great might and majesty, Christian Endeavor had an humble and an unheralded beginning. There was no blare of trumpets, beating of drums or roar of cannon. A very gentle, friendly, modest man in Williston Parish, Maine, called together the youth of his parish and discussed with them the very plain, practical topic of really endeavoring to be Christians. Then, for brevity's sake, they named their coming together and the effort they were going to put forth "Christian Endeavor." Thus was released one of the most dynamic ideas known to Christian America, and to the whole Christian world. For the idea, like the embattled farmer's musket fired at Concord in beginning the American Revolution, has sounded around the world, and still reverberates in all lands and countries where youth is struggling for self-expression and to achieve in righteousness. Today, four million young people are enlisted under the banner of Christian Endeavor throughout the world, and the sun never sets on their organization and their activities.

Their number, however, little indicates the might of the movement and the power of Christian Endeavor. It was the beginning of a new force and factor in Church activity and the Christian world. The youth movement had started, and it has never stopped. There are hundreds of thousands, now rich in experience and ripe in years, who made their beginning in Christian service and Church activity in the Christian Endeavor Society. It is safe to say the Church is more virile, and Church councils are more aggressive throughout the world because Christian Endeavor was born fifty years ago and since has demonstrated the power and the disposition of youth as related to Christianity. Christian Endeavor was an attempt to give expression, through word and deed, to impressions made upon the mind and heart of youth by the impact and the preaching of the Word of God; for the world had learned, and now fully realizes, that impression without expression leads to depression, unless the Church is to be merely passive force, and not an active power for God. The impressions for good by the preaching, teaching and worship in the sanctuary must find expression in word and deed. Christian Endeavor has helped to re-enforce and drive home this fruitful idea.

Our Church life, as well as Church plants, have been changed and reshaped because of Christian Endeavor. Now, any and every Church, in building or rebuilding, finds the necessity of having a plant with rooms and departments wherein youth may gather to teach and to be taught ideas about God, truth and righteous activity. It is safe to say that in fifty years an idea, released by "Father Endeavor Clark" in the little parish in Maine, has reshaped and re-enforced the activities of the Christian world. J. O. A.

SOME SINS OF OUR TIME.

The Methodist Episcopal Church, through its world's service agencies, has given out a very fresh and fruitful formulation of certain ideals for their Church during the year 1931, and, in doing so, makes pronouncement of certain sins of our day, of which the Church must take note in its program of progress. Five of these agencies of sin so operative in our day, according to these findings, are these:

"There spreads among us Christians a desire to live in needless luxury which takes no account of the poverty of millions in our own and other lands. No man has a right to more of the goods of life than are required to satisfy his own just needs, as long as hunger, spirit-destroying toil and lack of opportunity remain the portion of others for whom Christ died.

"The spread of habits of speculation is destructive of the moral fiber of the nation. To seek wealth without rendering due service, or to persuade others to engage in such a gamble is to destroy all relation between labor and reward, and so constitute a betrayal of the ethical standards of a Christian society.

"Greed is still a most powerful agent opposing the advance of the kingdom of God. 'Ye cannot serve God and mammon.' Until we Christians are ready to subordinate the desire for profit to the welfare of the human beings, dependent upon the industries for which we hold responsibility, we cannot claim to understand the mind of Christ or to be worthy of his fellowship.

"Lawlessness is a growing menace which will reduce our institutions to ruin unless it be corrected. It should be opposed wherever it appears, but most of all we should search our own lives and make sure that we are in every respect law-abiding, Christian citizens.

"Evidences of graft and wrong-doing in the governments of so many of our cities are deeply disturbing. A large share of the responsibility may be placed upon the members of the community, who are also members of our Churches, and who have been content to let the administration of civic affairs pass into the hands of selfish and predatory persons and interests."

There are other sins of our times, but certainly the five named are so obvious and active about us that Christians everywhere need to take note of them and give them consideration; and then, having considered, make a united effort to help eliminate them wherever operative in human society. THE PREACHER AND HIS SERMONIZING.

BY REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE.

II.

Specific Preparation.

This paper is not concerned primarily with the content of preaching. For a rather full, and certainly for an interesting and stimulating, discussion of that subject, one should consult Dr. Henry Sloane Coffin's book, "What to Preach." It is a book which every minister ought to read as an antidote to aimless preaching. In that book, Dr. Coffin suggests that a well-balanced program of preaching would involve the following types of preaching, all of them biblical and all of them representing an integral phase of the proclamation of the gospel: Expository preaching, doctrinal preaching, ethical preaching, pastoral preaching, and evangelistic preaching. Nor does this paper presume to go into detail in regard to all the principles of homiletics. For a discussion of these, one is referred to that old but very sound book, "The Preparation and Delivery of Sermons," by Dr. John A. Broadus. For our purpose, this paper will deal only with the more obvious principles involved in preparing a sermon.

First of all, the minister should have a subject for his sermon. He need not announce it to the newspaper, or even put it on the bulletin-board, but every sermon which is worthy of being called a sermon will have enough definiteness about it to merit being named something. Dr. Jowett, that prince of preachers, goes even so far as to say that "no sermon is ready for preaching, not even ready for writing out, until we can express its theme in a short, pregnant sentence as clear as a crystal." He adds that he found the getting of the sentence was the hardest, the most exacting, the most fruitful labor in his study. It might be added in passing that the wise minister will avoid the use of sensational topics. He may put his subject in an interesting way, but he should avoid the cheap or the sensational. Above all else, he should play fair in that he does not use a catch-subject merely as bait; that is, prepare a simple and sound sermon, and then in order to get publicity or a crowd, give it a sensational name. Preachers need to keep in mind that they are ministers of the Word of God. There is a certain dignity inherent in the themes with which they deal. Jesus had an interesting and unique way of putting things, but there was always a dignity and a beauty about the way He put them.

In the preparation of a sermon, the minister should have an object as well as a subject for his sermon. The man who aims at nothing is very likely to hit it nine times out of ten. In preparing a sermon, the preacher ought to keep clearly and centrally in mind the specific purpose of this particular sermon. This will give definiteness to his thought, unity to his theme, and power to his message. It will also govern the use of material such as illustrations which should not, like pretty drawing-room lamps, call attention to themselves, but which should instead be like street lamps, scarcely noticed, but throwing floods of light upon the streets and roads. Let every minister ask himself the why as well as the want of his sermon.

Taking for granted that the minister has a subject and a text, as well as an object for his sermon, what are the successive steps by which he can best prepare that sermon? In general, they are as follows:

First of all, there should be a period of meditation and prayer and brooding over the subject and the text. Before ever the preacher reads anything or writes anything, let him turn the text over in his mind and brood over it in his heart. Let him allow the Spirit Himself to lighten up the text or the passage of Scripture in mind until it glows with meaning and with power. There is a tendency to rush into the so-called actual preparation of the sermon when, as a matter of fact, the most fruitful thing that a man can do in preparing a sermon is to meditate and pray over it until it stands revealed in the light of the Spirit of God, radiant in truth. This process will serve to develop the man's powers of original thinking and will give him a sense of personal possession of the truth. It will also help him to evaluate and to interpret what he finds when he turns to other sources of help. The preacher makes a mistake who, as soon as he has selected his subject and his text for his sermon, turns at once to see what others have thought and written and said on the subject. He ought to do his own thinking first, and do it in the meditative, prayerful spirit suggested above.

Perhaps the next step is to write down all the thoughts that come to the preacher, whether they are in logical order or not. Anything and everything that bears on the subject and the text should be jotted down. Here again, this should be the preacher's own work—the thing which bears the imprint of his own thinking. If God has called a man to preach the gospel, it is evidence that there is in that man some capacity for thinking. Let no man think more highly of himself than he ought to think, but let him think soberly, and let him believe that he has powers of thought as well as other men. No man has a monopoly on truth, and even the humblest preacher by the help of Him who guides into all truth may wrest from a text a truth that even the greatest preachers have not seen. In any event, the preacher who is wise will prefer to have a sermon which is his own, even if it is mediocre, rather than to have a sermon which really belongs to some one else.

After a man has thought himself empty, he is ready to read himself full. He ought to consult the context, he ought to consult the commentaries, he ought to read what others have said on the subject, he ought to assemble as much material as possible on the particular sermon at hand. He will find that there is much of it that he cannot use, and if he has worked honestly in the steps suggested above, he will find that some of the work which he has done is just as good—in fact, better, for his purpose, than some of the things that others have written. In this connection, it is well for every preacher to keep not only a notebook in which he can jot down subjects and texts which suggest themselves to him, but also to have some plan of filing material in a way that makes it available for ready reference. The average minister either impoverishes his message by not having helpful material available in convenient form, or else he loses much time in looking for material which is not correctly classified and filed. There has recently come to the attention of the writer a system of filing material which seems very practical and useful. It is published by the Wilson Index Co., East Haddam, Conn. There are many ministers, however, who have worked out their own system of filing material, so that they can almost instantly lay hold of poems, illustrations, references, etc., which enrich their sermons. All things are ours, said Paul, and we should use such things as will enrich our message and at the same time preserve its unity and its vitality.

There is divergence of opinion as to whether the preacher should write out his sermon in full. It undoubtedly is a good thing for a man just entering his ministry to do this for at least several years, even if he does not plan to read his sermons; for writing a sermon will tend to give definiteness of thought, conciseness, and it will help to develop a vocabulary and to improve style.

The discipline involved will pay dividends many-fold through all the years of a man's ministry if he will write regularly at least a part of his sermons. As to whether the preacher should read his sermon, even if he has written it out in full, is a much-mooted question. Without infringing upon Dr. Shelton's subject for next month, it might be said that if the sermon is to be read, the preacher ought to become thoroughly familiar with it, so that he can read it well. The three-fold criticism should not be made of our sermons which an old deacon in a country Church once made in reply to a young minister's query as to how he liked the sermon. The deacon replied: "Well, in the first place, the sermon was read; in the second place, it was read poorly; and in the third place, it wasn't worth reading."

Whether the minister writes out his sermon in full or not, he will do well to write out his introduction. Much of the value of the sermon will lie in the preacher's ability to get the attention and the interest of the man in the pew at the beginning of the sermon. Careful attention to the introduction on the part of the preacher may go a long way toward making the sermon gripping and vital. Perhaps one of the most important parts of the sermon is the first sentence. Whenever possible, the preacher ought to make that first sentence short, terse, gripping.

It would not be amiss, either, if the preacher, in his preparation, would write out the conclusion of the sermon. A perfectly good sermon can be spoiled by a poor conclusion. Alas! that for so many of us our terminal facilities are so poor. Perhaps it is due to the fact that we give so much time to the introduction and the body of the sermon, and so little to the conclusion. For most of us, our sermons would be far more effective if we developed the ability to bring to a close in a few, well-chosen words, our message. Have something to say, say it and say it well, and then stop, is a sound law of preaching. It is all the more important that we stop if we have nothing to say and are saying that poorly.

No matter what method the preacher uses in preparing his message, he should master his sermon and have his sermon master him. As has been said above, if he is to read it, let him become thoroughly familiar with it, so that he can read it well. If he is going to use only notes, let him master those notes so that there will be no hesitancy and no awkward breaks. And let him even then think through as nearly as possible what he plans to say. This should be the case especially when the preacher uses no notes at all. The word of the Lord must lay hold on the man who is to preach truly and with power.

Need it be said, in conclusion, that a sermon is more than a skeleton, a mere outline, and it is more than a skeleton clothed with flesh, an outline filled in with words. A sermon, at its best, is a living thing, a thing that is so alive that it will bleed if one cuts it; a body of thought and language into which God has breathed until it has become a living message. It ought to have something about it not of this world. And all of the things which I have mentioned will be fruitless unless we have the fellowship of the Holy Spirit, both in the preparation and the delivery of our sermons. "But if our study is to be our sanctuary (words of Dr. Jowett), the secret place of the Most High, then the promise of ancient days shall be fulfilled in us, the eyes of them that see shall not be dim, and the ears of them that hear shall hearken, and the work of the Lord shall have free course and be glorified." Thanks be unto Christ Jesus, who hath enabled us, for that He counted us faithful, putting us in the ministry, to proclaim the unsearchable riches of Jesus Christ,

CONTRIBUTIONS

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Many members of the Church do not seem to understand the value of regular attendance upon Church services. It is one of the most valuable contributions a member can make to the Church, the community, and the kingdom of God. It is also an inestimable value to the individual who attends regularly. Habit is a great factor in the formation of character and in service for man and the worship of God. Some members feel that because they are not in a financial condition to give money, that it amounts to little for them to attend Church services regularly. If the member is not worth more to the Church than his money, he is not of much value as a member. Jesus had no money; not even "where to lay His head" (Matt. 8:20). Money has value, but man has more value. The value of Jesus was in what He was and did. "He went about doing good"; and, "as His custom was, He went into the synagogue on the Sabbath Day" (Luke 4:16). It was His custom, or habit, to attend the services of the synagogue on the Sabbath, and His invitation was, "Follow me." Although Jesus was regular at Church, He made no contribution of money, for He had none. It was His presence, His influence, His spirit that made His attendance so valuable.

It is not to be understood that members should not contribute money to support the Church, for in 1 Cor. 16:2 we read: "On the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store, as God hath prospered him, that there be no gatherings when I come." That was to be done on the first day of the week, which is our Sunday, and it was to be done as God prospered the individual. The lesson is not simply to give, but not to stay away from Church because one cannot give. If a member is unable to give, his attendance is worth as much as the one who does give. Giving includes self and money—"They first gave their own selves to the Lord," and "their deep poverty abounded unto the riches of their liberality" (2 Cor. 8:2, 5). Poor people are as valuable as rich people in the Church if they cultivate the spirit of Jesus and attend Church services regularly. It has been said, "There is nothing in a name," and that is true of a member who does not attend Church. Nothing in a name, but much in the presence of the member in the pew. What would membership in a class mean if the student did not attend? What would be the value of a clerk in a store if not in the store? How much would a mill hand be worth to the mill if not in the mill? What would be the value of a nurse if not with the sick? Absence is useless; presence is itself a great contribution to worship.

It is an inspiration to see some pious and faithful member in his place in the Church, though helped there by friends. Nothing looks so blank to a minister as an empty pew. "If every member was just like me, what sort of a Church would our Church be?" Well, if you do not attend the Church services, and every member was like you, the Church would be empty, and an empty Church would mean no worship, no praise, no preaching, no human touch, no real religion. If all the members would attend regularly, then all the work of the Church would prosper.

ELON LETTER.

The National Council of Congregational Churches, when it met in Detroit, Mich., in 1929, not only ratified unanimously the plan of merger with the Christians, but was roundly criticised for being too much a series of set addresses, with small opportunity for the younger men of the group to have any avenue of expression. There was, however, one seminar on worship, or rather a discussion group, numbering at times 200 persons, which suggested that, were ample opportunity provided, there would be general interest in the great issues of our time.

The program committee for the General Council session in Seattle has capitalized this suggestion, and there will be a group of seminars dealing with the gospel in its relation to the burning problems of our social order for the Christian life—six of them in all, each to hold five sessions and to bring in findings. These seminars will deal with the gospel and its relation to the following: (1) The individual, (2) the family and youth, (3) the Church, (4) community life, (5) national life, (6) international life.

The delegates to the convention will register for the seminar desired in advance. Syllabi for discussions, with bibliographies, will be printed and sent out in advance. The National Council evidently means to give all a chance to be heard, and this, too, intelligently.

The International Council of Religious Education followed a similar plan at its Toronto convention in June, 1930. The results were excellent. It is confidently expected that similar good results will accrue from the General Council's program.

The General Council will meet in a place as distant from our Southern Convention as is possible. That means our delegates will likely tend to be fewer than otherwise. It is hoped, however, that we will be fully represented. It is the first meeting of the United Church on a national basis, and we should do our best to have part in the deliberations which will fix procedure for many years to come.

PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE LETTER.

WORK A PREREQUISITE TO SUCCESS.

If we would be successful in our college work we must love our work. There are those who think work is undignified—that work was intended for the other fellow; that they are only expected to sit around and use every means to avoid doing their share of the world's toil. They are the "drones" of the "hive," and you know what the busy bees do with the drones. We could learn much from the honey bees that would help us in solving our educational and sociological problems of our day. To be a good student, you must not only work, but you must love your work. Every genius loves to work. It can be truthfully stated that one's success can be measured in advance by noting the amount of energy he manifests, the love he has for, and the estimate he puts upon his opportunity to work. Lazy brains are responsible for more failures than lack of brains.

The teacher, to be successful, must know what he has to teach; then use his wisdom with common sense. For, as Webster says, "Wisdom is knowledge, and capacity to make use of it; discernment and judgment; discretion; the use of the best means to attain the best ends." Like the salesman, the more complete the knowledge of his wares, the better he is equipped to explain their merits and virtues. You cannot explain to another that which you do not know. When you display a mastery over, and a familiarity with, the details of your work, the students will assume that you know what you are trying to teach and will have respect for you and will be your loyal student. Wisdom also includes the ability to read human nature, to observe the tastes, the wants and characteristics of the student. If the student fails to be interested in his work, fails to get a credible grade in his monthly tests and final examinations, more often the teacher is to blame than the student, for he has failed to interest the student in his work.

None but the persevering and ambitious will succeed. Here is the "rub," as Shakespeare would say. It is easy to start a thing; the real test is whether you have the "backbone" to stick to it until the desired end has been attained. It requires perseverance to overcome the many counter-influences, opposition and discouragements that befall every one seeking an education. It is so easy to let little things swerve one from the straight course. It has been well said that "A dead fish can float down-stream, but it takes a live one to swim up-stream." There are very few students who make much of a success without some opposition. The fellow who has a "thousand and one" obstacles to overcome—and the more he is combated, the more persistent he becomes—is the one on whom reward sweetly smiles.

The prayer of the persevering man is not "Dear Lord, lessen my work," but rather, "Dear Lord, make me equal to my task," and he goes about his work with a determination that knows no defeat.

S. L. BEOUGHIER.

WINDSOR, VA.

As we have not had a letter in THE SUN for some time, I wish to take this opportunity to report the splendid progress made by our Windsor Church, under the capable leadership of our consecrated and beloved pastor, Rev. E. B. White, whose sermons are most helpful. He never loses an opportunity to emphasize Christianity as a regenerating and saving power; that Christian stewardship is the basic principle of religion, and to lead men to Christian views of human brotherhood. Such preaching unquestionably has an immense moral influence in our community.

We are indeed proud of our missionary societies. They are a real asset to our Church. Never before have our young people shown such interest. Mrs. T. T. Holland and Mrs. E. B. White arrange the programs for the Young People's Missionary Society, and our fine young people are manifesting a deep interest in their work. The Woman's Missionary Society is second to none. These intelligent, consecrated women have been most loyal, and I think that it is due to the fact that they believe that the best way to honor God is to place Him and His kingdom first and to give to Him the best there is in them of their time, talent, social abilities, influence, material possessions—everything. These good women believe that Christianity is a world religion and demands a world view. Mrs. J. M. Raby is the president of this society, and our pastor and his wife never fail to take an active part in the work.

The same women that constitute the Missionary Society are in the Aid Society. This is really an aid society, not only in name but in action. Mrs. J. A. Fulgham was our faithful leader until she moved to Norfolk, and Mrs. A. K. Britt was appointed to fill her unexpired term; and she, too, has made a good leader. This society

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Secretary.

A PRAYER.

Father of mercy, cleanse and keep Thine own from sin. Forgive, and bring us to tread only Jesus' path of perfect love and conscious duty. Make us doers whose work shall stand. As we bridge the expanse of time for eternity, give us that clear understanding with intensest application to directed effort, without the qualification to endure and give back, is resource but wasted. Teach us the value both of active endeavor and passive strength. Material structures admit of no slack nor slight. Grant us, Father, insight, eagerness, to build as well the "stately mansions" of the soul. In Jesus' name we ask it. Amen.

THE TREND OF FOREIGN MISSIONS IN 1931.

BY WILLIAM WATKINS REID.

If you were to sum up in a few paragraphs the most impressive tendencies of the foreign missions enterprise—as noted in the four-day session of the Foreign Missions Conference of North America, meeting in Atlantic City, January 13-16—the following would be among the "findings":

The foreign mission agencies of North America are still endeavoring to adjust methods and programs and objectives to meet the high ideals set by the International Missionary Council at Jerusalem in 1928.

More and more the boards are coming to unite some of their efforts, to study situations together, to plan their programs co-operatively.

Most of the Protestant mission bodies are carrying on overseas with reduced or non-growing funds; they are not satisfied with the results of the "unified budget" system of their Churches.

"The battle for religious liberty must be fought over again in many countries of the world."

"The need for Christianity's world mission is greater than ever, though new situations may call for new methods and policies."

Perhaps there was little that was distinctly "new" to many at the conference. Certainly there was nothing by way of "resolution" or "legislation" or "sharp debate" to make the headlines of the daily press—for the conference is for the purpose of "conferring" and exchanging experiences, while the changes in plans and programs and policies are carried out by the individual boards in the light of experiences and ideas learned in the conference. Some of the sessions reminded one of the school-room where the "lecturer" gave his knowledge and experience, and the "pupil" took what he could and applied it as he were able.

Two sessions, under the guidance of Dr. John R. Mott, were given over to statements on relations between governments and missions, attitudes of governments toward religion, reform movements going on inside other religions, racialism, nationalism and communism, with a consideration "of the elements in the missionary program that should be emphasized" because of the conditions mentioned above. Dr. William P. Schell conducted a "seminar" on "home-base matters," discussing such topics as (1) how to keep the spiritual note dominant in our missionary promotion; (2) how can the pastors be stimulated to a more zealous support of foreign missions; (3) how to overcome the devitalizing effect of an inflexible budget system; (4) how effectively secure the help of Christians able to give large amounts, Missionary Funds.

One of the most interesting and helpful matters presented to the conference was a summary of replies received by Secretary Leslie B. Moss to an inquiry regarding the present situation among mission bodies making up the conference. Of 64 boards tabulated, nine spend more than one million dollars each annually ($16,825,000 total for the nine, six spend between $500,000 and $1,000,000 each annually, and 23 between $100,000 and $500,000. Secretary Moss reports that the boards composing the Foreign Missions Conference in 1929 expended $32,229,000 for that year in current work.

"The great majority of boards feel that evangelistic work is producing the most marked and effective results, thirty-two boards indicating it as the leading type of work," said Mr. Moss. "A number of others link it with other forms of work. Nine feel that education has the primary place in the securing of most effective results. Three or four indicate that the emphasis on education is especially because of the results in producing leadership for the future. Medical work also seems to one or two boards to produce the most effective results. Three or four boards indicate different types of work in different countries as being more effective. One board finds evangelistic work, and another medical, and the third elementary education, more effective in Africa. Three boards mention educational work as being the most effective in Japan. In the case of India, two boards are most strongly impressed with evangelistic and one feels that industrial and rural training are most effective, while a fourth favors education. Three boards feel that evangelism is stronger in China, and the fourth board assigns first place to medicine and education in China. One board feels that medicine is largely useful in Arabia and education increasingly so. One board finds elementary education increasingly self-supporting and indigenous in Burma."

New Missionaries.

With regard to the work of enlisting new candidates for missionary service, Mr. Moss said: "Forty of the boards indicate unequivocally that they are able to secure all the new missionaries whom they wish to send out, and a few of these indicated that they had a waiting list. On the other hand, ten boards just as clearly stated that they were not able to secure as many as they were able to send. Six boards reported that they can secure all the general type of workers that they need, but for specialized positions they are unable to find suitable candidates in sufficient numbers. Five more indicate that the particular type that is hardest to get is the doctors."

The Raising of Money.

"Thirty-nine boards report that they are having unusual difficulty in securing the necessary funds to maintain their work," said Mr. Moss. "Twenty-one boards reported that they are having no unusual difficulty. Four boards especially mention specific gifts as being easier to secure than ever, one indicating an increase of 25 per cent. Six boards report increased receipts in the general budget. One closed its last year with a surplus. Two or three boards which are allotted funds from a general conference or promotional organization do not have any difficulty in raising their funds, but are not receiving all they need."

There seemed to be general agreement with the assertion of Dr. Egbert W. Smith that "giving follows interest," and that the so-called "unified budget," by having persons subscribe towards quotas or omnibus budgets instead of to human needs and missionary situations, is largely responsible for the decrease of giving. It was predicted that some modification of the present general system in some way enabling people to give to their special interests will become necessary in many communions.

MONTHLY MISSIONARY PROGRAM.

BY MRS. W. M. JAY.

Women's Societies.

Service of worship—For courageous witness in moral questions.

Map talk on Turkey.

Roll call—facts about Turkey.

Introduction of guest from Turkey.

Our work in Arizona.

Prayer.

These programs have been the source of much information and help, and it is hoped that all the societies have followed them in their meetings. The "Guest Book," too, is a gem and one of great assistance to the program.

This is the period for the mission study in our societies, and of course all are busy with this feature of our work; then, on February 20th, will come the "World's Day of Prayer for Missions." Be sure to make adequate preparation for this great day, for it is coming to be the red-letter day of our missionary year. Write to your Convention president, Dr. Atkinson or any of the officials of your Conference, and they will be glad to render any aid to help you in observing this day, which is interdenominational and world-wide in its scope. The author of the proposed program is Miss Kathleen MacArthur, of Toronto, Canada, and the theme is "Ye Shall Be My Witnesses." The program will be broadcast at 8:15 Friday morning, February 20th, over station WEAJ and some eighteen or twenty other stations. It will be time well spent to tune in on this program.

Young People's Societies.

Program of Chapter IV—"Men and Gods."

I. Business.

II. Study course:

1. Brief review of that of previous chapters.
2. Leader gives the setting of story, pp. 49-51.
3. Different members retelling stories as given in chapter, with especial emphasis on "The Gentle Buddha." Images of Buddha and pictures may be used to good advantage.

4. Leader may use the last two paragraphs on page 66 as the concluding remarks to study period and as the introduction to the worship service.

III. Worship service: Theme, "Man's Search for God."

1. Prelude: "I Love to Tell the Story."
2. Call to worship: "Hear, O Israel: the Lord our God is One Lord" (Deut. 6:4).
3. Hymn: "We've a Story to Tell to the Nations."
4. Scripture: Paul's Athenian address (Acts 17:22-31).
5. Prayer: That we may be faithful to carry and send the story of salvation to those who have never heard aright, and to those who have never heard at all. That we may remember that our Heavenly Father loves and watches over us all of every nation; that He is India's God as much as He is America's God.

6. Offertory: Solo, "Tell Me the Stories of Jesus."

7. Hymn: "I Love to Tell the Story," 1 stanza.

8. Benediction.

These programs were prepared for the Young People's Societies by Mrs. Alberta Boone Harrell, Durham, N. C.

A SURPRISE.

On our last visit to Ambrose we were told that the ladies had a little surprise for us in the vestibule after the evening service. And a happy surprise it was! A large box which taxed the capacity of two strong men to carry was there, filled and overflowing with necessities for ourselves and family. Such kindness on the part of these, our faithful friends, in the face of what seems to be financial ruin for the people of that community due to the failure of every bank in that county and adjoining county, makes us feel very humble indeed. May God make us a better servant and lead us all in these days into the ways He would have us go.

We are thankful to be able to report that Ambrose is making progress in the right way. We were rejoiced to sit in the Bible class of which Prof. W. M. Melton is the efficient teacher, and enjoy a fine discourse, with twenty-three present. The secretary's report showed that there was a total of 180 present in the school, not counting the babies. Church services here are more largely attended than at any time since we have been on the field. May the Lord bless us in our progress here and keep us humble in spite of it.

W. C. CARPENTER.

Tifton, Ga., Rt. 5.

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

The beautiful weather after such a long period of cold weather, with its snow and rain, has given us the "garden fever." We could not resist the temptation to plant garden peas, cabbage and mustard. It was almost tempting enough to plant a small quantity of Irish potatoes, but we thought too early and did not yield.

The health of the children has been exceptionally good so far this winter. At this writing, the flu has not visited our institution. Our children, on account of their good health, are able to show almost a perfect record as to school attendance—a thing we feel very proud of. All of our children attend the town graded school and are allowed to do that by the Orphanage paying the county a stipulated sum each year. It is a very fine arrangement and gives our children an opportunity to mingle with and come in contact with the children in the community and rub shoulders with them. Our children are doing good work in school, and we are proud of their record. We handled 120 different children last year—60 boys and 60 girls. We are starting off the new year with more than a hundred, and quite a number on our waiting-list wanting to come. If funds were sufficient we would not turn away a helpless child if it was worthy to have a home here; but funds being short, forces us to say no to a good many children who ought to have a home in this institution or some other of like kind.

It is a pity and a shame, in this Christian land of plenty, for little, helpless children to be denied an equal chance because of their poverty. It's not their choice to be so situated. When will we open our hearts to them and be a friend to them in their dire distress.

ADVENTURES IN YOUTH FELLOWSHIP

"Youth at Work in the Church."

JEWEL TRUITT, Editor, Waverly, Virginia.

CONGRESS MEETING IN NORFOLK.

Lowrline Holstead, of the Rosemont Christian Church, was selected president of the Eastern District of the Eastern Virginia Young People's Congress at a district rally on January 18th, held at the First Christian Church, Norfolk. To assist Lowrline in her work as president, other officers were elected as follows: Watson Cobb, of Christian Temple, vice-president; H. C. Caviness, Jr., Portsmouth, secretary, and Edward Warrington, First Church, Norfolk, treasurer.

Seventy-five young people from the thirteen Congregational and Christian Churches of Norfolk and vicinity were present for this first rally of this district of the congress. Watson Cobb, president of the Young People's Christian Endeavor of the Christian Temple, presided at the rally. Lilly Spain, secretary of the congress, presented "The Christian Quest" charts to representatives from each of the Churches. Rev. H. S. Hardcastle, pastor of Suffolk Christian Church, a friend of young people every where, brought an inspiring message on the theme "Adventuring in the Christian Quest." The Eastern District is off to a good start in young people's work that will challenge other youth groups and many older Church groups.

HOW WE'LL DO IT!

We grow by setting up ideals and then trying to reach them. The young people at the Elon Christmas conference recognized this fact and planned some things to do during the coming year. A list of these ideals, or "goals," has already appeared in the columns of THE CHRISTIAN SUN. Young people's Sunday School classes, missionary societies, Christian Endeavor societies, and other groups will all unite in reaching each of these goals. Separate from each other we cannot hope to be successful in this undertaking. It is as a united group that most will be done. Every young people's group should have a committee to lay out plans for the work of that group on the goals of the youth of the Church in the Southeast Convention. This page is available for news and methods that will be of interest to other groups. Send in your suggestions for this page.

SUMMER SCHOOLS.

Summer schools are blooming over the 1931 horizon. Elon and Wadley have become a part of the summer for many Christian and Congregational young people. For a whole week, happy youth will greet friends and enjoy comradeships together. Those in charge of the summer schools in the South can predict only wonderful schools when they check over the list of faculty members and recall the splendid spirit of the young people who meet annually for these schools. Announcements of the faculties and plans for the schools will be made at an early date.

THE WORLD IS WAITING FOR YOU.

"The world is waiting for you, young man,
If your purpose is strong and true;
If out of your treasure of mind and heart
You can bring things old and new."
If you know the truth that makes men free,
And with skill can bring it to view—
The world is waiting for you, young man,
The world is waiting for you."

—S. S. Calkins.

EVERY YOUTH.

"Every youth has a quest to make,
For life is the King's highway;
And a joyous heart is the scrip to take
On the road of Everyday.

"Every youth has his gifts to guard
As he fares to a far-off goal—
A body pure, a mind unmarred,
And the light of a lovely soul.

"Every youth has a task of his own,
For the Father has planned it so;
He seeks the way, and He alone
Can show him the path to go.

"Every youth has a loving Guide
From the vale to the mountain-crest,
For the unseen Friend who walks beside Is the Way and the End and the Quest."

—Mary S. Edgar (adapted).

CHRISTIAN LIFE TOPICS.

Dr. Harry Thomas Stock, Young People's secretary for the Congregational Church, prepares material for the discussion of interesting topics to be used in young people's groups. This material appears weekly in the Wellspring, the Congregational young people's paper (price $1.00 per year). The topics for the next five months are based on the findings of the Toronto Youth Council, which met last June. Mr. Stock's topics for this period are:

February—1st, "Is it Possible and Desirable that all Churches Unite?" 8th, "How is Mexico Different?" 15th, "Mexican Life in the Country"; 22nd, "Young People of the Cities."

March—1st, "Health Condition and Alcoholism"; 8th, "Do We Need to Go to Church in Order to Worship?" 15th, "How Can God Become Real to Us?" 22nd, "The Lord's Prayer—A Study of Its Meaning"; 29th, "What Can Prayer and Worship Do for Us?"

April—5th (Easter), "What Did the Death of Jesus Accomplish?" 12th, "How Would You Define a 'Good Citizen'?" 19th, "What are Some of the Most Serious International Problems Today?" 26th, "Should Christians Refuse to Participate in any Phase of Military Activity?" (as reported in the Toronto Findings).

May—3rd, "How Can We Disagree Agreeably?" 10th, "When I Set Up My Home I Want to—"; 17th, "What Kind of Parents will the Present Younger Generation Make?" 24th, "What Type of Leaders Should We Take as Our Ideals of Success?" 21st, "Whose Advice Shall We Take in Choosing a Life Work?"

June—7th, "Are the 'Ten Commandments of Sportsmanship' a Satisfactory Guide?" 14th, "In What Ways Should Sunday 'Re-creation' be Different from Week-Day Activities?" 21st, "Recreation in Our Community—Where? What? How Much is it Worth? What Should We do About It?" 28th, "The Vacation I'd Like to Have."

Young people's groups will find some of the topics well worth their discussing. Mr. Stock leaves each group free to draw its own conclusions on the question after he has helped the group discuss the question freely from every angle. These discussions will prove very stimulating to young people's societies and classes. Order the Wellspring and plan to discuss some of these topics.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Sunday, February 15, 1931.

TOPIC: "The Church as a Family."

SCRIPTURE: Eph. 3:14-19.

The Church is the family group enlarged. The early Church had just learned about the Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man. It was natural that they should work together as a family instructing their new members and caring for their needy. The early Church group worked as a unit. Hence, it was a noticeable movement and a highly successful group. It is well for the Church of today to work as a family, too.

Check up on your own Church. How well has the individual member or the Church as a group measured up?

The Church as a family—
Follows Christ as Leader,
Shares its joys,
Lightens the burdens of its members,
Trains its younger members,
Cares for those who stray away and are lost,
Provides for the needs of all,
Works together at all tasks,
Serves one another,
Loves each other,
Desires the best for each member,
Gives special care to the weaker members,
Forgets personal desires in the interest of the best for the group.

Scripture Readings for the Week.

Monday, 1 Peter 2:17; Tuesday, 1 Cor. 12:12-21; Wednesday, 1 John 3:16-18; Thursday, 1 Cor. 12:1-6; Friday, Matt. 19:13-15; Saturday, Rom. 15:1-6.

The Virginia and North Carolina State Christian Endeavor Unions each publish special bulletins which are free to all societies requesting them. If some officer of your society does not now receive these bulletins, write Phyllis G. Dixon, 3220 Fifth Avenue, Richmond, Va., and Brooks M. Todd, Box 765, Hickory, N. C., respectively, for your monthly copies.

Two interesting pieces of work have come to the desk of the editor of this page recently. First, there is "Virginia's Program of Progress for 1930-1931." Christian Endeavorers in Virginia are making 1930-1931 a golden jubilee year in Christian Endeavor. With their slogan, "Crusade With Christ," "Double Your Life," and the splendid program and suggestions in the "Program of Progress," Virginians are bound to make great strides forward during this year. Another interesting "Program of Work" has just come out for the Christian Endeavorers of our own Christian Church. Mrs. Virginia Williams, 1253 Twenty-fourth Street, Newport News, Va., prepared this second outline of plans as part of her work as Christian Endeavor secretary for the Eastern Virginia Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention. Those wishing copies of this "Program of Work" may have a copy by writing Mrs. Williams.

The Christian who says, "I know the power of God, and I am trusting in that to save me and sustain me, and make me useful, and bring me to heaven," and yet makes no real effort to be good or to do good, is like a man sitting on the bank of a mighty river and casting chips upon its sweeping tide and saying: "This river is able to bear me to my journey's end." What you need to do is to push your boat out into the current, and feel its resistless force, and move onward with it. Then you will know the power that now you only know about.—Henry Van Dyke.

Sunday School Lesson

JESUS, THE FRIEND OF SINNERS.

Lesson VII—February 15, 1931.

GOLDEN TEXT: "Faithful is the saying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners."—1 Tim. 1:15.

LESSON: Luke 7.

Jesus played no favorites. One of the charges made against him was the fact that He was the friend of publicans and sinners. Toward those whom the Pharisees and scribes and the "four hundred" of Jesus looked upon with scorn, and with whom they would have nothing to do, Jesus had a warm, friendly spirit. He entered into their homes and ate with them and talked with them, and in at least one case, that of Matthew, He enlisted one of them as one of His disciples. Jesus, unlike so many ministers and Sunday School teachers and Church workers, did not neglect the poor and the outcast and the sinful. Nor did He treat them in a condescending way. He always approached them in such a sincere, sympathetic way, that they responded to His overtures. They seemed to feel at ease in His presence, so far as men could feel at ease in the presence of the one whose life was perfect.

On the other hand, Jesus went among the rich and the upper classes. When the Pharisees invited Jesus to eat with Him, Jesus accepted. He was no hermit or ascetic, living apart from men and frowning upon the approved social relationships of men. Indeed, one of the things that baffled some of His critics was the fact that He went in and out among men, sharing their lives and touching their lives at the place where they lived. Jesus could never have done what He did if He had been an "arm-chair" philosopher, living apart from men and spinning his theories without any relation to the matter-of-fact things of life. It might be said in this connection that every minister and every Sunday School worker ought to give due attention and diligence to books and to study. But they ought also to give attention and diligence to touching life. The contact with people which is involved in the heart of the shepherd idea is very vital.

We do not know just why the Pharisee invited Jesus to eat with him. He may have wanted a little publicity, a little prestige which would have come from having flaunted in the headlines that he had entertained this young Rabbi who was beginning to arcuse so much interest in that section. He may have wanted to ask Jesus about some of His theological views or have a discussion with Him about some of His theories. He may have done it in all sincerity, out of respect to Jesus. It would appear, however, that whatever may have been his motive, he felt just a bit superior to Jesus, for he did not tender to Him the ordinary courtesies of the occasion—he neither provided for washing Jesus' feet nor did it himself. That was a very serious and rather pointed breach of common courtesy.

As they were eating, a woman—evidently a woman of the streets, and certainly a woman of rather unsavory reputation—learning that Jesus was in the house, brought an alabaster box of ointment, and, standing behind Jesus—it was the custom to recline at a meal or banquet—she began to wash His feet with the profusion of her tears, and then dried them, not with a towel, but with the hairs of her head. She kissed His feet and then, in an expression of her devotion and love, she anointed His feet with the precious and costly ointment. It was an impressive and a tremendously appealing incident.

But the proud Pharisee saw nothing in all this but evidence of the fact that Jesus must not be the prophet that He was supposed to be, or He would never have allowed the woman to touch Him, let alone to do what she had done. Alas, for those who are so alive to the letter of the law but who are so dead to the spirit of love and devotion as it finds expression in other than orthodox ways.

Jesus knew what was going on in the Pharisee's mind, and in one of the most delicate and yet direct ways, He revealed that Pharisee to himself and to those who were at the feast. He told him of two men who owed a certain lender debts, the one five hundred shillings, the other fifty shillings. When neither of them could pay, the lender discharged both from their obligations. Under the circumstances, said Jesus, which man would be likely to have the deepest sense of gratitude? There was, of course, but one answer: the one who had been forgiven most.

With disturbing directness, then Jesus pilloried the Pharisee. How He did reveal the contrast between that poor, outcast, sinful woman and that rich, elect, supposedly religious man! "Thou gavest me no water for my feet; she hath wetted my feet with her tears, and wiped them with her hair. Thou gavest me no kiss, the friendly greeting which was the custom; she hath kissed my feet. Thou didst not anoint my head with oil; but she hath anointed my feet, and anointed them with ointment." How small that Pharisee must have felt!

"Her sins, which are many, are forgiven; for she loved much." She had given abundant evidence both of that inner attitude of heart on which the forgiveness of sins is based and which finds expression in acts of love.

"Thy faith hath saved thee: go in peace." Therefore, being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ (Rom. 5:1). And it is a peace of God which passeth all understanding, a peace which the man who has a sense of guilt, or who is estranged from God, cannot have.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE
One of our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy.

"If thou wilt make the Almighty thy treasure . . . then shalt thou delight thyself in the Almighty . . . and thou shalt make thy prayer unto Him and He will hear thee."—Job 22: 25-27.

MONDAY.

DIVERTING TEMPORAL THINGS TO GLORY.

"Make to yourselves friends of the mammon of unrighteousness: that, when ye fail, they may receive you into everlasting habitation."—Luke 16:1-9.

In so far as he was just, this unfaithful steward is an example for our warning; but in so far as he was wise and resolute he is more an example for our instruction and humiliation.

First of all, we shall give an account of ourselves. To be sure, we are sole administrators of what we have, both material and spiritual; still, nothing is ours. All we possess is God's, and it is to be used for His glory as well as to the true benefit of ourselves and our neighbors.

Second: Be wise and be quick to use your own time and all you have for the promotion of your eternal welfare. See how folks do about other things; how they use every opportunity and sacrifice home and reputation, yes justice and conscience, in order to secure earthly advantages. Should not Christians be more jealous to win the treasures of eternity? Our worldly ways shame us.

So the right use of earthly things is our lesson. This is what Jesus meant by the text. Just as there is no light without its shadows, so there are no temporal things without some measure of unrighteousness by which many are robbed of true happiness. Use them without stint in giving to others, for Christ died for them as well as for us. What we do unto them we do unto Jesus Himself, and these perishable things are turned into eternal treasures of love and the bliss of fellowship.

Prayer.—Lord Jesus, give us the wisdom and the power of love, and enable us to turn our whole life to devoted service for Thee. We are paupers. We pray for Thy wealth. We are foolish. Give us Thy wisdom. Amen.

TUESDAY.

EATING AND IDOLATRY.

"Be not idolaters . . . for . . . the people sat down to eat and drink, and rose up to play."—1 Cor. 6:7.

What has eating and drinking to do with idolatry? The passage is quoted from Exodus 32, where it is said, "They feasted in honor of the golden calf and rose up to play." We have our feasting, banquets, etc., and can play and eat. It is good to do so. The warning is that we shall not fail to make joy in the living God, the glory of our rejoicing. There is a temptation, yea a tendency to allow our feasting to degenerate into riotous living. When so, it is not as before God.

We do not converse about God and the love of Christ; but we forget Him and take His holy name in vain. Even in our festivals of the Lord, we drift from God and serve the devil. When so, then we are idolaters, and the words of Paul fit us.

Prayer.—Merciful God, give us holy earnestness. Teach us to enjoy Thy gifts with Christian temperance and to make our joys praises to Thee. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

A WATERED GARDEN.

"A liberal soul shall be made fat; and he that watereth shall be watered himself."—Prov. 11: 23-25.

God's word does not conceal from us that he who does good out of an affectionate heart receives an abundant reward of the Lord in return either in his own person or in his posterity; while he who accumulates ill-gotten wealth accumulates misery for others.

It is not to be contradicted that wealth is insurance against want; but back of this is another natural law—the blessings of God make rich, and that acts of charity are our children's best inheritance. Money will not satiate hunger. It has to be turned into food first. Who owns the food? God only. And none is so rich as those who have access to God's possessions and who receive all they need of His bounty. If you would become rich and have more than enough, give to the needy. It is "lending to the Lord," and the Lord returns with a rich interest.

Beware of giving, expecting to receive in return. That is not giving—that is taking. So you see, all depends upon the heart. A bountiful heart gives to help and make happy. "He that soweth bountifully shall reap bountifully."

Prayer.—Lord, be gracious unto us. Make us liberal souls. Make our lives a refreshing and a blessing like an early rain or a placid spring. Amen.

THURSDAY.

OUR HERITAGE.

"It is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom."—Luke 12:32-37.

"Be of good cheer." Be willing to endure poverty and want on earth. Beware of loving the world. Such is the way of the lost, and the main thing lost is the kingdom which it is the Father's good pleasure to give us. Christ told the young man to sell what he had and follow Him. This does not mean that we are to have an auction and give all the money away. That would not necessarily bring us closer to the kingdom. But it means that we shall—must—rid ourselves of our earthly encumbrances and give alms with pleasure, whether we have much or little. Be willing to let go all, if necessary, to possess the kingdom. Thus we have treasures in heaven. Thus our hearts possess the glory of God, and "where your treasure is, there will be your heart also." So, then, our hearts are not to be bound up in fine houses and possessions, in moneys and chattels, nor in fine clothes and ornaments, nor in farms and stores, nor in family and friends, nor in honors and reputation, nor in art and science, nor in any good thing whatsoever of this earth; but in heaven, in life eternal, in Jesus Christ.

Prayer.—Lord, teach us to keep Thy light burning in our souls. In mercy, loose our hearts from the treasures of the world. Be Thou our life, our light, and our salvation, and make us rich in charity and mercy. Amen.

FRIDAY.

UNBLESSSED BREAD.

"In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread."—Gen. 3:9-19.

The well-known radical lawyer, Clarence Darrow, said the other day that he has always wanted to reach the point where he would have no need to be efficient, and now he has arrived.

Darrow agrees with the common understanding of the Genesis account of man's fall, but wholly misses the point of it. It was not labor that was the primal curse, but sin. Sin, and that alone, put the sting into labor. Adam worked before he sinned, but his work was not toil, it was play. He was more efficient in this play-labor before he fell than in his toil-labor after he fell. The way to be happy—and the only way—is to be efficient up to the last. May Clarence Darrow discover it some day.

Prayer.—Infinite Worker, Thou whose perfect efficiency puts all our human toil to shame, show us the way to Thy happiness, Thy delight in work. Thy universe moves joyfully and smoothly on its way; make us a part of it. Amen.—Wells.

SATURDAY.

ALSO.

"Not looking each of you to his own things, but each of you also to the things of others."—Read Phil. 2:1-11.

Note carefully Paul's "also." Many leave it out of their thinking about that sentence, and take it that the apostle is exhorting them to make other people's interests their own, to the exclusion of their own business. The quiet way in which he inserts that "also" makes it more emphatic than if he had placed it in the foreground.

He takes it for granted that a Christian will conduct his own family well and look to his own conduct. What a disgrace if he does not! A man's first concern as a Christian is to be for his own Christian living, and the Christian living of his own family.

Prayer.—Our Father in heaven, may we be faithful where Thou hast put us, and may our fidelity then extend as far outward as it can. May our home not give the lie to our missions. May our character not defeat our conquests. For the sake of our Saviour. Amen.—Wells.

SUNDAY.

NO PARDON.

"Manasseh . . . filled Jerusalem with innocent blood; and Jehovah would not pardon."—Read 2 Kings 24:1-7.

Ours is not always a pardoning God. There are some things that even Omnipotence cannot do. God cannot transgress His own laws of justice and right. He cannot pardon a man who does not acknowledge his guilt and plead for mercy. God cannot put a premium upon wickedness and bestow on the willful and impenitent the same favor He gives to the humble and obedient. To do this would be to deny Himself, and to plunge the moral universe into confusion.

Manasseh repented at last, and God forgave, but not till the offender did repent. Jehovah did not hold aloof during the years of the king's wickedness, but Manasseh held him aloof. The evil monarch filled Jerusalem with innocent blood—he left no room for God. If he had turned to God in any one of those dark days, God would have turned to him.

Does any one complain because God seems far off? Would he receive God if the Lord should try to force Himself upon him? Would any one worship a God who was heedless of character, careless of justice?

Prayer.—Universal Judge, we glory in Thy uprightness, we rejoice in Thy strict rule. We are glad that ours is a jealous God. We would not ask Thee to cheapen Thy laws. We would not have Thee intermit Thy penalties. Be strict with us, O God, and may we be strict with ourselves. Amen.—Wells.

"BEHOLD THE MAN!"

(Pilate—John 19:5.)

BY DR. A. G. AXTELL

Chaplain Piedmont Junior College, Demorest, Ga.

Pilate, a hard-headed Roman governor and judge, before whom criminals are brought for trial; before him, Jesus. Pilate has tried Him twice, and though he found no fault in Him and was willing to release Him, yet turned Him over to His enemies and the Roman soldiers to be crucified, and said, "Behold the Man!" Jesus is on trial in every generation; He is on trial every day, and before us today. I shall defend Him who needs no defense, and my proposition is: Jesus has done something with the world as well as for it.

Jesus took Peter, a weak, vacillating, denying man, and made a rock of him—a rock which neither long journeys, nor sufferings, nor persecutions, nor crucifixion could move. He took James and John, the sons of thunder, and made them witnesses, together with Peter, of the raising of Jairus' daughter, and of the transfiguration and of Gethsemane. James was the first martyr, and, on the way to His crucifixion, forgave His false accuser and blessed him. John, the beloved disciple, became the loving disciple and wrote the most intimate and sublime interpretation of the life and spirit of Jesus that has been given to men.

Jesus took Philip the evangelist and sent him through Palestine and brought him to a man of Africa, who was converted to the way and took the good news to a new continent. He took Paul, who had harried and persecuted believers even to death, and made of him an apostle of two continents—Asia and Europe—and a missionary to three civilizations—the Hebrew, Greek and Roman. He took the rest of the twelve, we may believe, and used them in distant lands, so that by the end of the first century the span only of a life of seventy years after the death of Jesus, the gospel was known through large portions of Europe, and northern Africa, and much of Asia.

Our English ancestors were early changed from half-naked savages to men capable of education, government and culture. Our Teutonic race was changed from one that knew little and was filled with superstition to the most scientific race of history.

In art, he has inspired the richest and the best; in pictures, the races have rivaled one another in presenting him as the perfect-type man of the world and of history; in music he has given men the greatest themes and the highest inspiration known to man's experience; in literature he has been the subject of story and legend and poetry; his life has absorbed the attention of authors without number, and books which come from the presses of the world in an ever-increasing period.

In language he has taken the finest that has ever been known to mankind—the Greek—and refined it till New Testament Greek is considered the best representative of this most artistic language. Of the 2,000 languages and dialects of the world, nearly one thousand are used for the conveying of the whole or parts of the Bible—the Old Testament or the New.

He who never wrote a word (except those few which he wrote on the ground in the temple area—words which must have soon been erased by the feet of the passing throng) has inspired not only the finest literature, but the most sublime philosophy known to man. His ethics are, beyond question, the most noble and the most practical. His rules of every-day living have but one thing which keeps them from universal adoption—they are too high and too hard for our humanity at the present time.

The religion which he founded has taken into itself the practices of men and hallowed and glorified them—the work of the physician, the lawyer, the educator, the artisan: the every-day practices of all men. He has sanctified the business of those who would have it sanctified, and the ideals of all who would follow him. He has freed peoples from slavery and given them self-government; he has freed men from vice and given them self-control.

He has founded institutions, such as those of education and those of charity. Greece gave the world a civilization and a culture never known before; but it did not have the word "hospital" in its language, because it did not know the meaning of the word. But now hospitals are established in a large portion of the world, and it is their invariable history that they begin in compassion—such compassion as he had.

The blind are taken care of as never before; the insane, the feeble, even criminals, are cared for with an unexampled consideration.

The Atlanta Constitution states editorially that never before in the history of our country, not even in times of famine or distress of any kind, have the gifts of the American people equaled those of this Christmas-tide. At this time, when so many have felt the pinch of poverty, when we have had a very unusual depression in business, the gifts and expenditures for those in need have mounted into many millions. And why? Because Christ was born in Bethlehem of Judea some centuries ago at this season of the year. Literally, the hearts of the fathers have been turned to the children, and those of the strong have been turned to the needy.

Contrast Christianity with Confucianism. Confucianism is but an ethics; it is not a religion. It has some of the finest precepts known to man, but it has the spirit of aristocracy. Christianity has the spirit of democracy.

Contrast Christianity with Mohammedanism. This religion wins adherents by the sword. It, too, has an ethics which compares favorably with the best, but it promises heaven for the recital of a creed and paradise for the slaying of unbelievers.

Compare Christianity with Buddhism—a philosophy which seeks heaven in unconsciousness and can look with indifference upon children thrown into the Ganges, and wives of seven years of age, and self-torture and indifference to the suffering of others, and temples with courtesans in them.

The proudest empire known to history discovered that the power of the Spirit is greater than all earthly power, and gave up its legions that it might organize cohorts of missionaries and establish the Church upon the earth. From the time of Constantine, Rome has waned in worldly power and grown in spiritual dominion.

Christianity has ever been a missionary religion, and the finest pages of human history are those that record missionary enterprise. One hundred and twenty-five years ago, Christ inspired a little company of young men to meet under a haystack during a thunder-storm and found a mission to the world—a mission which has claimed the devotion and the consecration of young men and young women for generations; has inspired gifts without limit; has changed educational systems and governments and agriculture and care of the sick and needy in countries around the globe. There is no door of any nation that is not open to Christianity at the present time, except it be Russia, which is just now shutting out the Christ so far as it can.

Christianity has ever been a missionary religion. Jesus gave only two commandments: "Love," "Go." All may love; some may go.

The time fails to tell of Samuel J. Mills, Jr., of Richards, Robbins, and Loomis, of Carey, Gordon Hall and Luther Rice—these young men who founded a missionary enterprise and changed the history of the world. The roll of high honor is full of such names as Samuel Newell, Adoniram Judson, Samuel Nott, of Smith and Pitkin, of China, the Humes (father and son) of India, of those who could not go but who supported those who could—Capeñ, and Moore, and Barton, and Patten, and Judson Smith, not to mention the millions who have given of their substance to the support of these missionaries.

And shall we forget those who have visited us? Bennett, of Japan, who spent a year with us (a

THE AWAKENING COLLEGE. By Clarence C. Little. W. W. Norton & Co.; $2.00; pp. 282.

The former president of the University of Maine and of the University of Michigan is well qualified by experience to write on the problems of American higher education. He does so in this book. You will not find yourself in agreement with all he says, but he will at least force you to rethink your conclusions respecting admission to college, the curriculum, academic tenure, research and teaching ability, co-education, athletics, what constitutes a good alumnus, the religious interests of college youth, and a dozen other areas of college and university education.

Some will think Dr. Little too cynical, and others will regard him as prejudiced by his bitter experience at Michigan. Rather, his is an independent mind, honestly exploring the unsolved problems of higher education in relation to the inalienable rights of youth, for whom all higher education exists.

year made more valuable and enjoyable by his presence); of the medical missionary of China who, under the direction of the government of that country, was willing to go through a region afflicted with pneumonia of a type which registered 100 per cent fatality; Orner, of Africa, who, by new agricultural methods, is transforming the lives of many in a large area; of Partridge, of Turkey, who has contributed largely to education in that country.

Christ has generated and regenerated America. Queen Isabel of Spain desired the conquest of the world for Christ. She would plant the cross beside the standard of Spain throughout the earth. So she sent Columbus on his voyage of discovery, and America was discovered. In 1620 a little company of 101 persons landed at Plymouth Rock and established a new world; they gave to America a new civilization compounded of education and religion—that religion was Christianity. And in spite of all their faults, the government and the country which have issued forth from this beginning are the finest in the world. Yet, the best things are before us.

War has come to us in recent years, and war may come again; but even here Christianity has won. It is the style to minimize the blame of the central powers of Europe with respect to responsibility for the great war, but history will never be able to erase the stain of the principle on which this war was begun, namely: might makes right. Whereas, the other powers fought upon the principle that right makes right, and exhibited this principle in contrast to the others—because it is a Christian principle.

G. K. Chesterton says that "We have done far less than we should have done to explain all that balance of subtlety and sanity which is meant by a Christian civilization." The best days are in the future, when men shall live entirely by the principles of the Christ.

Chesterton points out the failure of Darwinism in the fields where it was supposed to be true—the fields of biology, of botany and zoology. But he tells us that it has proven the truth of the survival of the fittest in the survival of religion. Not only are great scientists interpreting the world in terms of spirit—men such as Edington, Jeans, Whitney, Einstein and Millikan—but also "man has taken to himself his own weapons—will and worship and reason." Religion is prevailing, and for Chesterton and for ourselves, that means Christianity.

Is the proposition proven—has not the Christ done something? has He not done much with men as well as having done everything for men? Is it too much to say that He has overthrown empires and established democracies? Is it too much to say that He has glorified childhood and exalted womanhood and ennobled manhood? Is it too much to say that His vision is being fulfilled, and that the heaven of His Spirit is leavening the whole mass of humanity till all be leavened?

There is a picture which probably all have seen—the picture by the Hungarian artist, Munkacsy, entitled "Christ Before Pilate." The round-headed, stern-faced Roman is seated on his throne, and before him is Jesus, a prisoner, bound and surrounded by his enemies who are willing to testify against Him. One gazes and gazes at the picture till slowly it dawns upon him that, while Christ is on trial before Pilate, in a far deeper sense is Pilate on trial before Christ. Christ is on trial before the world today, but in a far deeper sense the world is on trial before Christ.

Some are saying that it is a weak and effeminate thing to be a follower of Jesus. Does any one imagine it is a weak thing to follow Him who has changed the course of history and regenerated a large portion of mankind? Does any one imagine that the kingdom of God will not move on to the point where it declines to enter it? It will make a difference, a little difference, to the kingdom whether you and I do our part in it, and there will be some loss if we do not, but the loss will be principally ours.

We have thought too much perhaps of Jesus as the lowly Nazarene, and too little of Him as the King of kings, the exalted Christ. He who was on the earth in humility is coming again in glory, with the holy angels. I know not how—whether in some manner to be seen by men or in those subtle, gentle ways of the Spirit—but He is coming in majesty and in power, and His kingdom will be established and endure. It is moving on toward its consummation. The question is, shall it move on with us or without us?

MARRIAGES

McCRARY—GRAY.

On January 18, 1931, just at the conclusion of the service at the Elk Spur Church, I united in marriage Mr. Lonzo Ralph McCrary and Miss Dorothy May Gray, both of Carroll County, Va. The husband's parents are leading members of Rocky Ford Church. The young couple are regular attendants of our Sunday School and Church services. We wish for them a prosperous and happy married life.

S. E. MADREN.

OBITUARIES.

ROTHGEB.

The home of Brother and Sister Leslie Rothgeb, at Leaksville, was made sad on January 15, 1931, when their babe, Leonard Leslie, departed this life at the age of 6 months and 12 days. Although there is still a large family of children in the home, they sorely miss this little one. May God comfort them.

A. W. ANDES.

SHARP.

J. Settle Sharp was born in March, 1862, and died on December 31, 1930. His funeral was held in the New Lebanon Church January 1, 1931. Burial was in the Church cemetery. His widow and eight children, two sisters and two brothers survive.

Bro. Sharp was one of the early members of New Lebanon and one of our most devoted members. He was a quiet, unassuming Christian gentleman, a tender and loving companion, a kind father and a friend to all. May the grace of God sustain and comfort the bereaved.

R. A. WHITTEN.

LANGSTON.

Whereas, God, in His infinite wisdom, has removed from our midst our beloved brother, D. I. Langston, whose death occurred on January 18, 1931; therefore, be it resolved:

First: That, in his passing, our Missionary Aid Society has sustained the loss of a consecrated and efficient member.

Second: That the society realizes the love and interest he had in all of its activities and commend that spirit as worthy of imitation.

Third: We bow in humble submission to His will, who doeth all things well.

Fourth: We extend to all his loved ones, especially his widow and children, our sincere sympathy, and commend them to the care of our Heavenly Father, in whom he so faithfully trusted.

Fifth: That a copy of these resolutions be spread upon our society records, one sent to the bereaved family, one sent to The Christian Sun and one to the Henderson Daily Dispatch for publication.

THOMAS.

Like one who honorably engages himself throughout the day and then awaits and welcomes the bed-time hour was the pilgrimage and passing of my friend and brother, A. Scott Thomas, of Jonesboro, N. C. The same good humor, the same good will toward all people, the same God's eternal love (and that any time which he passed through the sunshine and shadows of his day, were abiding as he moved into the golden-fringed shades of the evening.

Being a builder by trade, scores of buildings stand today as memorials to his trained mind and hands. But better than that, a thousand lives are better today because of having shared his cheerfulness, his friendly interest and sane philosophy of faith and fair dealing.

Exactly thirty-three years from the wedding day, his grief-stricken companion and their two children saw loving hands carefully place his body in its last resting-place and cover the mound with beautiful flowers while several hundred people stood by and joined in deserved tribute to his life.

ELON COLLEGE

of the

CONGREGATIONAL CHRISTIAN CHURCHES OF THE SOUTHEAST

ELON was founded to train Christian leaders for the New South.

ELON has done its task well—one graduate in seven being in the Christian ministry. The other six express Christian leadership in the various professions and vocations. Experience teaches that spiritual leadership must be indigenous.

The South is now a New South ready for an inclusive Church, the type of Church for which Elon has stood for forty years and for which she is prepared to produce capable leadership.

With no Church in the community, save the College Auditorium, ELON has practiced Christian Union for faculty, students, and community for four decades.

Its contribution to Christian Education is nationally known and approved.

Its Christian Education Building, providing laboratory facilities for religious leadership training, is unique and is the first college building of its type in the world.

ELON confines itself to undergraduate liberal arts work with that religious emphasis which befits the Christian College.

In ELON the Congregational-Christian Church has an asset of marvelous hopefulness.

The South needs her Yale, her Oberlin, her Carleton, her Pomona for the intellectual leadership of the United Church. Many regard ELON as strategically located and spiritually endowed to become such a center of illumination and leadership training.

TEAGUE.

Mrs. Ettie Jane Teague, wife of P. D. Teague, Liberty, N. C., Route 3, fell asleep in death at her home on January 11, 1931, in her 66th year. She is survived by her husband and three daughters. She was a member of Pleasant Hill Christian Church and had been since girlhood. She was deeply interested in the Church, a faithful attendant and a good Sunday School teacher. Her large class of women attended the funeral in a body.

A good wife, fond mother, and faithful Church-worker has passed from labor to reward. The funeral services were conducted by the writer, assisted by Rev. T. J. Green, and her body was laid to rest in the Church cemetery. Sweet be her sleep till the Master bids her awake. May the Healer of broken hearts comfort the bereaved.

GARDNER.

Whereas, on the 19th day of December, 1930, our Heavenly Father saw fit to call from labor to reward our beloved brother and co-worker, L. B. Gardner; and whereas, we, the remaining members of High Point Christian Church, are deeply conscious of our loss and desire that our records bear permanent testimony of the Christian life and usefulness of our brother; now, therefore, be it resolved:

First: That in the passing of Brother Gardner, we have lost one of our most faithful members.

Second: That his devotion and loyalty to God's service in the Church made him outstanding in its membership.

Third: That we bow submissively to the will of our all-wise Father who does nothing save for the good of His children.

Fourth: That we who are left strive ever more earnestly to carry on the work in which our departed brother was so whole-heartedly interested.

Fifth: That a copy of these resolutions be sent the bereaved family, a copy

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

By DR. W. C. WICKER.

EIGHTY MISSIONARIES WANTED.—

The candidate department of the Board of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian Church has issued a call for eighty new missionaries to meet requests from the field for the current year. Many calls have come from China and India. These countries seem to be awakening to a greater need for missionaries. Many of their young people are coming to Western colleges and educating themselves and returning with a new vision which makes them call for the light from Christian lands.

NIEBUHR AT YALE.—

Dr. H. Richard Niebuhr, at one time president of Elmhurst College, but for the past several years dean of Eden Seminary Evangelical Synod School at St. Louis, Mo., has accepted a call to the chair of Christian ethics at Yale Divinity School. Theology has been called the "queen of sciences," and owing to the advancement of physical sciences, until recently it lost this title, but it is becoming an empirical science and is likely to regain its place as the "queen of sciences" by adopting the scientific method of study.

CHRISTIAN HERALD.—

The Christian Herald, founded in 1878 as a weekly publication, came out last week as a monthly. The editors claim that they want what they call "the greater Christian Herald." Daniel A. Poling is its editor-in-chief, and Stanley High is editor. The paper, as a weekly, was an excellent Christian journal, but with the change it promises to be even greater. It is replete with a high type of contributions of the finest Christian literature. Some of the best contributors to religious journalism have articles in the February number.

LENTEN PERIOD.—

Many Churches will observe Lenten services in preparation for Easter. An entirely new program has been announced for this period. It should be observed with meditation, prayer, self-examination and a closer walk with the Spirit during this period. Special sermons should be preached on the meaning of this season, and the spirit of joy that should follow this service of preparation. Young people should be prepared for decision day and confirmation and admission to Church membership at Easter to begin a new life in Christ.

CONFERENCE ON SPIRITUAL EMPHASIS.—

The Presbyterian Conference on Spiritual Emphasis in the Church, to be held by them in the seminary Church at the Presbyterian Theological Seminary, Chicago, February 9th, will have as its slogan "An Awakened Church for an Expectant World." A thousand Churches within convenient distance of Chicago have been invited to send their strongest leaders as representatives. Among the speakers scheduled are Rev. Edward P. Westphal, director of adult education for the Presbyterian Church, who is in charge of the program; Prof. S. M. Zwemer, Dr. Joseph A. Vance, and others.

DEAN MATTHEWS HEADS FEDERATION.—

At the annual meeting of the Chicago Church Federation, held January 26th, Dean Shailer Matthews was re-elected as head of the federation another term. Dean Matthews has already served in this position for two terms, but there was a unanimous demand for him to serve, although hitherto the rule has been only for two terms. Reports from local Churches indicate 65,161 members have been added to their membership during the past year. This gives some indication of the progress of religious work in the windy city of the West, and the work under the supervision of the federation.

DEATH OF DR. CARROLL.—

Dr. H. K. Carroll, widely known for years as a Church statistician, died at his home in Plainfield, N. J., January 21st, at 82 years of age. He filled important positions in public service as editor of the Independent from 1876 to 1898, as United States commissioner to Porto Rico in 1898 to 1899, and during the next few years he rendered editorial service with the Methodist Missionary Society, the Federal Council, and the Asbury Memorial Association. During recent years he was best known for his annual statistics on all religious denominations, based upon census of Church membership. He was author of several books, among them being "Francis Asbury in the Making of American Methodism."

SCHOOL-ATTENDANCE BILL.—

This bill has reached the committee stage of the House of Commons in the English Parliament. Unless something is agreed upon by those who meet together, the bill will be killed, chiefly by Roman Catholic influence, strengthened on some sides by the distrust of certain Anglicans and of the free Churches. The scheme was approved by almost all educational experts. It was an attempt to divide elementary education into two sections, the division being made at the age of about eleven, while the school-leaving age was to be raised to fifteen. Roman Catholics seem to oppose any changes in school systems looking to their improvement. They claim that the Church should control education of the children.

PROHIBITION ISSUE IN SCHOOLS.

With a wet senator in Congress from Cleveland, Ohio, the temperance question is constantly bobbing up in unwelcome places. The latest issue has to do with the public schools. Years ago the State Legislature passed a law requiring the public schools of the State to observe "Temperance Day" on a certain Friday in January with a two-hour program. This is a good custom for the proper instruction of the young people of our public schools concerning the evils of the drink habit and to prepare them for clean citizenship. This law, however, seems to be of little service to the children of Cleveland, for the program is a farce because the men who put it on make a farce of it. The meaning of the eighteenth amendment should be fully explained by the schools to the children as a part of their history lesson.

LAW TO COMPEL CHURCH ATTENDANCE.—

In the year 1677 there was a law passed by an act of Parliament that people should attend divine service on the Lord's Day, and this law was called into action recently when the Sunday Games League of London applied for a summons against one of their friends, Councilor Cox, under the act of 1677, because on January 4th, being Lord's Day, he did "unlawfully fail to exercise himself thereon in the duties of piety and true religion publicly and privately." Evidence was given that on that day Councilor Cox was under observation by his friends and he neither went to Church nor made any public supplication or prayers. The defendant said that he was not an irreligious man, but he claimed that no civil court had any right to compel him to attend a place of worship. It would take 20,000 policemen to enforce the act. The defendant was admonished and let go free.

SUMMER SCHOOL IN THEOLOGY.—

There will be a summer school in theology at Union Seminary from July 6th to August 14th, under the auspices of Union Seminary, Yale Divinity School, and a part of the summer session of Columbia University. Union has been conducting a summer school for two years. This year members of the faculties of Union and Yale, as well as professors from other schools, will compose the teaching staff, which will include President Coffin and Professors Moffatt, Niebuhr, Frame and Harris, of Union; Professors Tweedy, Shedd, Calhoun and Shelton Smith, of Yale; Rev. Frank R. Barry, of Balliol College, Oxford; Prof. W. R. Taylor, of Toronto University; Prof. Richard Niebuhr, of Eden Seminary, and Prof. McGiffert, of Chicago Theological Seminary. The faculty of Yale Divinity School will be represented by Dean Weigle, and Dean Gaylord S. White, of Union, is director of the summer courses.

NOTES-PERSONALS

And this commandment have we from Him, That he who loveth God love also his brother (1 John 4:21).

Elon College again rejoices in having its regular and beloved pastor, Rev. A. W. Hunt, back in the college pulpit after a protracted and severe illness.

Now is a good time to renew for THE CHRISTIAN SUN and get some one else to renew also. It costs just as much to bring the paper out in "hard times" as in days of prosperity.

Bishop Candler, Atlanta, Ga., says: "The distressing want of the prodigal son drove him to return to his father's home and heart. It is time for this prodigal nation to cease bemoaning its loss of goods and begin to bewail its loss of God."

Rev. J. A. Henderson, president of Franklinton-Christian College, has recently suffered a serious attack of influenza, and during the time his mother passed away. Our sympathies go out to President Henderson in this sore bereavement, as he feels he has lost not only a true friend in all his undertakings, but a most faithful, devoted and loving mother.

Dr. W. H. Day, pastor of a large Congregational Church, Bridgeport, Conn., and president of the American Missionary Association, and Rev. W. Knighton Bloom, Secretary of Missions, Congregational, Washington, D. C., were welcome and interested visitors at Elon College Monday, February 2nd. At luncheon in West Dormitory, Dr. Day spoke briefly of his visit and the favorable impressions he had of Elon.

Recently an editor of a paper wrote United States Senator Sheppard, of Texas, requesting his opinion about repealing the eighteenth amendment. Here was the Senator's reply: "There is as much chance for the repeal of the eighteenth amendment and the Volstead law as there is for a humming-bird to fly to the planet Mars with the Washington Monument tied to its tail." Evidently Senator Sheppard believes that the eighteenth amendment and the Volstead act are here to stay for a season yet.

From Bro. Hermon Eldredge, in the Congregationalist and Herald of Gospel Liberty, it is learned that President W. A. Harper, of Elon College, while recently in attendance at the Council of Church Boards of Education, in Indianapolis, Ind., was re-elected chairman of the committee on religious education and was also chosen president of the Conference of Congregational and Christian Colleges. Evidently that conference of colleges wanted a man who would bring things to pass, and they found him.

Pleasant Union Church, near Lillington, N. C., was entirely destroyed by fire nearly a year ago. Rev. J. Lee Johnson, pastor, has been holding services regularly since in nearby places generously loaned by other Churches and friends. Meanwhile, the congregation of Pleasant Union is rebuilding, even in these depressed times, a far bigger and better house of worship than that destroyed by the fire. Mrs. M. E. Wilder, Lillington, N. C., is the treasurer of the rebuilding fund, and any SUN reader desiring to aid in a most worthy work may send same to her.

The Board of Christian Education of the Christian Church announces that Rev. J. L. Lobinger, 14 Beacon Street, Boston, Mass., becomes our Secretary of Missionary Education. We shall emphasize the importance of enrolling as a World Service School, and send literature to all Churches requesting the same. Missionary education is to have special emphasis this year in the program of Congregational and Christian Churches. Miss Eldredge and Dr. Minton, as well as Mr. Lobinger, will be glad to render service to you in your missionary education work.

Pastor J. W. Fix writes that his Church recently held a Church supper, "which was a great success. It was a regular love-feast and was attended by 180 of our people. Such an occasion, I think, goes far in creating good will and binding each other to God and to Church." THE SUN editor was present when the announcement was made that the supper would be held, and it was definitely stated that there would be no charge and no money consideration, as the Church was holding the supper for an evening of good-fellowship and get-together on the part of Church and Sunday School. We have no doubt that the occasion was all that Bro. Fix says it was—and more!

Mrs. J. A. Williams, Franklin, Va., president of the Woman's Board, Southern Christian Convention, has prepared a very thoughtful and helpful program for study and worship for Junior Missionary Societies. A copy of the program has been sent to the societies, but, that other societies than those at present organized may have the benefit of it, the program is to appear monthly with the program of the Women's and Young People's Societies in THE CHRISTIAN SUN. Mrs. Williams' program is presented in convenient form and beautifully arranged for use in societies for the next eight months. Any Willing Workers' Society wishing such a program can secure it by addressing request to Mrs. J. A. Williams, Franklin, Va.

Under date of San Juan, Porto Rico, January 27th, Secretary W. P. Minton writes: "We had a good trip down (from New York to Porto Rico) and have had two busy days. We leave in the morning for Fajardo, and hope to have the wedding of the three missions tomorrow night. Will be in Ponce and vicinity the last of this week." The three missions referred to are Christian, Congregational and United Brethren. The object of the trip on the part of Secretary Minton and those from the other boards with him was to complete the union of the mission work of these three communions in Porto Rico. The missions there have been desiring to be one for several years, and this is the consummation of their desire and of many prayers and efforts in the direction of a larger work with a united effort in Porto Rico.

The Christian Advocate, Nashville, Tenn., official organ of the Southern Methodist Church, is in the midst of a campaign to add 50,000 new subscribers to its list. In writing of this campaign, the Advocate editor says: "Hundreds of our leading pastors and laymen believe that one of the greatest boons to Southern Methodism in the trying days ahead would be the weekly visit of this periodical in 50,000 additional homes. Their letters leave no doubt in our minds about that point. Every day the mail brings us several of these encouraging notes. The gist of them is:

"It can be done. It must be done. Count on us to help in any way possible." The spirit of this is exactly that reflected in Dr. Staley's "Suffolk Letter" in THE SUN, January 29th, about "The Christian Sun." How we wish that our pastors and laymen would rally to the support of Bro. C. D. Johnston, circulation manager of THE SUN, in his worthy efforts to increase our subscription list. Remember that every SUN reader is a real asset to Church life and activity and in kingdom service.

REV. G. D. HUNT'S LETTER.

Permit me to speak a word through your paper, THE CHRISTIAN SUN, in reference to my work for this year. We are building up a most beautiful spirit of co-operation at Richland, Ga., and Old Providence Chapel Christian Churches. It is only four miles out from Richland to Providence Chapel. Many of the members of the latter Church reside in Richland, and therefore the logical thing for them to do is to attend services at both places, which they are doing in a beautiful way.

We have a good Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Society at Richland Church, which is being attended by members of both Churches. We desire to make the tie still stronger between the two congregations. We are expecting to organize our young people at Providence Chapel at an early date. We have some fine musical talent at both Churches, and the work in both localities is prospective of much good. This beautiful spirit of fellowship will be strengthening to the work, and we expect to see great good come from the effort.

I am trying to serve the Church at Roanoke, Ala., in the Alabama Christian Conference and am giving two Sundays each month to this little Church—first and third Sundays. We are working here under great depression handicaps since the banks closed. Business has been going at a low ebb. Many good people have lost their jobs, and many others will do so. Our people are all laboring people, and, therefore, our little Church feels the depression very keenly.

We cannot meet our obligations under the conditions at present, but we have a loyal little band and some of the most self-sacrificing folks that I have ever met. We have a good Sunday School and a faithful band of Christian Endeavorers, a loyal Woman's Missionary Society and a good class of young people's Willing Workers, and all these auxiliaries are doing good service for the kingdom of our Lord. We have a fine choir of singers who delight to furnish us with inspiring music. It is a joy to serve the work of my charge this year. Evidently the Church of Jesus Christ holds the key to the prevailing conditions, and we must get the people to attend Church, as the Church needs their presence and their prayers, and that given, the Lord will provide for other contributions necessary to be made.

It is a sad mistake for one to stay away from Church because one cannot contribute as they did formerly. Don't decide that you cannot support your pastor because you have no money. Pay him with such things as you have. If every one will set aside just a small amount for their pastor, he will be cared for in a bountiful way. Don't neglect him just because you cannot do as much as you would desire, for he and his family must eat and wear clothes just like other folks. Pray for him, speak with him often, cheer his weary heart, give him an encouraging word and let him know you appreciate his efforts; he is doing the best he can. I am praying that the Lord may open up the way, and may we be willing to be used of Him to accomplish this great purpose.

CONGREGATIONAL NEWS

REV. E. C. GILLETTE, Editor; REV. F. P. ENSMINGER, and REV. M. J. SWEET, Associates.

REV. RICHARD A. MCKAY has moved from Woodbury, Ga., to the Mt. Olive Church community, where he is pastor, near Tallahassee, Ala.

DR. & MRS. ROBERT A. GEORGE are to be away from their Church for two weeks on a visit to a brother in Florida, and while there Dr. George is preaching in his former charge at New Smyrna.

SECY A. W. SPARKS, of the Rural Church Department of the Church Extension Boards, visited five Congregational Churches of the Central Association in one week, while preaching at the United Church in Birmingham.

NEW PORT RICHEY, FLA.: This Church recently raised $125.00 and paid off the debt on its new pews, and also raised $100.00 toward a new roof. The Church conducts a mission-study class which is known as "The India Class." The pastor is Rev. Ralph Krout.

MEMORIAL SERVICE was held on February 5th at Rollins College for George Morgan Ward, D. D., L.L. D., president-emeritus of the college. Friends of Mrs. Ward will be interested to know that she has gone to her old home, 2525 Bayshore Boulevard, Tampa, Fla.

REV. BARNIE CROCKETT, of Georgia, and a graduate of Piedmont, is pastor of the Congregational Church at Big Oak, Ill., while attending Chicago Theological Seminary. His wife was Miss Olga Winter, who attended Piedmont College and Atlanta Theological Seminary.

UNION CHURCH, CHATTANOOGA, has been progressing under the leadership of Rev. George W. Blount. A group of adults, including young men, joined the Church in 1930. The organization raised its apportionment. An installation service for Church officers attracted a good-size congregation.

DR. WM. HORACE DAY, of Bridgeport, Conn., favored some of the Carolina Churches by paying them a swift visit, February 1, 2, and 3. He spoke at Elon College, Alice Freeman Palmer Institute, and at United Church, Raleigh. Later he will visit Charleston, S. C., on his way home from his visit in Florida.

REV. ROSS ENSMINGER is pastor of the Congregational Church at La Moille, Ill., while taking graduate studies at the University of Chicago. On January 23rd John Ensminger passed the government inspection as aviator at Lincoln, Neb., taking various tests in the air for an hour, thus becoming the third sky pilot in this family.

A HOLD-UP: Some Church clerk is holding up the registrar of his conference by not sending in his year-book report. Is that your Church clerk? In fact, there may be several such delinquent clerks. It is time now that the reports were all in and that the registrar was able to compile the results and send them to the National Council office. Please co-operate.

SOUTHERN PINES reports a most helpful series of meetings recently, conducted by Miss Lucy T. Ayres. Charleston, S. C., is also high in its praise of the good effect of these meetings Miss Ayres held there. The Country Life Academy joins in and tells the story of how the student body was intensely interested and helped by the meetings held there. Miss Ayres is this week conducting meetings at Albemarle, and a like report is expected. All in all, it seems these "Experiences in Evangelism," so unique in the life of this lady, are being used to great advantage wherever she goes.

PILGRIM CHURCH, CHATTANOOGA, added seventy-two new members in 1930. In Dr. Raymond's pastorate of four years, the total growth in membership has been 159, with 26 losses by death and transfer. The Church enrollment on February 1, 1927, was 173. With a new increase of 76 per cent, the total is now 306. Benevolences during the four years have totaled $4,311, of which nearly three-fourths has been for the apportionment. The total gifts during these four years were $37,885. The apportionment giving of 1930 was $830, the largest to date. We could use some more Raymonds.

ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.: This Church has recently participated in the twelfth annual Inter-denominational School of Missions. Two of those who spoke at the Congregational Church were Mrs. Henry W. Peabody, well-known missionary leader, and Rev. McCoy Franklyn, president of the Crossnore Mission School in North Carolina. Dr. Kerrison Juniper is pastor of the St. Petersburg School. So successful have the St. Petersburg schools of missions been that there has now been organized the Florida Chain of Missionary Assemblies and ten Florida cities will this season have the opportunity to hear world missionary leaders.

LENTEN MATERIAL.

The Lenten season is coming to be observed quite widely among the non-liturgical Churches, and it has demonstrated its value for the deepening of the religious life and as a season for the winning of new recruits to the following of Christ and to membership in the Churches. This year Lent will begin on Wednesday, February 18th, and we recommend its use to our Congregational-Christian Churches.

The Commission on Evangelism and the Devotional Life has prepared and is ready to furnish pastors with very helpful printed material. It would not be possible for us to list all of the valuable pamphlets and folders which they have printed. We believe that any Church will be benefited by having a supply of these devotional helps on hand for reading during the Lenten period.

We would especially call attention, however, to the pamphlets which are designed to help the pastor who conducts a training-class for his young people. We believe that every pastor should have such a class and that our young people who come into our Church membership should be trained to think seriously and clearly with regard to the Christian life, its meaning and its obligations. Among these helps are the following pamphlets: "Six Lessons for the Pastor's Class," "A Brief Textbook for the Pastor's Training-Class," "Conversations with the Training-Class," "The Church as a Society of the Friends of Jesus," and "Jesus and the Christian Life." All of these interpret the Christian life and the Church in a sane and convincing way. The commission also recommends for use, especially for the older group, the little book by Prof. Bosworth on "What it Means to be a Christian." For those Congregational Churches which desire to understand the principles and spirit of the fellowship, there is recommended by the commission the folder, "Congregationalism," which gives a statement of faith adopted at the National Council at Kansas City and widely used among Congregational Churches, and the little book entitled "The Congregational Churches," written by Dr. Fagley.

If any pastor has not received samples or an order-blank containing a list of the printed material, he should write at once to the Commission on Evangelism and Devotional Life, 287 Fourth Avenue, New York City, N. Y.

METHODS CORNER

By REV. ELISHA A. KING, D. D.

Miami Beach, Fla.

A few months ago I attended a Church conference, where methods of work among young people were discussed. The leader told about his experience with a group of fifty young people of high school age. The emphasis of his talk was the social life of the young people in the Church. Originally, his society met Sunday nights for a distinctively religious meeting. The attendance was poor and interest lagged. A new plan was devised and the society began to meet around in the homes of Church members on a week-night. It was a combination of religious and social activity. Under his direction, a regular religious service was held, and this was followed with a social hour or two. The religious service was not on the order of the old Church prayer-meeting, where individuals stood up and "witnessed for Christ" (as they did when I was a boy, for example), but it was in the form of a conference, where a leader presented a question and every one discussed it in familiar fashion. This arrangement created a new interest. Sitting in a circle, thinking, talking and asking questions leads to freedom of speech. Some leaders do not seem to care whether the discussion is summed up or not, but others feel that some conclusion should be reached and a lesson enforced. However, the gentleman who was speaking seemed to think the young people got a lot out of the experience.

The question of entertainment, of the conduct of the social hour, bothered this man a great deal. He did not want the young people of the Church to dance, but he found himself in a tight place one evening when the young people met with a deacon of the Church. This deacon had provided an orchestra and planned for a dance. The young people danced, but the fact that they could seemed to take off the edge somewhat. They were not so keen about wanting to. The result of this man's experience with the young people in the social hour led him to believe that if they were given their freedom to do such things, they soon lost interest in that kind of entertainment and craved something different. He turned to other means of social expression and found the young people thoroughly with him.

Many leaders of young people have made this same discovery. The point seems to be that if somebody will take the time and pains to study up some really worth-while social and recreational programs that are really interesting and worthy of consideration, the young people's social entertainment in Church life is quite well in hand. We have found Theresa Wolcott's "The Book of Games and Parties" (almost any good book store) and "Ice Breakers," by Edna Geister, very suggestive. There are many more. We need to give the young people something better than they have, and they will appreciate it and co-operate.

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to commune or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

FIRST AND GREATEST COMMANDMENT.

Jesus spoke with authority when He said, "The first and greatest commandment is, Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and with all thy strength." Now, the second commandment, dependent upon and growing out of this, is, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." Much of the teaching of our day substitutes this commandment for the first, or ignores the first by putting sole emphasis on the second. Many of us think we have served God when we have shown a favor or done a kindness to our fellowman. There is no such teaching in Scripture.

A kindness or a favor to our fellow-man may be quite a selfish and a godless act. We may render our neighbor a service or seem to love him with the sole thought that he, the neighbor, will in turn or some day render us a greater service, and return to us four-fold all that we have done for him or her. Favors to fellowman, even to one's neighbor, are not enough. Jesus never said it was enough. He put that second. The second commandment is like unto the first, but certainly is not a substitute for it. There is not sufficient driving power, there is not sufficient pulling power in love to a human being only. The only genuine abiding love is the love that God has for man, in turn, the love that man has for God. Out of this permanent and abiding love, one may get sufficient strength and power to enable one to love his neighbor as himself. The best and the truest neighbors are those who put God first and draw on the source of His infinite love, which enables them to love their neighbor as themselves.

Recently a questionnaire was submitted to a number of business men. One of the questions was this: "What difference would it make in your thinking and in your life if you left God out?" While most replied that it would make all the difference, one replied it would make no difference whatsoever. A question more to the point is: "What difference would it make if God left you out of His care and love?" He is the Source and Center of love, and one without that source to draw from is pitiable indeed. That is what Jesus meant in John 4:14. God makes all the difference in one's life, because He is love as well as life, and those who would love truly, unfalteringly, unfailingly, even those who would love their neighbor as themselves must draw upon the source of that unending love, must first love God with all one's heart, soul and mind. Then one is prepared to carry out the second commandment. But the second of Christ's two commandments can never be substituted for the first. He never taught or intimated that it could be. J. O. A.

WHEN HARDEST PRESSED.

There is one unmistakable sign of true bravery. When hardest pressed, go forward. The modern version of this was in the command of a famous general who reported, "My life is giving away, my right is demoralized, my center is wavering. I am giving orders for 'forward march' on all lines." When he was hardest pressed, he went forward. This was not only good generalship, but good Scripture as well. When Israel's army and its camp followers were all hardest pressed, with impassable barriers in front and Pharaoh's army pressing hard in the rear, God said to Moses (Ex. 14:15): "Wherefore criest thou unto me? Speak unto the children of Israel, that they go forward." There is divinity and there is bravery, and there is inspiration for you in that. When hardest pressed, go forward.

Right now the whole world around about us is hard-pressed. Money is scarce and hard to get. Many are out of employment. Some are giving up; others are despairing. The barriers in front seem insurmountable. The army of the enemy—Failure—is pressing hard. Therefore, go forward. This is the message for individuals who are losing courage and who are on the verge of nervous breakdown and disaster. It is certainly the message to the Church.

The Churches are hard-pressed. In many instances, pastors' salaries are unpaid, current expenses go without being met. Institutions and enterprises of the Church suffer and are on the verge of collapse. If ever the Church and the people of the Church needed to take counsel of God in His dealing with Moses under similar conditions, it is now. The voice comes ringing from the battlements of glory today as it came ringing in the ears and heart of Moses, "Speak unto the children of Israel, that they go forward." J. O. A.

LET THE CHRISTIAN CHOOSE.

Many of us Christians are very scanty in our contributions to the cause and commandments of the Prince of Peace. We are quite lavish, on the other hand, in our contributions to the gods of conflict and of war. Maybe it is because the former is left to our individual choice and inclination, and the latter to political and governmental mandate and manipulation. In the last four or five years, our contributions to the messengers and the message of good will throughout the earth have decreased, while the contributions, through governmental appropriations, to the forces of war and conflict have mounted higher and higher. In 1890 the Army cost $36,500,000, and the Navy $21,000,000; a grand total of $57,500,000. In this good year of 1931, when we are at peace and our government has signed a solemn pact not to resort to war for the adjustment of international relations, our Army is to cost the government $351,000,000, and the Navy $380,000,000; a total of $731,000,000. If, during this year, our Church forces shall contribute and spend $17,000,000 to carry the message of the Prince of Peace around the world—which message is the world's only hope for permanent peace and friendly relationships among the nations—we will do well, and surpass the contribution in this behalf of previous years. That is to say, as a nation, we stand to spend this year on our Army and Navy—our dependable fighting forces in the event of war—at least forty-three times as much as the Christian forces of America will spend on missions—our only dependable force in the world of carrying the message of life and light and peace and good will to the nations and the peoples of the earth. J. O. A.

SPIRITUAL WITNESSES FOR CHRIST.

The Church, founded on the Day of Pentecost, was spiritual in experience, preaching and results. It grew out of an order "not to depart from Jerusalem, but to wait for the promise of the Father" (Acts 1:4). "Ye shall receive power after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you" (Acts 1:8).

After the ascension, the disciples returned to Jerusalem and went into an upper room, where they continued with one accord in prayer. In that prayer meeting of ten days there were the disciples, women, and Mary the mother of Jesus (Acts 1:13, 14); the number was about one hundred and twenty. In that group, Peter stood up and preached. "When the Day of Pentecost was fully come, they were all with one accord in one place" (Acts 2:1). "They were all filled with the Holy Ghost and began to speak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance" (Acts 2:4).

I. The Discouraged Church of That Day.

1. Jesus had ascended and gone from the Church and, as they returned from Olivet, they were helpless, discouraged, and united in prayer.

2. Relief came by the Holy Ghost. All were filled with the Holy Ghost and began to speak with other tongues. Ten days of prayer and one one day of preaching brought 3,000 into the Church.

II. The Discouraged Church of This Day.

1. Jesus has not gone from the Church, but the Church has gone from Jesus; that is the feeling expressed in many ways. The best means left to the Church of this day is prayer, as it was in that day.

2. Relief can come by the outpouring of the Holy Ghost in answer to united prayer. A great spiritual movement will come to the Church when the Holy Spirit comes in power.

III. It was a Union Prayer Meeting.

1. Peter, the eager; John, the mystic; James, the practical; Thomas, the doubter; the women, and Mary. "They were all with one accord, in one place" (Acts 2:1).

2. The great experience was the power of the Holy Ghost upon them, and the successful preaching. There is too much preaching in this day and too little prayer. All great revivals follow great spiritual depressions.

That prayer meeting made them all spiritual witnesses for Christ. "They spoke with other tongues as the Spirit gave them utterance"; and sinners were moved to seek and find Jesus Christ. In origin, the Church was spiritual; and it must continue so if its life and witnessing is to save the world. What the Church needs is a great spiritual revival.

GROWING TOWARDS GOD.

"Heaven is not reached at a single bound;
But we build the ladder by which we rise
From the lowly earth to the vaulted skies,
And we mount to its summit round by round.

"I count this thing to be goodly true:
That a noble deed is a step toward God,
Lifting the soul from the common clod
To a purer air and a broader view."

The above quotation, taken from Josiah Gilbert Holland's "Gradatim," carries with it the philosophy of becoming like God. There must be a view of God. We have one supreme source from which we can get that view—that is the life of Christ. We get a picture of the life of Christ from the Bible. If we would grow toward God, we must keep looking at Christ.

I know of no better way to increase our devotional life than at the beginning of each day to take the time to read God's description of Himself through Christ, and then commune with Him in prayer. After we have read the Bible and prayed, it is well to wait and let the Lord speak to us. This sends us out for the day without a determination to become like Him. It gives us our view of God. But this effort would amount to little if we stop at this. The Christ way is not the way of ease, but of giving of self.

If we would grow toward God, we must not depend upon the leaps and bounds, but we must build our way with deeds of kindness, love and service. The best way to prevent weeds from growing in the field is to plant a crop that will produce something worth while. The best way to increase our devotional life and to grow more like Christ, is to fill each day with deeds of service. It is possible for an individual to spend all of his time in trying to weed out the undesirable traits of character. The individual who spends his time in that way will never grow toward God. But one who keeps an eye on Him, consults Him at the beginning of each day and spends the rest of the time in service for others, will soon become like Him.

We may best render service to others and guard our devotional life by being a real soul-winner. It increases one's desire to become more like God when he strives to introduce some one else to God. Therefore, one who reads God's word prays for the guidance of the Spirit and then goes after some one else whom he might introduce to God, that individual will safeguard his own devotional life and grow nearer to His Father.

"I sought the Lord and He eluded me,
I sought my brother and found all three—
My God, my brother and me."

There is a time and a season for all things. We plant wheat, corn and fruit trees, all at different seasons of the year. If planted out of season, they will not make their yield. If we would reach the realms of heaven and grow toward God, we must have a season for our devotional life wherein we can read God's word, talk to Him in prayer, and then let him talk to us. It will keep us spiritually alert to speak to some one each day about his or her soul, and, if possible, win that soul to God.

"WHY PROHIBITION HAS FAILED."

BY THOMAS C. AMICK.

(In reply to an article of the above caption by Henry Knight Miller in "Psychology Magazine" for December, 1930.)

I.

In our reply to Henry Knight Miller's article in the Psychology Magazine for November, 1930, a conclusive argument was made to all the statements Dr. Miller had made in this former magazine article. In the December number of the same magazine appeared another article under the title heading this paper. Our former reply was sent to Henry Knight Miller, the editor of Psychology Magazine, but so far he has failed to publish or to make any reference to it.

The article in the December number of the Psychology Magazine, in two or three introductory paragraphs, presents a condensed statement of the points in the first article, and then the writer, undertakes to enlighten us as to why prohibition has failed. He takes it as a foregone conclusion that we all agree with him that prohibition is a miserable failure, and makes a number of dogmatic statements, on most of which we propose to take issue with him. The fact is, there are thousands, yes hundreds of thousands, of us who do not believe prohibition has failed; but we believe that it has really been a wonderful success, and will continue to be a success unless our people, like Dr. Miller, become turncoats and are willing to plunge our country into moral and spiritual degradation and ruin. Prohibition has not failed, but a few of our people, like Dr. Miller, have failed; and because they have failed to uphold prohibition and the nobler aspirations of our people, they hide their heads, like the pursued ostrich, and believe that everything has failed with them. As great a psychologist as Dr. Miller claims to be should be able to observe a little more closely, and if he should do so, he will surely see that the signs of the times do not point to any revocation of the eighteenth amendment. The following are the reasons listed by Dr. Miller for the failure of prohibition:

1. It attempts coercion of the citizens.
2. There was a deep-set objection to the method whereby prohibition was "put over," and an increasing resentment to the methods used to keep it in force.
3. Prohibition has failed because it seeks to supplant education with legislation.
4. The "inferiority complex" is almost universal in society.
5. Notwithstanding the arbitrament of the sword in the Civil War that the majority of the States have a right to dictate to the minority, there is a persistent feeling that the principle of self-determination is paramount.
6. Prohibition has failed to take the profit out of liquor.
7. Human nature has not yet evolved to the plane of perfection at which the average man can resist the appeal of easy money, especially when this is condoned by fellow-agents and winked at by superiors.
8. Prohibition has failed because it overlooked the fact that liquor, with all its evils, does fulfill certain social needs.

We shall answer these reasons seriatim, and, for the sake of brevity, we will suggest answers to these reasons and leave the reader to follow out these answers in his own thinking.

Replying to the first reason why prohibition has failed, we admit that prohibition does attempt coercion of certain of the citizens of our country. But who are these people that prohibition attempts to coerce? We will answer: the bootlegger, the heads of the speakeasies, the drunkard, the man who wallows in the mire and the ditch, the social drinker, and the man who would put the bottle to the mouth of his neighbor for gain. We admit that prohibition attempts the coercion of these classes of people, and it is right that it should do so. There is not a law upon the books but was directly aimed to coerce certain classes of persons. The law against theft, the law against murder, the law against prostitution and vice, all are coercive measures. The Ten Commandments had for their sole object the coercion of the Israelites from doing those things against which the commandments were aimed.

Certain classes of people must be coerced if we wish decent society. The drunken sot, the manufacturer of alcoholic poisons and dopes, the whole "wet gang" who would fleece the widow and the orphan, taking their unholy gains to fleece their nests—all these must be coerced. If we must repeal law because by law some men are coerced, we might as well repeal all law at once and go back to savagery. Mr. Miller's play on words will not fit here. Civilization is based on the fact that each of us gives up certain of our cherished "personal freedom" and we allow ourselves to be coerced with reference to those things that do and would injure society as a whole. Any student of the institutions of our civilization must recognize this at a glance. We are glad to give up certain of our cherished "personal freedom," and we are happy to be "coerced" for the good of the body politic. You may flaunt the word "coercion" before the very ignorant populace if you wish a following of that kind of crowd, and you may flaunt it before the "wet" and he will roll it like a sweet morsel under his tongue, but the thinking person who has the highest interests of his country at heart is glad to be "coerced," that civilization may advance, property may be safe, and God honored and exalted.

We have heard numbers speak both pro and con about prohibition, but we had not heard a single man, whether for or against, speak of it as a "put over" job. At this late day, Mr. Miller has made a startling discovery. With all the publicity that Mr. Miller, in his former article, stated that he had given to the eighteenth amendment with all that was published in the newspapers, how can any person claim that the establishing of this amendment was a "put over" job! There are two methods by which the Constitution of the United States may be amended. One is for the Legislature of each State to call a convention, and when the conventions of three-fourths of the States ratify the proposed amendment, it then becomes a part of the law of the land; the other method is for Congress to refer the proposed amendment to the Legislatures or the General Assemblies of the different States, and when the proposed amendment has passed the Legislatures of three-fourths of the States, then it becomes law. In other words, the methods of ratification are by Conventions or Legislatures, according to the will of Congress.

Some of us are still alive who were living when Congress referred the eighteenth amendment to the Legislatures of the different States, and we know the publicity given to the matter. The Anti-Saloon League did its part in putting on a publicity campaign, the Church and the Church publications did the same, the great metropolitan papers and magazines did their bit of advertising, and the "wets" fought to the last ditch. There was nothing done under cover or in the dark. It was a great fight for a great moral ideal, a saloonless nation on the earth. The fight was won, and nobly won, notwithstanding the machinations of the wets. The wets have tried to blast that ideal by all kinds of subterfuges and claims. And their claim that prohibition is a "put over" job

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Sabbath and work are two words of world-wide and all-time significance. Sabbath or, in our use, Sunday is embraced in a divine command, "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy" (Ex. 20:8). The other command, "Six days shalt thou labor" (Ex. 20:9), is equally binding upon the children of God. Voluntary idleness is equal disobedience to forgetting the Sabbath. Work for six days in the week is enjoined as clearly as keeping the Sabbath Day holy. These commands are not for individuals only, but for communities; for communities are made up of individuals. Unemployment is no more to be deplored than the desecration of the Sabbath. In the command to remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy, the emphasis is on "keep it" (the Sabbath) holy. It is the function of the Church and the State to keep it holy. All violations of the day reflect upon the Church and the government. Both have been concerned about unemployment, and neither has said much about the desecration of the Sabbath. In fact, the city of Norfolk has failed to keep the Sabbath holy by running the theaters on Sunday to help the unemployed. There is no charity in paying fifty cents to see a picture show to help the needy. It is more important to keep it holy than to pretend to help the needy by its violation. It seems that this country is becoming a gaming country instead of a Christian country. Many schools give more attention to athletics, amusements, games, than to real educational work for the improvement of the whole man for Church membership and loyal citizenship. Greece, the great athletic nation, went on the rocks; and Europe lost the religious prestige of the world by disregarding the Sabbath.

America is at the fork of the road at this period of her history by disregard of the Sabbath. It is more important than business. It is more perilous than unemployment. Improvement is always dangerous, and prosperity has filled this country with independence, leisure, selfishness, dissipation, and forgetfulness of God as "the Giver of every good and perfect gift." We have forgotten, it seems, that "in Thee we live and move and have our being." We overlook the fact that the worst sin is the abuse of good. It was so with Adam and Eve, and it has been so ever since. The two greatest blessings are the Sabbath and work. People are healthiest and happiest when they work six days and keep the seventh holy. The artificial never equals the real. God's way is always best, and obedience to His commands not only makes but maintains prosperity for the individual and the community. Good roads, automobiles, education, the press, and prosperity have led people away from home life, Church and the simple way of living and worshiping God. The six days for labor should be kept sacred by such work only as benefits mankind, and Sunday should be kept sacred for rest and worship for the development of soul strength and Christian character.

ELON LETTER.

Success in athletics depends upon four things, and every one of them has its lessons for the great game of life.

1. The lesson of the rules. Every sport has its rules adapted to the particular game, and the players must respect these rules or they will be disqualified.

In our day, when there is such chafing under restraint, such opposition to authority, such aversion to rules and regulations in every realm of our experience, it is refreshing to know that those who engage in football and the other types of college athletics yield themselves readily to the rules of the game. The more readily the rules are obeyed, the more valuable the game is for character-building, and the more likely is victory. The player who breaks the rules is unworthy and will endanger the sport as such. He will bring defeat and shame to his team.

Life, too, has its rules, its principles, and it is obligatory upon each and every one of us to conduct ourselves in accordance with those principles, to recognize that organization, authority, regulations, and rules are necessary for the successful living of life. We must come to the point where we not only submit to the rules of life as a necessary evil, but regard them as promoters of freedom. It is one of the paradoxes of civilization that, as freedom and liberty increase, the rules and regulations designed to govern men in their relationships with one another increase and multiply. Experience has taught that individual freedom is promoted by social limitation in the interest of group life. Athletic games have made no small contribution to our understanding of this vital principle for the ordering of life.

2. College athletics are valuable, too, for the emphasis they give to training. Every candidate for a team gives a pledge to the coach that he will abstain from certain practices and that he will positively do certain things. In order to make the team, the candidate is willing to regulate his diet, his sleep, his leisure time, and so to organize himself that he can perform at a maximum rate of efficiency. In addition to this, he agrees to accept the daily grind of practice in order that he may acquire the skill, the initiative, the resourcefulness, the insight into the critical situations native to the game, so that when in the contest itself he may be able to acquit himself creditably and as a seasoned veteran. He further agrees to obey the will of the coach. To his command he yields his own judgment and accords a willing obedience. I know full well that the charge is made against intercollegiate athletics that the individual tends to become part of the machine and that consequently some of the inherent value for character-building is lost. It is, however, an evidently worth-while experience, for the sake of a great cause, to give one's pledge to undertake grinding practice and then to yield willing obedience to another's will and decisions. The doing of these things has positive value in building character; has suggestive value, too, for the obligations that devolve upon men and women in the discharge of their vocational and professional duties.

3. The team-work required by intercollegiate athletics is a natural outgrowth of the training demands. It is a beautiful thing to witness an athletic team in action—the flower of the manhood of an institution—alert and buoyant with life, eager to give itself for the sake of alma mater, moving with the precision of the needle of the compass, unified in method and in purpose! I do not know anything that is more impressive than a well-trained and well-disciplined football team as it appears on the athletic gridiron ready for a contest, ready to give the best for the sake of the honor of its college. The willingness of the individual player as the game progresses to forget himself as an individual and to merge himself in the team as a whole, constitutes a most inspiring aspect of the athletic benefit to be had in our modern colleges. Athletic teams know that games are not won by individual stars in the athletic firmament, but by the milky way, so to speak, of team-work in which the individual star loses his individuality in the shimmer and the glimmer and the glory of the team as a whole.

We speak about social solidarity, we plead for universal fellowship, we long for Christian brotherhood in the organization of our social relationships with one another, and we do well, but the college athletic team has achieved these worthy aspirations through its devotion to the team as a whole and through its practice of all that is connoted in the term team-work.

4. But college athletics are not complete without a reference to those who play vicariously from the bleachers. The well-trained players, willing to enter into a game according to the rules and in the spirit of team-play, do not constitute the whole benefit to be derived from inter-collegiate athletics. The bleachers also contribute their part, and a splendid part it is, too, that is due to their enthusiasm, their loyalty, and their love expressed in no uncertain terms for the success of their team and for the honor of their alma mater. What can be more inspiring than the cheering accorded a college athletic team by the members of the student body? Their enthusiasm is infectious, their devotion is unalloyed, their loyalty is self-forgetful and perfect. Out of such a situation as this a most splendid contribution to character-building arises.

We likewise need to be enthusiastic for our life-work. The late President Elliot of Harvard used to say that men need to fall in love with their work and to enter upon the day's task as upon an athletic contest. President Elliot was not mistaken in this view. There is danger that the dull, drab, monotonous routine and grind of life may take from the human heart that it victimizes the exuberant joy, that devoted enthusiasm, which are necessary for the achievement of the best results. When college days are over, and the brass bands and the megaphones have ceased to glorify the contest on the gridiron of sport, the need for enthusiasm and love for our work, for loyal devotion to great causes will still be part and parcel of the necessary equipment and attitude of the individual in his effort to live a forthright life. It is this spirit of enthusiasm which will turn the hardest task into joyous play, which will make of the most menial labor an avenue of uplifting service, the vestibule to heavenly places of holy living.

PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE LETTER.

FIVE OBJECTIVES.

The spring semester of Piedmont Junior College has already begun, with much earnestness and with a view of doing more and better work this term.

In modern times, when the school became a definitely organized institution of society, it was necessary to state its aims and purposes. Consequently, at various times, philosophers and others have undertaken to define education as it functions through the institution.

Some have declared the purpose of the school to be the formation of character, or moral character. Spencer and his followers defined the aim of education as complete living, while Dewey and his followers have declared for social efficiency as the main aim of public education. Some school men have defined the purpose of education as disciplinary. Doubtless, there is some basis in fact for any one or all of these statements. However, at the present time, it would seem to be desirable to define the purposes or, as we shall prefer to say, the objects in modern education in more detail and in more concrete terms than any of the foregoing.

Not that it is possible for any final statement of these objectives to be made, but the more significant aspects of the modern educational problem may be suggested. We might state at least five objectives. There can be no debate about the fundamental value of each, though there might be some controversy concerning the order and relative importance. They may be stated as follows: health and physical efficiency, the mastery of the tools of formal learning, vocational efficiency, education for play and recreation, an appreciation of the great moral values in the race experience. These are expressed in obedience, kindness, honor, truthfulness, cleanliness, cheerfulness, honesty, respect for self and others, helpfulness, industry, economy, power of initiative, justice, usefulness, patriotism, courage, self-control, prudence, benevolence, politeness, perseverance, fortitude, sympathy, conservation to duty, comradeship, patience, temperance, hopefulness, determination and fidelity.

Of course, the mere statement of these virtues is not a matter of any significance. They have to be made dynamic according to the principles which will be set forth in moral education. These moral values must be provided for in connection with the family and the home, in connection with our numerous civic relationships, through our denominational schools which have grown out of the institution known as the Church.

Education in a democracy, both within and without the school, should develop in each individual the knowledge, interests, ideals, habits, and powers whereby he will find his place and use that place to shape both himself and society toward ever nobler ends.

S. L. BEOUGHIER.

has no foundation in fact, and every thinking man and woman should nail it at once as false. When this eighteenth amendment was before the States there were sixteen to one for it. That looks like a "put over" job, does it not?

Mr. Miller's third argument is that prohibition has failed because it seeks to supplant education with legislation. To an extent, this argument is valid. Those favoring prohibition should make careful note of it. For more than two-score years we had been educating the people against the evils of the liquor traffic. Prohibition could never have been made an accomplished fact without this education. Possibly we have not put as much stress on education for the last ten years as should have been put on it, but we must commence an intensive campaign of education. There must be no let up. The forces of evil are on the march, and there is no let up with them. Let this word of Mr. Miller be a trumpet blast to the forces of temperance and prohibition to rouse themselves from their lethargy and put on such a campaign of education as will appall even the most sordid and blatant of the liquor element. Let the Church arouse herself and commence a campaign of education against the liquor nuisance; let the Anti-Saloon League and the Business Men's League Against the Liquor Traffic rise to the height of their opportunity and put on such an educational campaign that the liquor traffic, that menace to the nations and that curse of the people of the earth, shall be banished, and Mr. Miller and his "wet" gang will know that they are beaten forever.

Is the "inferiority complex" any reason why prohibition has failed? Dr. Miller tells us this "inferiority complex" leads tens of thousands to drink today just because they get a kick out of defying the law. He further says that they drink simply to prove their superiority over one law. Is this the part of good citizenship? Do good citizens violate the law just to get a kick out of the violation? Are the laws directed against the good citizen? He lives above the law. The law has no hold whatever on the good citizen. The law is always directed against the evil citizen. Shall we repeal a salutary law to comply with the desires of the bad citizenship of our country? Are we to allow them to govern this goodly land of ours? We can see nothing in this "inferiority complex" argument of the wets except a plea to the good citizenship of our country to capitulate to the lower element of our country who steep themselves in liquor and crime and allow them to govern us. Shall we do it?

NOTICE.

At the last annual session of the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention of the Eastern Virginia Conference, it was left to the executive committee to decide on a place of meeting. As yet, we have not received an invitation. If any Church is contemplating entertaining the convention on the "Harvard plan," please decide and extend your invitation immediately. Please write the undersigned. The committee to arrange the program for this convention meets Tuesday following the third Sunday in July.

INDIA PAPER ONLY—Size 2½x4½ inches x¾ inch
The JEWEL is the latest and most attractive Pocket Testament made.
The TYPE is black, bold and larger than that in the famous Vest Pocket edition, and the book itself is smaller.
It is printed exclusively on the famous Holman India paper, noted for its opaque quality and unusual tensile strength.
One advantage of this India paper is that the leaves do not cling together.
The size, 2½x4½ inches, is so small that the book practically fits the palm of the hand.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Secretary.

A PRAYER.

Father of mercy, cleanse and keep Thine own from sin. Forgive, and bring us to tread only Jesus' path of perfect love and conscious duty. Make us doers whose work shall stand. As we bridge the expanse of time for eternity, show us that technical understanding with intensest application to directed effort, unless it produce the power to endure and to make returns in service, is resource but wasted. Teach us the value both of active endeavor and passive strength. Material structures admit of no slack nor slight. Grant us, Father, insight, eagerness, to build as well the "stately mansions" of the soul. In Jesus' name we ask it. Amen. L.

A MISSIONARY ERA.

A conference, for the most part of Presbyterians, met not long since at Princeton Seminary. There were many missionaries as well as outstanding students of missions present, and from the reports it was evidently a great conference. This conference brought to the fore and emphasized emphatically that which other conferences of recent meeting have emphasized, viz: that a new era in mission work has dawned, an era in which the indigenous Church will take the lead in the work of Christian evangelization and the missionary will help not so much in leading as in following. At the conference referred to, Rev. Mr. Hadley, secretary of the Presbyterian Foreign Board, said that which seems to have been the general conviction of the conference, viz: that the new and greatest era of missions is at hand—the age of the indigenous Church, "for it is a bigger opportunity and bigger joy to work with the native leaders than to direct the work ourselves."

The missionaries with whom the editor has met and talked for the past few months have expressed the hope and the expectation that the day would soon come when the indigenous Church, the native converts and workers, would go forth to evangelize their own people and call them to repentance. This is, indeed, a most hopeful sign. One board reports that in a recent year the converts to Christianity and the indigenous Church had contributed $2.00 to every $1.00 sent them from this country. That is to say, for every dollar given to missions by people here in a Christian land, two dollars were given to the same mission in the lands where the mission work was being done. In years past, we have heard it said, though falsely, that it took one dollar of our mission money to get the other dollar across to the people afar off. The time has now come, certainly with one board, when it can say to all, "Put in your dollar now with which to help carry the gospel to fields afar, for it will mean two more dollars added when it gets there."

The road is yet a long, hard one. Idolatry and the worship of false gods, who are no gods, are entrenched and are fighting, and with prejudice, to hold their own and to beat back the forces and the powers of the Son of God. Conditions have changed on the mission fields. Those who treated Christianity with indifference and unconcern are now openly fighting it, recognizing it in a force and a power worthy of the stoutest efforts on the part of those who would overcome it. The opportunity never was so inviting, the privilege never so great as at present to engage in the spiritual task of giving to a world of hate and of sin, the Christ of love and righteousness. J. O. A.

COST OF CRIME.

Crime steals 6½ per cent of the entire income of every American. "The total annual income of the American people is ninety billion dollars, and a very conservative estimate of the annual cost of crime is six billion dollars," writes Vincent Cullen, vice-president of the National Surety Co., New York. "Half of this $6,000,000,000 annual crime waste," says Mr. Cullen, "is lost through theft, burglary, larceny, stock frauds, credit frauds, mercantile frauds, insurance frauds and a thousand and one other swindles and confidence games. The other half is paid in taxes for the prevention, prosecution and punishment of crime, including police, prisons, courts, district attorneys, sheriffs. This anti-crime taxation in New York City alone is $60,000,000 a year."

The enormity of these losses can be better understood in contrast with other costs. The Churches of America contribute to all purposes less than one billion dollars annually. Public school education costs just over two billions a year. The budget of the Federal government is about four billions of dollars. Crime costs as much as the public school system and the Federal budget combined.—Missionary Review of the World.

PROGRAM FOR STUDY AND WORSHIP.

This series of programs has been prepared in the hope that it might prove a help to leaders and stimulate interest in mission work. The programs, however, are only intended as suggestive. Where changes are to be made, the leader should give ample time to work out detail to meet the needs of her society. Parts on the programs should be given out in time to allow the person time for preparation. The leader should urge the parents to assist their children in their preparation.

It is suggested that the program to be used be placed on the blackboard before time of meeting. A poster should be made to announce each meeting. Invitations always help to get a good attendance. They may be both simple and inexpensive.

If there are inquiries about the programs, or additional copies desired, address—

These programs have been the source of much information and help, and it is hoped that all the societies have followed them in their meetings. The "Guest Book," too, is a gem and one of great assistance to the program.

This is the period for the mission study in our societies, and of course all are busy with this feature of our work; then, on February 20th, will come the "World's Day of Prayer for Missions." Be sure to make adequate preparation for this great day, for it is coming to be the red-letter day of our missionary year. Write to your Convention president, Dr. Atkinson or any of the officials of your Conference, and they will be glad to render any aid to help you in observing this day, which is interdenominational and world-wide in its scope. The author of the proposed program is Miss Kathleen MacArthur, of Toronto, Canada, and the theme is "Ye Shall Be My Witnesses." The program will be broadcast at 8:15 Friday morning, February 20th, over station WEAF and some eighteen or twenty other stations. It will be time well spent to tune in on this program.

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

Our Sunday School offerings are starting off very nicely this year, and our income so far has been encouraging. We truly hope and pray that our people will realize that children eat and wear as much when our income is small as they do when we have plenty of money. So, friends, when the monthly offering is taken in your Church, please make it as liberal as you possibly can. We have more than one hundred children to feed, clothe and care for. We are looking to you for support.

When you called me, fourteen years ago, to take charge of your Orphanage, one of my best friends said to me: "You are foolish to accept the place; they won't support the work." I said: "I have faith in our Church-folks to believe, if the Orphanage is handled right, they will support it." For fourteen years you have stood by me in the work. We have built new buildings and we now have a nice plant for orphanage work. We have added to our number of children from time to time and now have more than a hundred little fatherless children. Our Church-folks have stood shoulder to shoulder with us and have backed us in every undertaking. Today our Orphanage plant stands as a credit to the Christian denomination because you have been interested in doing a work of charity and helping those who needed your help and were not able to help themselves. I believe God will bless every dollar you give to help a little helpless child.

ADVENTURES IN YOUTH FELLOWSHIP

"Youth at Work in the Church."

JEWEL TRUITT, Editor, Waverly, Virginia.

THE USUAL MEETING.

Some societies hold the "usual meeting" every week—hold it faithfully! Does your society? Unless yours is an unusual society, it cannot afford to hold the usual meeting. Nor can it attempt a "different meeting" every time.

The kind of publicity that you give the work of your society helps in determining whether it will reach those you need to reach or not. Some newspapers give quite an amount of space for well-written announcements. Some societies profit by this opportunity to announce their meetings. The minister is always glad to announce the meeting, and happy is the society whose minister can do this in an inviting way without sacrificing any of the dignity that should go with such an announcement. Posters, well made and placed in prominent places, always bring good results. Invitations may be sent in the mail occasionally for the variety of it and for the personal touch it gives. But most important of all is the invitation of member to member or friend.

Music counts for a great deal in the young people's society. People everywhere always love to sing. If the young people who come to your society do not like to sing, perhaps you have the wrong kind of song book; perhaps it is the lack of dignity in the singing; perhaps you need a director for the music, or perhaps you could use a better accompanist to good advantage. Investigate the situation, arrive at your conclusion, and work to remedy the trouble. And when you go to buy those new hymn books be sure to get hymn books and not mere song books! There's a world of difference. It pays to buy the best when you buy song books.

In conducting discussion meetings, there are a few points to check up on occasionally to see if you are really having discussion groups that are worth while. First, be sure you are discussing some real issue. There's no point to just talking about something. Get to the heart of a problem and stick with it until you find some solution that has merit. Second, keep on the main issue pretty closely. It doesn't pay to wander too much from the subject. Third, let the discussion be a discussion, not a debate. Arguing doesn't get far in anything—and just about as short a distance in a young people's discussion group as it is possible to go. It may take some extra work to be able to discuss a problem or question intelligently, but do it if it does! Everybody has a right to his own opinion on the question. Remembering that will save some arguments!

Though the discussion type of meeting is perhaps the one most societies use most often, it is by no means the only possible type of meeting. Try dramatizations, and musical programs, and book reviews, and debates, and many other types of programs that you will discover once you resolve to try them.

BOOKS FOR YOUTH.

"Report and Recommendations of the Christian Youth Council of North America (The International Council of Religious Education; 62 pp.; price 25c). This report should be in the hands of every alert young person in our Churches, and no leader of young people can afford to be without it. It is a report of the six commissions, or committees, of young people who reported on topics assigned them at the council meetings in Toronto last June. Each report gives the problems that young people face on that particular topic, and also their suggested solution of these problems. There are reports from the commissions on Jesus Christ, Christian conduct, worship and prayer, other youth, Christian unity, Christian society. Each report outlines in detail helpful suggestions for all Christian youth everywhere in the honest attempt to live Christian lives and to help those around them to be more Christian.

"The Christian Quest Series." The Christian Quest materials have been prepared for young people themselves and for the leaders of youth. There are "Books of Discovery" for boys and girls of twelve to fourteen years of age; price, 25c each. There are books called "My High Road of Adventure" for the older boys and girls. These are priced 15 cents each. There is a set of five booklets for the leader of young people, priced 10 and 20 cents each. Of especial use is the set of resource booklets that have been prepared. Many leaders are finding these booklets indispensable in their work. Young people like to use them, too. This group of booklets includes "Youth at Worship," "Youth and Recreation," "Youth and Story-Telling," "Youth and Dramatics," "Book Friends of Youth," "Youth and Debating," "Youth in Camp," "Youth in Co-operation (with Other Youth)." These booklets are each 15 cents, with the exception of "Youth and Dramatics" and "Youth in Co-operation," which are 25 cents each. Any youth leader who is seriously attempting to do the wonderful task that is his will surely secure copies of these booklets and use them.

"The Successful Young People's Society" (by Catherine Atkinson Miller; Doubleday, Doran & Co.; $1.75; 201 pp.). Miss Miller says in the introduction to her book that "there is a call for a little book which will give, in as much detail as possible, the whole task of the Young People's Society, and the most up-to-date ways of accomplishing that task—a little book which begins at the beginning, not only as a guide to those who have never had a society, but also as an aid to those who are trying to find the causes of failure in an existing society." Such a book is this one that Miss Miller has written. Although Miss Miller is famous as a director of recreation, she writes just as authoritatively upon other phases of Church work. "The Successful Young People's Society" shows how a good beginning is made for a successful society. It shows how to plan for a meeting; it tells how to advertise; it suggests the value of recreation and develops plans for successful recreation; it presents the problem of making missions interesting to young people; it discusses dramatization; it offers as the test of every method to be used with young people, "Does it help young people serve?" As a manual and guide for a newly organized society, or for a society that wishes to be more successful, I know of no better book to recommend than Miss Miller's.

Any books reviewed on this page may be had from THE CHRISTIAN SUN, Richmond, Va., at the price listed. Copies of each of these books are on the shelves of the Board of Christian Education office. The field secretary will be glad to send either of them to you for two weeks in order that you may read and study it. Avail yourself of this opportunity to prepare for better work as a young person or as a leader.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Sunday, February 22, 1931.

TOPIC: "Every Christian a Missionary."

SCRIPTURE: Acts 1:6-8.

For Thought and Discussion.

1. Define the word "missionary."
2. Who is a Christian?
3. What is a "Christian missionary"?
4. If you were a stranger from another country, where you had learned about Christ from a missionary from America, and had come to America expecting "Christians" to be honestly trying to follow Jesus, what would you think?
5. I once heard a Chinese friend say, "We need men like Dwight L. Moody, Phillips Brooks, Robert Morrison and David Livingstone—men who will burn out their lives for Jesus."

"We need missionaries, but we need those who will not only preach with their lips, but with their conduct and living as well, as actions speak louder than words."

"We need missionaries to be our teachers, but we need those who will not only impart to our boys and girls the knowledge of books, but who will let them see that they themselves are living epistles written not with ink, but with the spirit of God Almighty."

Do you think Mr. Chen had a right to say these things? Can America use such missionaries at home? Will you be one?

6. How many Christians do you know who are willing to burn out their lives for Jesus, as did David Livingstone?
7. Why did the gospel of Jesus spread so rapidly at first? Is it important for every Christian to be a missionary? Why?
8. What opportunity has the Christian business man to be a Christian missionary? The doctor? The school teacher? The lawyer?

Scripture readings: Acts 2:41-47, Acts 8:1-40, Acts 14:8-18, Acts 16:9-34.

Dr. J. Edward Kirby, minister; Miss Priscilla Chase, extension worker, and Miss Jewel Truitt, field secretary, are teaching courses in a leadership training school at the Raleigh United Christian Church. Courses in Bible, children's work, and young people's work are being offered. Many leaders in the Churches of the county, as well as those of Raleigh, are in attendance upon the school.

Miss Stella M. Jordan, of Boston, Mass., visited the following Churches in Eastern Virginia last week in the interest of young people's and Church school work: First Congregational Church, of Portsmouth; First Christian Church, Norfolk; Waverly Christian Church, Suffolk Christian Church, Franklin Christian Church, and Holland Christian Church. Miss Jordan brought a fine message of inspiration and greeting to Christian Church folks who heard her.

"No doubt, a world in which matter never got out of place and became dirt, in which iron had no flaws and wood no cracks; in which gardens had no weeds and food grew ready-cooked; in which clothes never wore out and washing was as easy as advertisements describe it; in which the right word was not hard to find and rules had no exceptions, and things never went wrong—would be a much easier place to live in. But for purposes of training and development, it would be worth nothing at all. It is the resistance that puts us on our mettle; it is the conquest of the reluctant stuff that educates the worker. I wish you enough difficulties to keep you well and make you strong and skillful."—Henry Van Dyke.

JESUS BEARING GOOD TIDINGS.

Lesson VIII—February 22, 1931.

GOLDEN TEXT: "He went about through cities and villages, preaching and bringing the good tidings of the kingdom of God."—Luke 8:1.

LESSON: Luke 8.

GOOD TIDINGS.

"He went through cities and villages, preaching and bringing the good tidings of the kingdom of God." The words, "good tidings" here are synonymous with the word "the gospel." The word gospel comes from two words, "good" and "spell," which mean "the good story" or the "good tale." The gospel is good news or good tidings. To those who hear it for the first time, it is the best news that they have ever heard. Alas! that so many of us become so indifferent and careless to the good news just because we have heard it.

What was this good news which Jesus came preaching? In what sense was it glad tidings? First of all, it was good news about God. Whereas, God had been a King and a Judge and a Captain, and in a limited sense a Father of the nation, in Jesus' preaching He becomes a Father. Jesus put an entirely new content into the meaning of God as a Father. He told men of the Father's love, of His care, of His yearning after His wayward children, of His willingness and eagerness to have them return unto Him. It was good news.

It was good news about a Saviour. The angels said that they had glad tidings of great joy which should be to all people, because there had been born in Bethlehem a Saviour who was Christ the Lord. Here was one, a revelation of the mind and heart and will of God, taking upon Himself the form of a man and of a servant, entering into our experiences and sharing our lives, with the ability and the willingness to give unto men victorious power for living and serving. He could impart that quality of life that was eternal. He could give to them salvation, or "wholeness." That was, and is, good news.

Jesus also brought good news about man Himself. He was a child of the Heavenly Father, with divine capacities and powers within him, capable of fellowship with the living God, made for eternal life with God. He was of infinite worth in the Father's sight—more valuable than the whole created universe. In the message that Jesus preached, man had new dignity and value. That was good news.

And then there was the good news about the kingdom. It was to be made up of the society of those who loved Him and who tried to manifest His spirit and apply His principles to life. It was a kingdom of love, a kingdom in which true nobility and place was to be based not on wealth or position, but upon qualities of mind and heart—those that hungered after righteousness, those who were meek, those who were merciful, those who were pure in heart, those who were faithful under trying circumstances. That was good news.

SOWER—SEED—SOIL.

The Master told them a story (a parable) which set forth in picturesque language certain aspects of this kingdom. It was a story of a man who went forth to sow, an account of the varying fortunes of the seed, and an interpretation of the story. The seed which fell on the wayside—that is, on the hard-beaten path that ran through the field—and which was immediately devoured by the birds, represented the fate of the gospel message which fell on the heart that was indifferent and hardened: Satan immediately plucked it away. The seed that fell in the good soil, but where the soil was very shallow, and which sprang up but which, because "it had no root," soon withered, represented the fate of the gospel message in the lives of those who were shallow and superficial and sentimental; those who, with joy and with enthusiasm, respond to every thing that comes into their lives, but alas! they do not have any "stick-to-itiveness"—they cannot stand ridicule or tribulation or persecution.

There was some seed that fell in good ground; it sprang up and grew to good size, but it did not bear fruit. It failed to do the very thing that it should have done. But it happened that this seed fell among thorns, and the thorns choked out the grain. This was the fate often of the gospel message—it was choked out by "the cares of this world, the deceitfulness of riches, the pleasures of life, the lust of other things, and it becomes unfruitful. Hereby is the Father glorified, that we bear much fruit. Failure here, therefore, means failure in the main business of life.

But some of the seed fell in good ground, grew up, and bore fruit. In like manner, the gospel message finds a place in the hearts of some who nurture it and cause it to come to fruition and fruitfulness. But—and there is a lesson here—even the seed that came to full fruitage, yielded varying yields, some an hundred-fold, some sixty-fold, and some thirty-fold. We are not all endowed with the same gifts. God does not expect the same yield. Unto whom much is given, of him is much fruit expected. Unto whom little is given, of him is fruit expected according to that which is given unto him.

In all this there are many pointed lessons. They will simply be listed.

1. The gospel or the word of God, like seed, has life within it.
2. We are to sow the seed; that is, we are to speak the word, in season and out of season.
3. We ought to try to put religious truth into plain and practical forms.
4. The soil, not the seed or the sower, determine the results.
5. We are not to become weary in well-doing.
6. No honest effort to preach or teach the truth will be wasted.
7. Fruitfulness is the goal of the religious life.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE
One of our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy.

"If thou wilt make the Almighty thy treasure . . . then shalt thou delight thyself in the Almighty . . . and thou shalt make thy prayer unto Him and He will hear thee."—Job 22: 25-27.

MONDAY.

WHICH IS THE GREATEST?

Lesson: Luke 16:10-13.

These words of our Lord show how important it is to use what we have properly, and with what regard we shall use the property of others. They also show us what is most important in life. That which He calls "the beast," seems to be the same as that which he calls later "the mammon." In this it appears to be the things of the world he refers to.

Now, to the children of the world, the things of the world are the greatest—most important. But to a child of God, everything is for that which is high and noble and not for mammon, and he struggles for that.

This Scripture is mighty good advice to take with us and make a part of our lives. We are all the time using our own talents and our own property. How? We are constantly entrusted with that of others. Do we regard theirs as least, or greatest? We are all the time dealing with earthly things. Our faithfulness in all these things is a measure of our ownership of the things of heaven.

Prayer.—Lord Jesus, give us grace to use, both that which is ours and that which is another man's, in such a way that can't give us that which is our own: love and all the unperishable treasures which Thou, our God, hast destined us to have. Amen.

TUESDAY.

FIRST CHURCH AND FIRST WORK OF THE DEVIL.

Lesson: Gen. 4:3-11.

There are a few organizations God first established—the family, the government, and the Church. The lesson before has to do with the Church. To be sure it was but an altar upon which offerings were made and where prayer was said; but that was God's presence and man's quest for God. That was the Church.

It is interesting to note that where the Church first appeared and man and God fellowshiped, then the devil made his first attack on the world—the Church. His first attack resulted in a man murdering his brother. Isn't that awful!

If we had seen Cain and Abel bringing their offerings, one in our eyes would have seemed as good as the other. But God looketh on heart, and deeds have their value according to the person who performs them, and no matter how much good you do, if the deeds are not done in love they are not good in the sight of God. Cain's being a selfish offering, God did not honor him, and he grew worse. He had been without the warmth of love, and now he suffered the lack of the warmth of God. The result was he grew bitter and angry.

Lesson: Bring up children to take part willingly and gladly in divine worship and Holy Communion. To force one against his will closes up the heart against the Spirit of God.

Prayer.—God, help us to believe Thy word, that we may love Thee and that our offerings may be of love and acceptable in Thy sight. Give us grace also to love one another, serve one another, and stand united on the Church of God. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

CAN GOD BE MOCKED?

"Be not deceived, God is not mocked, for whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap."—Gal. 6:7.

That which the Lord foretold of Jerusalem has long since come to pass. This lesson stands eternally a solemn warning to us. It is a living and striking illustration of the truth that God is not mocked, but that every man shall reap what he sows.

But above this is a more blessed truth: God's heart is full of tender mercy toward His people. He is not pleased that any should perish. He weeps and pleads, "Repent, and return unto me and ye shall live." As wicked as it was, had Jerusalem given heed to the Lord's call and sought mercy at His feet, He would have taken it into His heart, washed it with His tears and blood and brought it to His Father. The Lord is still what He was; He has the same loving heart toward you and me and all.

There is another lesson here. Should not we, His children, represent Him to the world? Should not we grieve over unhappy conditions? People look to the children of God to see Him in them. Can we?

Prayer.—Lord Jesus, help us to weep as Thou didst weep over Thine own people. Amen.

THURSDAY.

EXALTING CHRIST.

"All these worketh that one and the self-same Spirit."—1 Cor. 12:2-11.

Every one who speaks by the Spirit of God exalts Jesus. Every one who works good, exalts Jesus. He who says he has the Spirit of God, and neither his words nor works witness for him, is naught.

There is no one particular way by which all must exalt him. Every believer has his special gifts by which he may render special service. Every one has temptations peculiar to himself. Whatever this may be, it is all the Spirit of God.

Our lesson is be faithful and make the proper use of that which He has given us. The diversity of gifts make Him appear more glorious.

Prayer.—God, help us in these times. How beautiful shall be Thy children and the Church of God when all hearts are united in one mind and desire to love God and continue to increase in love and service! Adorn our conduct with humility, and our lives with love and service. Amen.

FRIDAY.

HOME MONEY.

"Pleasant words are as a honeycomb: sweet to the soul, and health to the bones."—Prov. 16: 16-24.

The other day a store of honey weighing eighty pounds was found in the house of a New Jersey farmer. It had been collecting for two years, and was the work of no fewer than seventeen colonies of bees. The entire dwelling had become a beehive. That is what all our homes should be. Every room should yield its quota of sweets. There should be sweetness in the kitchen and in the parlor, sweetness in the cellar and the library—honey all over the house!

And this can come about, with us as the bees, only through industry. Creating homes of love comes not by chance. Sweetness in the home is the fruit of painstaking.

Prayer.—Lord Jesus, blessed Spirit of true homes, be the Guardian of our family. May love fill all our household, to every corner of the dwelling, to every humdrum occupation of the workers, in every hour of the day and night. May our homes be Bethanies, and be Thou our constant Guest. Amen.—Wells.

SATURDAY.

UNDER OUR FLAG.

"He that is slow to anger is better than the mighty; and he that ruleth his spirit, than he that taketh a city."—Prov. 16:25-33.

The splendid exploit of Commander Byrd in flying over the Antarctic continent to the South Pole has raised the question of sovereignty over that desolate region; a region, however, which may become commercially valuable on account of mineral deposits and whaling. The question of the British and United States rights is a matter to be settled by diplomacy, and it will be settled amicably.

Every nation is anxious that its flag shall float over every square mile of territory to which it is entitled. Every nation is anxious to develop all its resources, make the most of all its territory. Would that the men who make up the nations were equally eager to place the flag of their souls on all the ground which God opens up to them, equally anxious to own and develop the continent which may become theirs!

Prayer.—Advance with us, O Holy Spirit, to the conquest of new domains. Stir up our ambition, arouse our courage, and go with us to the poles of endeavor. Amen.—Wells.

SUNDAY.

WHEN CHRIST IS LEFT OUT.

"I determined not to know anything among you, save Jesus Christ and Him crucified."—1 Cor. 2:1-5.

The newspapers have been printing the creed of a brilliant Jewish rabbi. It is most attractively set forth: "I believe in myself; I believe in my neighbor; I believe in God; the more I believe in myself and my neighbor, the more I discover of God." And there, of course, it ends. The great, the central, the vital discovery of God in Jesus Christ is not even mentioned.

It is hard—impossible, rather—for any one who does not believe in Christianity to realize how empty such a pronouncement appears to any sincere follower of the Son of God. It is He who makes one's self worth believing in. It is He who enables one to be of service to his neighbor. It is in Him alone that one can truly see God and come into living communion with Him. In all creeds, however beautifully expressed, the Christian listens hungrily for Christ; and if he does not hear Him, they are but sounding brass and clanging cymbals.

So Paul discovered. He had just made a masterly oration on Mars Hill. But it was a sermon on the unity of the Godhead, with no naming of Jesus Christ, if we may judge from Luke's summary of it, and the results were very meager—we hear of no Christian Church in Athens. Paul went on to Corinth determined to know nothing there but "Jesus Christ and Him crucified," and from that preaching grew one of the strongest Churches of his ministry.

Prayer.—Dear Lord, we would value poetry and philosophy and science and art, for they are all Thy gifts, but they must not crowd Thee out. Above all, Thou shalt reign in our hearts and minds. Above all, Thy name must be on our tongues. Thou art our All-in-All. Amen.—Wells.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN'S PULPIT

REV. JOSEPH W. FIX, Preacher.

CHURCH UNION.

BY REV. T. J. PONDER.

"Every kingdom divided against itself is brought to desolation."—Matt. 12:25.

(Sermon delivered before the South Georgia Association of Congregational-Christian Churches, and is hereby published by vote of that Association.)

The Church is a kingdom. In the Old Testament it is the kingdom of God. In the New Testament it is the kingdom of heaven. And the question is, is the Church divided against itself?

REV. T. J. PONDER.

Before answering this question, let us consider what the Church is in itself.

1. The Church is a body of believers who have associated themselves together for fellowship, worship and the service of God.
2. Again, the Church is the great number of believers called out from the world by the Holy Spirit, and brought together for the service of God.
3. Again, the Church is the residence of the Holy-Spirit.
4. Again, the Church is the spiritual body of Christ.

There are many things that are not necessary to the being of the Church, but are necessary to its well-being, such as meeting-houses, creeds, codes, officers, courts, conferences, associations, assemblies and the like. These things the Church can put on or take off at will.

As to the power of the Church, these things that are not necessary to the being of the Church have no power of their own. Church courts, conferences, associations and assemblies have no power of their own. All the power they have is what the Church gave to them at the time it put them on. And the Church officers have no power of their own, but all the power they have is what the Church gave to them at the time it put them on. And the Church itself in its own body has no power of its own, but all the power it has it receives from its great Head, the Lord Jesus Christ. And even when the Church receives power from its great Head, it must use it according to His mind as revealed in the Word of God. And if the Church or its officers or courts should use their power to do anything contrary to the mind of Christ as revealed in the Word of God, that thing would be null and void in the sight of God, and to be rescinded and censured by the Church.

As to the unity of the Church, the Church has no unity of its own. It is all created in diversity diversity in degrees of the grace, diversity of gifts, and diversity in the measures of the spirit. And any attempt to form unity in the Church would be to defeat the purpose of God in making it in diversity. Yet the Church has union, and a grander union than could be in itself, in the triune God. The Church is united in the body of Christ. And the Church is united under Christ, its Head. And the Church is united on the rock foundation, which is Christ. Therefore, the Church is the Church of Christ. And the Church is united in the Holy Spirit, which is in the members of the Church and in the body of the Church; and since the Spirit is not divided, the Church is united in the Spirit, and it is the Church of the Holy Ghost, the Holy Comforter. And the Church is untied in God the Father. Christ is one with Him. And the Church is one in them; therefore it is one in God the Father, and is therefore the Church of God. And it takes all this union in the triune God to give us all the ideas of the Church. And upon the principle that the mention of a particular thing is to the exclusion of the general, so any appendage added to the name Church only detracts from its meaning. To call it the Church of Christ is to narrow down its meaning. To call it the Church of the Holy Ghost, the Holy Comforter, is to narrow down its meaning. And to call it the Church of God is to narrow down its meaning to where it means no more than the Jewish Church. And the fullest expression we can give to the Church is to call it "The Church." The Scottish people saw this in their age of intelligence and they called it "The Kirk." And we will never get away from denominationalism, and teach the full truth of the Church till we come to call it by its full name, "The Church."

And now we come to answer the question, Is the Church divided against itself? I wish to divide this question into two questions. First, Is the Church divided? secondly, Is the Church divided against itself? Most assuredly the Church is divided. She is divided into Methodist, Baptist, Episcopal, Lutheran, Congregational, and others—so the Church is divided. Then, is the Church united? Most assuredly the Church is united in the triune God. The apostle Paul found this divided-united condition in the Corinthian Church, and they seemed to think that they were not united. But Paul shows them that they were. He said, "Let you who say I am of Paul, say I am of Christ. And you who say you are of Apollos, say I am of Christ. And you who say you are of Cephas, say I am of Christ." Then, is Christ divided? Since He is not you, are all united in Him. And the same applies to our denominationalism. Let him that is of John Wesley say, I am of Christ, and let him that is of Roger Williams say, I am of Christ. And let him that is of Alexander Campbell say, I am of Christ. And let him that is of George Fox say, I am of Christ, and since Christ is not divided and all the denominations are of Him, therefore they are all united in Him, so the Church is not divided.

Secondly, is the Church divided against itself? We have seen that the Church is divided denominationally. But does that make the Church divided against itself? When we look at the stones the denominations throw at each other across the roads that divide them, and how they try to get each other's members and how some of them unchurch others, it does seem like the Church is divided against itself. But are these things done by the real Church? If so, they are done by the authority of the great Head of the Church, which is insupposable. Therefore these things are not done by the Church, but are evils that have worked their way into the Church and are against the Church. It is insupposable that the body of Christ can be divided against itself. It is insupposable that my hand can be divided against my feet. And it is insupposable that one member of the body of Christ can be divided against another. Therefore, the Church is not divided against itself.

And now, let us apply this to our modern Church union. We have come to the time when many men are at work and much money is spent upon the work of uniting the Church. But, pray tell me, what is there in the Church to unite, since the whole Church is perfectly united in the triune God? And yet there is much for Church union to do, and that is to unite those things that the Church has put on herself that have become divided. To unite the creeds of the Churches and the codes of the Churches. To unite the officers of the Churches, to unite the conferences and associations, to unite the executive committees of the Churches. In other words, to unite the man-made machinery of the Churches. But some one will say, I want to see all the Churches brought under one great government, so as to stop these disorderly things that are done by the denominations. But, we ask, is not the Church already under one great government, and the only perfect government in the world, which is the government of Jesus Christ, the great King and Head of the Church? And these disorderly things are done under the government the Church now has, and will they cease to be done when the Church is brought under a less perfect government. And what would that government be that could take the place of the government of Jesus Christ over the Church. Better that we should labor to bring these disorderly ones under the government that the Church already has, rather than try to obtain another government for them.

Again says another, I want to see all the denominations of the Church brought into one great household of the faith, so as to stop all these stones that are being thrown by the denominations at each other across the roads that divide them. But, I ask, is it better to bring all these discordant elements into one house and let them fight a hand-to-hand fight in their own house, or would they do less harm to fight each other at their present distance across the roads that divide them? So you see there is a greater test before us just now than that of uniting the Church. It is the task of uniting the members of the visible Church into the grander union that the Church already has. And I wish to make one criticism upon our propaganda of Church union as it is today, and that is that it proceeds upon the assumption that the Church is divided, which is not true.

"We are not divided, all one body we—
One in hope and doctrine, one in charity."

"Yes, she on earth hath union,
With God, the Three in One;
And mystic sweet communion
With those whose 'life' is 'one.'
O happy ones and holy,
God grant us grace that we,
Like them, the meek and lowly,
May dwell on high with Thee."

"For it's not by song or sermon that the Church's work is done; it's the laymen of the country who must carry on for God"—so sings Edgar Guest.

THE FELLOWSHIP OF PRAYER.

The special feature of the Lenten material furnished by the Commission on Evangelism and Devotional Life is "The Fellowship of Prayer." Each year now for a number of years the commission has prepared these fine pamphlets for daily devotional reading during Lent. For a number of years they were printed and used exclusively among our Congregational fellowship, but now for a number of years they have been widely used in practically all of the leading denominations. Not only have they been circulated as pamphlets for personal use, but the material has been daily printed in a large number of the leading newspapers of the country, and in addition they have been used in morning devotional radio programs. The circulation has thus undoubtedly passed the million mark.

"The Fellowship of Prayer" this year has been prepared by Dr. Clarence Hall Wilson, well known in the Congregational fellowship. The series is based upon readings in the gospel of Luke, under the heading "The Beautiful Book." We recommend the wide use of "The Fellowship of Prayer," which may be obtained from the commission at the price of 50 cents per 100.

OBITUARIES.

LAYTON.

Mariah Elizabeth Layton was born on February 6, 1851, and died December 23, 1930, aged 79 years, 10 months, and 17 days. The deceased was famous for her many acts of kindness in the neighborhood in which she lived, always doing a good neighbor's part, especially in any case of sickness or need.

Funeral services were held at Bethlehem Christian Church, near her home, December 25, 1930, and the remains laid to rest in the adjoining cemetery.

A. W. ANDES.

BOON.

In the passing from this earthly career to her eternal home, the Caroleigh Christian Church loses one of its most faithful members. Sister Boon had been with us for about eight months as a member, coming from the Clayton Church. She has been a faithful and loyal member, and seemingly enjoyed the services so much.

Sister Boon believed that when she closed her eyes to this world that she would open them in the presence of Jesus, whom she served. And when this writer looked upon her lifeless face and noting the expression, was led to believe that her faith was not in vain.

She died on the 9th of January, in the sixty-sixth year, at the home of her daughter, in Raleigh, N. C., and was buried January 11, 1931, in the Church cemetery, at New Elam Church. Funeral service was conducted by this writer. May the God of our Lord Jesus Christ grant comfort to the hearts of her husband and children whom she has left behind.

J. H. LEE.

TEAGUE.

On January 11, 1931, God, in His infinite love, sent the angels and bore above the spirit of our dear sister, Mrs. Etta Teague. We, the members of Pleasant Hill Missionary Society, wish to express our appreciation of her in the following Resolutions:

1. That we hold a grateful remembrance of her faithfulness to duty, and commend to all her beautiful Christian life, trusting that the influence of her life may draw us all to a closer touch with God and the divine things that we are to do.

2. That while we realize we have lost a faithful member of our society, we deeply mourn our loss. We bow in humble submission to Him who doeth all things well.

3. That we extend our deepest sympathy to the bereaved family, praying that our Heavenly Father will give comfort when earthly friends fail.

4. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, one put on the secretary's book, and a copy sent to The Christian Sun for publication.

MRS. M. F. HORNADAY,

MRS. C. A. HINSHAW,

MRS. IDA TEAGUE,

Committee.

ABELL.

Bro. Ernest Bowman Abell was born November 3, 1877, and died January 27, 1931. At the age of seventeen he gave his heart to Christ and united with the Church and has been a faithful Christian ever since. In 1897 he was united in marriage with Miss Ruthie Harris, and to this happy union were born three boys and five girls. He leaves to mourn his going, his children, wife, two brothers, five sisters and a host of relatives and friends.

Funeral services were held at the Christian Church of Enigma, of which he was a faithful member. The services were in charge of the writer, his pastor, assisted by Rev. A. B. Hammonds, pastor of the Baptist Church, and Rev. Drake, pastor of the Methodist Church. The beautiful floral tribute and the great congregation, which could not all be seated, gave certain evidence of the high esteem in which he was held.

We bow in humble submission to our Father, who doeth all things well. We now have a greater desire for heaven than ever before, for our friend, brother, father and companion is now there.

ELON COLLEGE

AN ACCREDITED COLLEGE

of the

CONGREGATIONAL CHRISTIAN CHURCHES OF THE SOUTHEAST

ELON was founded to train Christian leaders for the New South.

ELON has done its task well—one graduate in seven being in the Christian ministry. The other six express Christian leadership in the various professions and vocations. Experience teaches that spiritual leadership must be indigenous.

The South is now a New South ready for an inclusive Church, the type of Church for which Elon has stood for forty years and for which she is prepared to produce capable leadership.

With no Church in the community, save the College Auditorium, ELON has practiced Christian Union for faculty, students, and community for four decades.

Its contribution to Christian Education is nationally known and approved.

Its Christian Education Building, providing laboratory facilities for religious leadership training, is unique and is the first college building of its type in the world.

ELON confines itself to undergraduate liberal arts work with that religious emphasis which befits the Christian College.

In ELON the Congregational-Christian Church has an asset of marvelous helpfulness.

The South needs her Yale, her Oberlin, her Carleton, her Pomona for the intellectual leadership of the United Church. Many regard ELON as strategically located and spiritually endowed to become such a center of illumination and leadership training.

FRAZIER.

Osby Floyd Frazier was born July 13, 1890, and was accidentally killed in a mine accident in Pennsylvania on January 18, 1931, making his age 40 years, 6 months, and 5 days. He enjoyed the respect of a large circle of friends and acquaintances. His untimely death was made especially sad because of his having to leave a wife and five small children to mourn his death and to make their way in life as they may be able to do without husband and father.

He is also survived by his mother, three brothers, and three sisters. Funeral services were held at Bethel Christian Church, near his home, January 21, 1931.

WHITE.

Mr. Walter Virginia White died, December 16, 1930, at his home, 403 North Fifth Street, Hopewell, Va., at the age of 75 years and 4 months. He was a native of Isle of Wight County, but for the past six years he has made his home in Hopewell. When the Christian Church was organized in 1927 he became one of the charter members, having placed a coin in the copper vat under the cornerstone. Mr. White remained a faithful member until his death.

Funeral services were held December 18th by the writer, who was his former pastor in the Hopewell Christian Church, assisted by Rev. W. S. Leake, pastor of First Baptist Church, Hopewell, and his body was laid to rest in the Ivory Hill Cemetery, Smithfield, Va.

Mr. White is survived by four sons—G. C., of Carson; S. P. and R. V., of Hopewell, and J. N. White, of Palmer, Va.; also two daughters, Mrs. Helen M. Everett, of Smithfield, and Mrs. Alice White, of Hopewell, Va., and one brother, J. M. White, of Newport News, Va.; also thirty grandchildren and two great-grandchildren; his wife, Mrs. Ana Wilson White, having preceded him to the grave twenty-six years ago.

IN ESSENTIALS, UNITY IN NON-ESSENTIALS, LIBERTY IN ALL THINGS, CHARITY

VOLUME LXXXIII RICHMOND, VA., THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 19, 1931 NUMBER 8

•• THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY ••

BY DR. W. C. WICKER.

RIGHT RELATIONSHIP TO GOD.—

Conviction results from dissatisfaction with yourself in the light of a better possible self. Conversion is turning from the unsatisfactory self to the realization of the ideal self. Conversion may be analyzed into repentance and faith. Repentance is a change of mind from the unsatisfied self and faith is committal of the self to God. Faith is the will to believe, the will to trust and the will to obey God as our Father and establishes a filial relation to Him.

LENTEN SUBJECT.—

Several of the New York Churches are making plans to face the economic problem in some part of their Lenten program. Grace Episcopal Church will devote one week of noon-day addresses to this theme. The Madison Avenue Presbyterian Church and the Brick Presbyterian Church have both placed it as a course in their schools of adult education. A study of the sermons and religious discussion in the country would lead one to believe that Churches and religious groups are more alive to the economic issues than they have been since the war stifled interest in social justice.

EXCHANGE STUDENTS.—

There are more than sixty exchange students from the United States in German universities this year. Many seem to prefer the large universities, such as Berlin or Munich, or the new ones, such as Cologne and Frankfurt. Others go to the old romantic towns of Heidelberg, Marburg and Tubingen, where the student reigns supreme. In Halle, there is a student from Minnesota, and a theological student from Union Seminary. The American attitude toward Germans has changed radically since the war. Exchange students can do a great deal in correcting false opinions and notions.

FUND FOR ZION MOVEMENT.—

Five hundred American Jews, having learned that Jewish reconstruction activities in Palestine are in danger of immediate collapse unless help by large sums could be made available at once, gathered in an emergency conference at Washington, D. C., January 25th, and decided to launch a campaign immediately to raise $2,500,000 before July 1st of this year. Morris Rothenberg is to be directing chairman of the drive, and the other three chairmen are Nathan Straus, Jr., James Marshall, and Rabbi Abba H. Silver. The loyalty and liberality expressed in this movement are worth studying by Protestant Churches.

THANKFUL FOR DEPRESSION.—

At the eighty-second meeting of the Texas diocese of the Episcopal Church last week, in Houston, the financial depression came in for consideration. Bishop Clinton S. Quin, after noting the improvements of Church properties at Galveston, Harrisburg and Waco, and the fact that for the first time in many years the Church as a whole had paid its full national budget appropriations, declared that times of adversity drew the people away from worldliness to the Church and had the wholesome effect of bringing them to God. Such results, as an example, should make other communions meditate on their service and sacrifice for the kingdom.

H. F. WARD ON UNEMPLOYMENT.—

In an address at the national conference at Washington, D. C., Rev. Harry F. Ward said that no economic planning can end unemployment without certain changes in the moral habits and attitudes of the American people. Our kind of prosperity manufactures unemployment progressively as it makes millionaires. Social control and mutual aid in place of competitive profit-seeking, the widest possible distribution of income and power, instead of concentration, and the substitution of public approval and pride of craftsmanship for pecuniary rewards are among the changes enumerated as necessary in the permanent prevention of unemployment.

MORAL VIGOR.—

Nothing will do more to promote the right type of moral life than the power to make a more courageous diagnosis of problematic moral situations, to possess words which are the overflow of our activity and spirit, the avoidance of mere words and of self-confidence, and humble and sustained seriousness. Too many Christian people are satisfied to drift with the tide without thinking, to obey custom and tradition without realization of truth in experience, and to accept external authority rather than the experimental test of truth. To believe all the creeds of Christendom will not make you a Christian without Christian experience. Religion is vital.

RULING CONCEPTS OF EDUCATION.—

The ruling concepts of modern education are freedom of the individual from restraints and patterns of conduct, the possibilities of self-realization, the discovery of the best means of self-realization by his own experience, and the meaning of duty and service to the individual and to society. The opportunity and means for the experimental test of these principles, under conscious control, are essential. These ruling concepts in the process of enriching experience and adjusting our conduct to an ever-changing environment will keep the faculty of effort alive, quicken the initiative instinct, promote creative intelligence, and stimulate inventive genius. Education should prepare one to make continuous adjustments, with the greatest economy, to environmental changes.

NEW PEACE SOCIETY.—

"The World Center" has just been incorporated and will have its headquarters at 343 Madison Avenue, New York City. This organization seeks international peace by a little different path than that followed by most other peace organizations. It aims at international peace by stifling race prejudice. It is proposed to have the local body in New York made up of 750 native-born members and an equal number of foreign-born. They say that peace founded upon armaments, treaties, conventions, balances of power or economic supremacy has never endured. Only peace founded upon friendship is certain to endure, people of different races hate each other because they do not know each other. It is proposed in the World Center that they should become better acquainted.

C. E. JUBILEE.—

The Christian Endeavor Society has just held its fiftieth anniversary. Seven hundred and thirty-five persons, about two-thirds young people, crowded the banquet hall of Boston Chamber of Commerce on January 28th to celebrate this jubilee anniversary of the first society of Christian Endeavor. The guest of honor was Mrs. F. E. Clark, thrice greeted by the rising of the whole audience to its feet. Perhaps no other woman in history has lived to receive such grateful affection from young people all over the world, both for her own sake and for that of her husband. The world convention of this organization was held in Germany last summer under the flags of forty-two nations. No other organization of young people can do more to heal race rancor, world peace, and Christian fellowship than the Christian Endeavor.

RELIGIOUS FANATICISM.—

In a recent Church service, a man arose and exclaimed, "I am the prophet of God," and proceeded to take charge of the service and direct it contrary to the program that had been provided. Such is the unsettled condition of the religious atmosphere at present in some parts of the world. In my childhood, it was not uncommon to attend a revival meeting and hear the saints shout and praise God for the wonderful things they had experienced in the meeting. Shouting in meetings, however, seems to have become a thing of the past. People who are really religious and experience a genuine, vital relation to God, want to do something to further the kingdom rather than spend their energies in ecstatic outbursts of unutilized energy. The Christian world should mobilize the spiritual energy of the Church for the furtherance of the kingdom. Awake! O Zion, put on thy beautiful garments!

NOTES-PERSONALS

The board of trustees of Elon College met in their semi-annual session on the 17th.

Dr. Atkinson is again in Florida for a short vacation. We hope that he enjoys himself immensely.

"The greatest treasure of a nation is its manhood and womanhood. Anything which destroys these should be destroyed."

Miss Jewel Truitt spoke at the young people's Sunday evening meeting at the United Church, Raleigh, on February 8th.

We are glad to learn that Miss Dorothy Fair, of Petersburg, but a member of our Richmond Church, is convalescing nicely after an operation for appendicitis at St. Elizabeth's Hospital, Richmond.

"Always vote for principle, though you have to vote alone, and you can cherish the sweet reflection that your vote is never lost."—John Quincy Adams.

For every 100 dollars that we pay for boots and shoes, $22.85 goes for labor; for furniture, house-fixings, etc., $22.76; for hardware, $20.99; for cotton goods, $15.94; while $100 spent for liquor, labor receives $1.94.—Hargraves' Wasted Resources.

Dr. C. C. Ryan filled his pulpit at our Richmond Church last Sunday, after an absence of about ten days, in Ohio, where he was holding revival services. Rev. D. D. Nash supplied at the morning service while Dr. Ryan was away, and the regular monthly musical by the Sunday School orchestra was given on that Sunday instead of on the fourth Sunday.

A learned atheist once met a plain countryman going to Church. He asked him, "Where are you going?" "I am going to Church, sir," was the reply. "What to do there?" "To worship God." "Pray, is your God a great or a little God?" "He is both, sir." "How can He be both?" "He is so great, sir, that the heaven of heavens cannot contain Him, and so little that He can dwell in my poor heart."—Selected.

UNION STUDY CLASS.

The annual mission-study class of the Christian Churches of the Norfolk district will be held at First Church, Norfolk, Thursday, February 26th. The class will be taught by Rev. H. S. Hardcastle and Dr. L. E. Smith. The suggested home subject for the year, the "West Indies," will be used.

All members of missionary societies in this district are urged to read "Between the Americas," and be present at 10:30 Thursday morning, February 26th. Visitors are most cordially invited. Come and enjoy a day of Christian fellowship by invitation of the pastor, Rev. J. E. McCauley, and the Woman's Missionary Society. L. N. S.

POUNDINGS.

Yes, it's plural—poundings—for in the last thirty or forty days we have received three from that many Churches—Pleasant Union, Piney Plains and Catawba Springs. We might say four instead of three, for both the Church and Christian Endeavor of Catawba Springs gave separate poundings and at different times. These poundings have been large, filling the pantry with good things to eat, so that even the children have said, "Daddy, if we haven't much money, we have plenty to eat." For all these good things we wish to thank every person that had a part, and, above all, to thank our Lord from whence cometh every good gift (James 1:17).

We are now rebuilding our Church at Pleasant Union which was destroyed by fire almost a year ago. We would much appreciate any gift from any Christian friend to aid us in this work.

TOO TIRED TO GO(?)

The president of the Missionary Society was tired in body, mind and spirit, and it was the night of the missionary meeting. It had been a day of busy-ness for the hands, problems for the mind, and testings for the spirit; and as the supper dishes were being washed, later than usual on account of a belated diner, she reviewed the events of the day. In speaking to one about going to the missionary meeting, the answer came, "O I am too tired to go." Weariness seemed to be the theme of all concerned, yet, as the president said, there would be no meeting if she did not go. As the events came so turbulently to mind, she thought, "Why cannot any one think that I ever get tired?" Immediately, in the little chamber of her mind where the songs of the Spirit ebb and flow, came the song:

"On Calv'ry's brow my Saviour died.
'Twas there my Lord was crucified;
'Twas on the cross He bled for me,
And purchased there my pardon free.
O Calvary! dark Calvary!
Where Jesus shed His blood for me;
O Calvary! blest Calvary!
'Twas there my Saviour died for me."

The words carried her back to Calvary, blessed Calvary, for it was for her sins that He suffered there and shed His precious blood, that there might be a fountain for cleansing for all mankind.

He knows the toilsome, weary way, for He has traveled the same road. He never faltered in His great mission because of fatigue or discouragement. Even when impulsive Peter told Him to think of Himself, Jesus did not pause to consider His own feelings. Later, when Jesus asked Peter to watch with Him, Peter was overcome with the feelings of the flesh and fell asleep when Jesus needed companionship and sympathy. How sad the words of Jesus: "What! could ye not watch with me one hour?" Do we sometimes blame Peter for his failure in that trying hour? Do we boast that we would not have failed our Lord as he did? Do we think that we would have been strong where he was weak? The question comes to us today: "Can ye not watch with me one hour?" Are we watching or are our eyes heavy with sleep? The present hour is as important as the hour of long ago, and it is full of weariness and discouragement. But in heeding the warning of Jesus to watch and pray, we will not fall asleep, but we will be busy at the Master's business, ever at our post of duty to carry on the work He has given us to do. In our human weakness may we ever claim the promise, "He giveth power to the faint; and to them that have no might He increaseth strength." Then we can go forward in the work of His kingdom, encouraging the laggards and lifting up the fallen.

"Then soul, be brave and watch until the morrow;
Awake, arise, your lamp of purpose trim!
Your Saviour speaks across the night of sorrow;
Can you not watch one little hour with Him?"

METHODS CORNER

By REV. ELISHA A. KING, D. D.

Miami Beach, Fla.

There are many ways of securing benevolence money. Above everything else, of course, is the educational background—the giving of information. This I have mentioned before. We have found it very much worth while to make use of special days, such as Easter, Children's Day, Lincoln's Birthday, Washington's Birthday, Mothers' Day, Thanksgiving, Christmas, etc. People love to give at Christmas and Easter. There seems to be something about these seasons that touch the heart and the pocket-book.

One important item is the letter. It should be composed with great care. The pastor would likely compose the best appeal for funds, stating, always, some specific object to which the money goes. The letter should be reasonably short and printed in good, clear type on a good quality of paper. Mimeographs are much used now and serve the purpose very well. Enclose an addressed envelope for the offering. Sometimes we ask to have them returned by mail and sometimes to be brought to the Church and placed in the offering plates.

It may seem strange to some who have never tried the plan, but it is a fact that if the stationery used is attractive the response is larger. I have undertaken to find and use many kinds of material, and take this opportunity of telling you about it. The Hermitage Art Company, 3960 North Hermitage Avenue, Chicago, put out some of the most beautiful letter-heads and envelopes for this purpose. The prices are moderate. Good-enough & Woglom Company is another concern that publishes a wonderful line of similar material. They are to be found at 296 Broadway, New York, N. Y. The Woolverton Printing Company, Cedar Falls, Iowa, print many things of this kind. "Church Management," located at the Auditorium Building, East Sixth at St. Clair, Cleveland, Ohio, provides some superb material for Christmas and Easter. Any one who is interested in dignifying the giving of the Church and who wishes to train the Church body in giving should send letters to each of these companies and ask for samples and any information they may have.

Then there is much help to be had from a little magazine called "Church Business," issued by the Duplex Company, Richmond, Va. Why not try a modern mite-box for the Easter offering (April 5th) this year? Send to Flower City Specialty Company, 250 Mill Street, Rochester, N. Y., for a sample. The price of these devices may be deducted from the offering and still have a lot more money than one could gather without them. Try out some of these things and you will rejoice. The minister, Church treasurer, the woman's missionary society—all of them will find unusual blessings in using them.

SANFORD CHURCH.

The corner-stone of Sanford Christian Church was laid February 25, 1903, and the building committee was composed of the following members: Rev. Geo. R. Underwood, E. S. Utley, J. D. Hart, J. D. Gunter, Rev. J. D. Wicker.

On February 22nd, at 11 o'clock, we expect to hold an anniversary service, at which time the principal address will be delivered by the Rev. Geo. R. Underwood, the only member of the building committee who is with us, he being the organizer and first pastor of the Church. All former pastors, members and friends are cordially invited to be present.

CONGREGATIONAL NEWS

REV. E. C. GILLETTE, Editor; REV. F. P. ENSMINGER, and REV. M. J. SWEET, Associates.

REV. & MRS. R. E. NEWTON were the recipients of a beautiful gift of table silver from members of the Church and congregation at Pomona, Fla. This was a Christmas gift, but we have only recently learned of it.

REV. A. CALVIN NELSON employed a surveyor to locate the land which the Mountain Springs, Ala., Church owns. The Church house was a little over the line of the seven acres, but a generous mineral company gave two acres, including the Church site, to the Church.

THE AMERICAN BOARD does not overlook the Southeast in selecting its workers. Miss Helen Disney, who was born in Tennessee and educated in Kentucky, and is a registered nurse, is head nurse at the Esther Barton Hospital, Tolko, Shansi, China. The board is now asking a graduate of Star Academy, Piedmont College, and the Atlanta Theological Seminary Foundation at Nashville if he will accept an appointment in Micronesia.

DR. DAY'S VISIT: Dr. William Horace Day made the tour of the Southeast as planned. Everywhere he went he brought cheer and faith and fellowship. In Florida he visited twenty-three of the Churches, some only to see the building and meet the pastor. In six days he covered nine hundred miles. His Church is most generous to release him for such occasional visits to the Churches. We are sure that his visit to the Southeast will mean a great deal to the ministers and Churches, and we trust that he will have gained not only pleasure, but insight into our Southeastern work.

A SERVICE of happy memory of Dr. William E. Barton was presided over by Dr. Jason Noble Pierce, at Collegese Church, in January. It was fitting that a personal friend could have charge of the exercises. Chancellor Kirkland, of Vanderbilt; President Bruce Payne, of Peabody College; President Cunningham, of Scarritt College; Acting President Barton, of Ward-Belmont College, and President Campbell, of Atlanta Theological Foundation, beautifully expressed the characteristics of the lost friend and leader. Bruce Barton, of New York City, is soon to write a biography of his father, which will not neglect his service in the Southeast.

SUNDAY NIGHT FORUM: Probably no Church in our Southeastern fellowship conducts a more successful and varied Sunday night forum than does the Church of Wide Fellowship at Southern Pines, N. C. Among well-known speakers heard or to be heard during this season are Mary Harris Armor, national lecturer of the W. C. T. U.; Arthur Pillsbury, naturalist; Edward Tomlinson, traveler; Jehan Warliker, prince seed-corn of India, and Lothrop Stoddard, well-known author and lecturer. Several interesting musical organizations also appear in the series. The minister of this Church is Dr. Elmer Willis Serle, and Rev. Ruth F. Sergeant is assistant.

THE STAFF MEETING at Atlanta, consisting of Dr. Bloom with his assistants of the Carolinas, Georgia and Alabama, was inspiring and the work of the spring and some of the plans for the summer were gone over in detail. The new relationship whereby field workers of the Christian Church and those of the Congregational Church may, where the cost is not increased, be called upon to serve in each other's local Churches is a fine step in advance. Churches may call upon any of the workers for advice whenever they may think they need it, and, provided it can be done without extra cost, workers will respond gladly. Of course, the initiative is always to be taken by the local Church.

DR. & MRS. JESSE K. MARDEN are to visit the Southeast late in February and in March. They expect to visit Allen Normal School, at Thomasville, Ga., and will then go to Mt. Dora, where they expect to be from February 24th to March 16th. They will be available for missionary addresses during their stay in Florida. Dr. and Mrs. Marden are missionaries of the American Board who have had a career of great usefulness in Turkey and later in Athens. His service as medical director of the Near East Relief was outstanding. When the Greeks and Armenians were driven from Asiatic Turkey they went with the refugees and established their work in Athens, Greece, where he directs medical work. They are now in this country on furlough.

DR. N. M. LONG, formerly pastor of First Church, Memphis, and popular leader in that city, passed to his reward on January 5, 1931. He graduated from Kings College, Bristol, Tenn., 1871, being valedictorian of his class, and took his theological studies at Columbia, S. C., after which he was a pastor of Presbyterian Churches at Tallahassee, Fla.; Pulaski, Tenn., and Memphis. In 1882 he became pastor of the First Congregational Church. At his death the Church testified in four resolutions to its great debt to this strong and able man. Dr. Herbert A. George, present pastor of the Church, said: "No one but God Himself can even partially evaluate the influence exerted in this city and elsewhere during his long ministry. He represented unfettered truth. He stimulated men to higher thinking. He was a preacher in this pulpit for thirty-three years." Truly this is a great record.

COLLEGESIDE CHURCH, NASHVILLE, had a delightful annual meeting, presided over by Dr. Jason Noble Pierce, the new pastor. This Church received thirty-eight into its membership in January, in spite of the illness of the pastor. We wonder what he might not have done had he been feeling well. The business meeting was preceded by a dinner at Collegese House. It was interesting to observe how widely the educational institutions of Nashville were represented by executives, professors and students. Dr. Alice Miles Woodruff, of the Vanderbilt Medical School, made the clerk's report; Prof. W. M. Deacon, of Vanderbilt, wittily went on record for the board of deacons; Prof. H. E. Meleney, of Vanderbilt Medical School, spoke for the cabinet; Mr. A. R. Rucks was most interesting as he represented the board of trustees. The valuable corner owned by the Church is rated by conservative realty men as worth about double its purchase price.

PROJECT PLANS in First Church, Tampa, Fla., are most interesting and will count toward making this Church 100 per cent on the apportionment. Not only does the Church as a whole have an interesting program for apportionment-giving and missionary education, but every class in the Sunday School and each organization in the Church takes a definite portion of some one of the Church's projects as their share, and is busy, not only promoting interest in the project, but in raising the money for it. For instance, some of the children's classes correspond with the children in the Home Missionary Sunday School, which is the Church's project. In addition to this, as many as possible of the families of the Church have mite-boxes at home and the aim of each is to put at least one penny a day into the box. These boxes are bought of the Cook Publishing Company at a rate of 3 cents apiece. The young people of the Church are raising money for delegates to Camp Immokalee by selling "whole wheat greaseless doughnuts," known as "Brown Bobbies." They have their regular customers and are doing very well. The pastor of this Church, Rev. Walter Metcalf, is vice-president of the Tampa Ministers' Association.

THORSBY INSTITUTE

Thorsby Institute began its second semester with an enrollment of 94. It has the largest senior class it has ever had, and one of the largest freshman classes.

Recently the State inspector visited the school and commended it, among other things, for its neatness, exceptional work done by the students, the tone of refinement that prevails throughout the school. Through a bequest of Miss Carrie Bartlett, of Athol, Mass., quite a number of good books have been added to the library. Before the year is out, $500 is expected from her estate as student aid.

Two students from Crestview, Fla.—Camilla Mae McCallum and her brother, T. A.—enrolled as juniors after Christmas. They have been active in the Congregational Church at Crestview, where Rev. Joseph E. Each, now pastor at Thorsby, was once pastor.

On February 21st comes the annual declamatory contest. Four boys and four girls will participate. A prize of $5.00 will be given to the girl who does the best, and the same amount to the boy who is judged the best speaker of the boys. Rev. E. L. Benson, of Elgin, Ill., has been giving the money for these prizes for several years.

CAMPAIGNING IN NEW ENGLAND.

Miss Marguerite Davison, extension worker for the Southeast, spent the month of January meeting speaking appointments in Massachusetts, Rhode Island and Connecticut. She was kept very busy attending rallies, group meetings, missionary societies, business women's leagues, young people's clubs, district meetings and Church suppers. The first three weeks of the month were spent in and about Greater Boston, with a run into Rhode Island for a special occasion. Certain Churches have undertaken Miss Davison's support; that is, she has become their project. She met every group in those, in order that all might be acquainted with her work. This meant speaking four and five times a Sunday in these Churches.

The last week of the month she spent in Connecticut, meeting groups in each of the four districts. At Hartford, delegates from all of the Churches of the district were invited to the town and county club to hear about "Highlands and Lowlands of the South." A cordial group of ladies gathered there and showed great interest in the work by their questions during the question period which followed the address. The young people and pastors of the Eastern district met at Windham for a Sunday night young people's rally, at which Miss Davison was the speaker. Lively groups from several Churches were there. At Torrington, the ladies of the Western district gathered and gave the speaker a cordial welcome. The last appointment was at New Haven, in the United Church house. This meeting was sponsored by the Southern district, and a good representation was present in spite of a snowstorm.

On her way South, Miss Davison stopped at Westfield to see Mrs. Olive Pearson Patch, and addressed the ladies of her Church.

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to commune or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

A LAND OF PLENTY.

(Editorial Correspondence.)

Orlando, Fla., Feb. 14, 1931.

I have heard less complaining and seen fewer evidences of "hard times" since arriving in Florida six days ago than I have heard in the same length of time anywhere my travels have taken me in the last eight months. It is a happy combination here. Florida has a plenty of all but money, and tourists from everywhere seem to have brought the necessary money—many of them, at any rate. Was there ever such a crop of oranges, grape fruit and the whole line of citrus products; and now of winter vegetables—cabbage, beans, celery, strawberries? Verily, the earth has yielded her increase in these portions, and mankind need not go hungry here. Moreover, the sunshine is so soothing, abundant and balmy, the refreshing breezes from the neighboring gulfs add their good gifts to nature's beneficence, so that one is made to feel grateful for being alive and tarrying here.

The first signs of spring greeted and gladdened us as we came South out of Jacksonville, where the peach trees were in full blossom and roses were budding and blooming in open gardens, and every day since has brought new evidences that spring is here, so far as Florida is concerned. We went out two days ago into the truck fields, where hundreds of busy men and women were cutting and crating spring-grown cabbages, picking strawberries, boxing celery, pulling and packing beans, trucking them all off in great loads to nearby railway stations to be sent North and West.

At this time of the year, Florida does the gardening and supplies the fresh vegetables for the East, with California doing the same for the West. Evidently Columbus never dreamed of what a really great land he had discovered. And many of us who live in it now fail to grasp its meaning and its magnitude. Of all peoples on this globe, we of the United States of America should be the happiest, and certainly the most grateful.

Truly, God has not only given us a land flowing with milk and honey, but a climate that makes the milk wholesome, and fruits, flowers and vegetables that make the honey savory and sweet. And our land is so favored and varied that if one cannot find health, happiness and contentment in one part or climate of it, he can in another. I was talking yesterday with a man here from Chicago. He is in his ninety-second year, and declares he never has enjoyed life quite so fully and keenly as he does now. He looks as if good for a hundred or more. He has had a "hacking cough" from an incurable bronchial trouble now for fifty years. He has traveled over much of the habitable earth and declares that there is no place or climate where he finds relief as he does in central Florida. So, for the last twenty years, when cold weather begins to swoop down on the West, he takes up his abode here—and gets young and spry again. I eat three times daily beside a man at table who worked his way up from the humblest and poorest-paid railway employee, through all the vicissitudes of the system, to vice-president of one of the great railroads of the West. He still holds that office, though non-active in it, now at eighty-two, and in the full enjoyment of all his physical and mental faculties. He spends his summers inland at springs or in the mountains, and all his winters in Florida. He does not need a doctor. God's good climate and a knowledge of how to comply with the laws of health keep him happy and young, though well past his four-score years. Truly, and after all is said and done, God is the great Physician and His cures are widespread and abundant if we will but learn and apply them.

I went to Sabbath School this Saturday morning. One cannot get over the marvel and the wonder of these Adventists' Sabbath Schools. This writer has never found anything like it among other denominations. Why, the secretary not only records the bare facts of the school and the session; she wields a pen that would fascinate the most indifferent, and writes minutes that would thrill the deaf and electrify the blind. The glory of every song, the anxiety and responsibility of superintendent and every teacher shines forth from her report, and the sacrifice of every giver and pupil in the school is made manifest in her record. It is wonderful indeed how a good secretary can add to the life and worth of a Sabbath School. And every officer in this school seems as much interested as the secretary. All offerings go for missions. Imagine a school of 122 pupils, none of them rich or even wealthy, giving the regular every-Sunday collection from $40.00 to $60.00! I noticed the primary department, little tots, thirty-nine in total enrollment, have as their goal $4.00 per Sabbath; and the leader told me they always went over their goal by 25 to 50 cents each Sabbath. I know many schools with more than that number of grown-ups in them whose total offering each Sunday is far less than what these little tots get and bring in and give.

No wonder Adventists collect more money for missions and send out more missionaries than any other denomination! They teach missions to their children from tenderest years. The pastor of the Church here tells me that of the million dollars extra the Adventists raised for missions last year, only one-fourth of it has been spent, $750,000 still being in the treasury, and instead of sending out fewer missionaries they are sending out more than ever, and instead of hard times decreasing their missionary offering, they were increasing. Surely these people have learned one biblical lesson well, and that is the lesson of self-denial for the sake of their Lord, that they may share with others the knowledge of Him whom to know aright is life eternal.

Yes, we are living in a great country, and in it God has many and varied agencies for good, just as He has made in it varied climates, resources and conditions. When man shall quit sinning, become grateful and take God at His word, he will be able to again look up and say, with the writer of Genesis, "And God saw all that He had made, and behold it was very good." J. O. A.

THE PULPIT'S PLIGHT AND POWER.

The pulpit never has had a finer opportunity for rendering real service to God and man than at present. The plight of the pulpit at present affords the opportunity to reveal its power. Preachers sense the weight and worry of widespread and disheartening business depression. Many pastors, with salaries far behind, face their people from Sabbath to Sabbath. They see the Church budget dropping off, and their appeals are met with stories of hard times and inability to give or to pay. On all sides we see the signs and every hour hear the words of hardship and gloomy outlook. A favorite slogan seems to be "Cheer up, the worst is yet to come." The topic of conversation by the roadside, in the shop, in the home, when neighbor meets neighbor, is the present widespread depression; but we agree with a recent writer, who said, "The present opportunity of every pulpit in the Church is to help create a better morale among all the people." If the pulpit can now help with words of good cheer, unmistakable courage and a spirit of hope, it will render a real service to humanity, and its real power will be revealed and appreciated. We are not speaking of a blind and silly optimism. We are speaking of that spirit of optimism, however, that looks squarely at difficulty and discovers opportunity, and with a strong hand and stout heart turns seeming defeat into obvious victory.

One of the unmistakable elements of strength in our Lord's life was that He refused to be discouraged, and never lost hope. The same is true of that great expounder of the Christian faith, the apostle Paul. He faced infinite difficulties, disappointments, hardships, but refused to be depressed or overwhelmed with despair.

The last place for whining, for fault-finding, for despair, or for distress is the pulpit. Conditions are not so bad but that they could be worse. More than half the human beings of the world, living under such conditions as CHRISTIAN SUN readers live under, would count themselves fortunate and rich. Our darkest days should be our strongest days in the service of the Lord. These days call for men of strength, determination, consecration to the God who never fails. His grace is sufficient and His supply is abundant.

If the pulpit doesn't help to strengthen and create a new morale in our day, it deserves to be in a pitiable plight and to stay so. The time calls for stout hearts, steady hands, faithful souls, hopeful messages from the pulpit; and the pulpit never had a finer opportunity for revealing its power than at present. Now is no time for a preacher to cry out, "Hard times." Let weaker souls do that.

When Paul was writing about the open door, he said: "A great door, and an effectual, is open unto me, and there are adversaries." He did not say, "but there are adversaries." It is ever so in the New Testament, and in the Word of God. There are opportunities, and there are difficulties.

Here is God, and there are difficulties. There is light, and there is darkness. The pulpit needs to sound now the call to service for the Lord and for self-denial in His name, and for courage and conquest in His might and majesty. There is something far better in this world than material prosperity, and that is spiritual growth and attainment.

ORIGIN AND RESPONSIBILITY OF DEACONS.

Little seems to have been written about deacons in Church histories, theologies, sermons, or any Church literature. Even great commentaries do not furnish data necessary to a clear exposition of this important office. The Bible furnishes the main information on this subject and reveals the importance of the office.

Various names and functions in different ecclesiastical bodies give some idea of what Churches think of this office. The Roman Catholic, Anglican, and Reformed bodies differ in what these officers do and their function in the Church; but Protestantism is almost a unit in the name, function, and relation of deacons to other officials of the Church. The common duty of deacons is to assist the minister in the administration of the Communion and to co-operate with him in looking after the poor of the congregation.

In tracing the history of deacons, four things may be mentioned.

I. ORIGIN.

It started by trouble in the Church; and trouble sometimes results in good. The Grecian members murmured against the Hebrews because their widows were neglected in the daily ministrations of help for the poor. The Church had increased in numbers, and no doubt the alms were distributed by Hebrews, as they were in the majority; and the Hellenists thought they were partial in the distribution of alms, and this provoked complaint. Criticism sometimes corrects conditions and introduces methods of great improvement. That condition of the minor group feeling neglected remains until this day; but there are ways of correction, and in this case all of the seven were chosen from the Grecian members.

II. HOW CHOSEN.

1. The twelve apostles called the multitude of the disciples together and said to them: "It is not reason that we should leave the Word of God and serve tables. Look ye out among you seven men of honest report, full of the Holy Ghost and wisdom, whom ye may appoint over this business; but we will give ourselves continually to prayer and the ministry of the Word" (Acts 6:2-4). This "pleased the multitudes, and they chose Stephen, a man full of faith and the Holy Ghost; Philip, Prochorus, Nicavor, Timon, Parmenas, and Nicholas, a proselyte of Antioch" (Acts 6:5).

2. They presented these seven before the apostles; and, "when they had prayed, they laid their hands on them" (Acts 6:6). Then the word of God increased and the number of the disciples multiplied in Jerusalem greatly, and a great company of the priests were obedient to the faith. Stephen, full of faith and power, did great wonders and miracles among the people. Stephen and Philip were the only members of the seven who became prominent, but all did good work.

III. QUALIFICATIONS.

1. Blameless and of good reputation; grave, not double-tongued, not given to much wine, temperate, not greedy of filthy lucre, holding the mystery of the faith in a pure conscience, and let them first be proved.

2. The above qualifications would make them spiritually-minded. The chief thing in a minister—and deacons were ministers—is to be spiritual in thought, conduct, and influence. They must also have business capacity to handle the funds for the poor and to distribute them wisely.

IV. DUTIES OF DEACONS.

1. To assist the minister and live above reproach. Deacons rank as ministers and must be careful in conduct, associations, and business. It is a great honor and a great opportunity to be chosen as a deacon and ordained to this high office. It is a sacred and responsible position.

2. To care for the poor of the Church. This opens a large field of usefulness and a great opportunity for knowing people, helping them, and growing in the graces that adorn Christian character. Their duty was to look after and care for the poor of the congregation. If that principle had been adhered to, it would have held the poor within the pale of the Church, and their needs would have been supplied without the help of outside organizations; and it would work today. If people would line up with some Church, attend Sunday School and regular Church services, the Church would aid them in their need. All suffer by neglecting Bible standards—the Church, the deacons, and the poor. There is a great opportunity for deacons to help to lead the Church back to New Testament standards—for preacher, deacons, and people.

"WHY PROHIBITION HAS FAILED."

BY THOMAS C. AMICK.

(In reply to an article of the above caption by Henry Knight Miller in "Psychology Magazine" for December, 1930.)

II.

The next argument, when reduced to its final analysis, simply means that all law should be made null and void. Mr. Miller tells us that if the people of one State wish to regulate the liquor traffic and the people of another State wish the open saloon, the people of the first State nor the people of the United States as a whole have no right to interfere with the second State. Following this line of argument further, if one county of any State wishes to have the open saloon, that county being a self-determining unit, the other counties of the State, and not even the State itself, has a right to interfere. Pursuing still further this line of argument, if any township of a county, as a self-determining unit, wishes to have the open saloon, then no other township, neither the county, the State, nor the United States government has any right whatever to molest or interfere. And further, this means that if any individual person—he being an individual, self-determining unit—wishes to set up a saloon or to participate in any sort of crime whatever, then no person or government has any right to come in and tell him nay. This "reduction ad absurdum" argument can be applied to practically every wet argument, and we can demolish the "wet" argument just as readily as we have demolished this one. No, Mr. Miller, the Civil War made us one nation, not simply a group of separate States. What would be done with the interstate commerce act, the Mann white-slave act, the anti-trust laws, and all the other laws of our nation if Mr. Miller's arguments and the arguments of the wets prevail? The Civil War was fought once for all, and the decision of the sword was that the majority of the States have a perfect right to dictate to the minority.

The next reason offered by Mr. Miller as to why prohibition has failed is that prohibition failed to take the profit out of liquor. Who is to blame for this? Mr. Miller attempts to answer this question in his next argument, in which he tells us that human nature has not yet evolved to that plane of perfection at which the average man can resist the appeal of easy money. In justification of his statement, he tells us that one boot-legger boasts that his trucks cover sixteen States unmolested and that his protection pay-roll amounts to one hundred million dollars a year.

The Roman historian Sallust pictures the bandit Jugertha after he had paid a visit to Rome and had bought off the magistrates from punishing him for his crimes, when leaving Italy for his native shores of Africa he turned back his eyes on Rome and cried out, "O venal city, thou wouldst sell thyself if thou could find a purchaser." It was but a matter of time after this until Rome fell and was plundered by her foes.

Does Mr. Miller mean to tell us that the American people have lost their virtue and their valor? Have we lost our ashes of honor? Have we become like the venal magistrates of Rome? If Mr. Miller is correct, he brings an awful charge against the American people. It is time for us to arouse and strengthen our moral fiber! It is high time for us to get behind our prohibition laws and see to it that they are absolutely enforced and every such sleuth as he has mentioned must be driven from the land.

Let us call the roll of a few of our immortal heroes and ask if their spirits are dead. Spirit of William Lloyd Garrison, have you forsaken your country forever? You who fought and gave your life that the slave might be free, are you not calling us to liberate and free our country from a galling servitude to rum and drink? E. P. Lovejoy come and help us to fight again the battle against slavery to alcoholism. Spirit of John B. Gough, have you departed from your country forever because of the evils and machinations of the liquor men? Let the spirit of Frances E. Willard come again and lead the forces of temperance and prohibition to the most glorious victory over all their foes. May the spirits of those immortals who have fought and bled and died that man might be free under law from the field of Runnymede down through Pym, Hampton, William the Silent, Washington, Lincoln and Wilson animate the hosts of righteousness and temperance to greater conquests than we have yet known. Yes, "new immortals" will rise when necessary and the whole "wet" crowd will be silenced forever.

This is not a real argument against Mr. Miller's sixth and seventh statements. It is simply a statement of faith in our people. Mr. Miller gave one lone piece of statistics in support of his argument—that of the man whose liquor trucks cover sixteen States. If Mr. Miller knows the facts, as he claims, and if Mr. Miller is a good law-abiding citizen of our country, why does he not report this flagrant violation of law to the United States prohibition agents and let us see whether or not all our people will accept bribes? A good, law-abiding citizen would be so incensed at such violation of law that he would take up the cause himself and never rest until such a sleuth and his henchmen were brought to justice.

The last argument of Mr. Miller is that intoxicating liquor "in moderation" promotes conviviality, breaks down frigid barriers between men, cause men to forget for the time being all their troubles, throws a glamor over a drab, hard life, and creates sociability. He then gives an illustration of a crowd of men attending a banquet, when conversation grew dull, and the banqueters lost interest if intoxicating drinks were passed, as if by magic, the whole atmosphere changes, smiles replace frowns, laughter replaces sighs, songs break out, and good fellowship becomes contagious. Let us ask what decent, well-thinking men would care to attend such a banquet as this? Was ever a poorer argument produced in favor of strong drink? Who is to decide what "in moderation" means in a case of this kind? Will not

SUFFOLK LETTER.

On Monday night, February 9, 1931, the Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Society of the Suffolk Christian Church celebrated its nineteenth anniversary. The attendance was large and the exercises were encouraging. Mrs. C. C. Rawles presided. Orchestral music was a leading feature of the service. Mrs. Clarence Harrell sang "There is a Green Hill Far Away," illustrated by colored slides by Rev. H. S. Hardcastle; dialogue by Mrs. W. H. Yates and daughter, Miss Alice Yates; duet, "When I Look on His Face," by John M. Eley and Mrs. M. F. Hall; a trio by Mrs. M. F. Hall, Mrs. Clarence Harrell and Mr. John M. Eley; an illustrated song, "In the Cross of Christ I Glory," sung by the choir and the congregation; reading by Mrs. Hall; piano selections by Mrs. I. W. Johnson; musical numbers by George Earle Rogers on the violin, Linwood Judkins on the cornet, and Edward Harrell on the saxophone.

The meeting was spiritual and missionary throughout. The occasion was the climax of an interesting and suggestive history which all enjoyed. The society was organized on February 19, 1912, with one hundred charter members, and now has one hundred and fifty members. The growth and work of the society have been conservative and steady, always seeking to maintain the Christian attitude toward the cause for which it prayed and labored.

Its financial history is a lesson of value to all who study it and learn a lesson from its progress. Its annual receipts were as follows:

February, 1912, to October, 1912.....	$ 111.06
October, 1912, to October, 1913.....	199.87
October, 1913, to October, 1914.....	174.55
October, 1914, to October, 1915.....	176.10
October, 1915, to October, 1916.....	167.10
October, 1916, to October, 1917.....	290.78
October, 1917, to October, 1918.....	405.73
October, 1918, to October, 1919.....	957.41
October, 1919, to October, 1920.....	664.38

October, 1926, to October, 1927.....	1,242.79
October, 1927, to October, 1928.....	1,252.76
October, 1928, to October, 1929.....	1,121.93
October, 1929, to October, 1930.....	1,014.46

Total receipts in 19 years..... $14,044.36

An average of $739.15 per year from its organization in 1912. Of course, this does not represent what the Girls' Missionary Society, the Church and individual members of the congregation have given for missions; but it may be a suggestion to other missionary societies to press on in the good work and help to save the world for Christ and the Church.

The work and achievements of this Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Society show what could be accomplished in this field of service if all Churches and all societies would give their heart, their money, and their time to the great missionary cause. This society holds monthly meetings, and they keep the matter on their minds all the time. They find satisfaction in the personal sacrifice they make, and they realize the truth of "the words of the Lord Jesus, how He said, It is more blessed to give than to receive" (Acts 20:35).

The society has had only three treasurers—Miss Bessie Norfleet (3 years) collected $485.78; Mrs. C. B. Duke (15 years) collected $12,544.12;

Mrs. M. F. Hall (1 year) collected $1,014.46—total, $14,044.36. This is a good lesson; worthy of study and copy.

ELON LETTER.

In the home began education, work, play, government, and religion. It briefly epitomized all the relations of life. The head of the family was teacher, labor boss, play supervisor, political sovereign and religious priest. His will was final. The members of the family enjoyed such rights and privileges as he accorded them. No man was privileged to interfere with the prerogative of the head of the family in exercising his powers, and we have coming down to us from that day a proverb to the effect that a man's home is his castle.

One by one, the school, the workshop, play activities, government and religion have won their independence of the home, only themselves to be transformed in the light of the enlarging experiences of the human race as to what is good, wholesome and desirable for the life of man. No man today undertakes to exercise autocratic authority in the home. His wife has ceased to be his personal property. She has become his equal socially and before the law. He cannot discard her according to his fleeting fancy, and he cannot even maintain a rough-house unless his neighbors consent to it. His children, too, have rights which he must respect. He must not put them to labor at too tender an age. He must send them to school, and he must treat them kindly and considerately. They are no longer his beasts of burden for economic profit. If he fails in any way to measure up to the ideals of his neighbors in his relation to his children, he will find himself in the toils of the law. We find people lamenting the decay of the home's authority. They forget that many of the things which we cherish most in our relationships today between father and child between husband and wife, have come out of the so-called decay of the authority of the home. It has been transformed and changed for the better.

An examination of the school, of industry, of our leisure life, of government, and of the Church will reveal a similar and parallel transformation. Education, for example, was, for many years, looked upon as a discipline to which the mind of growing persons should be subjected. Education was something possessed by the teacher to be passed over through the alchemy of instruction into the mind of the learner. If the mind of the learner resisted the benign impartation of this magic lore, the pedagogue was privileged to quicken its into response through the application of a peach-tree limb, but today educators deprecate such a procedure. They assert that learning takes place only when the mind of the pupil is active and that interest should be capitalized as the friend of learning. School teachers may no longer flog learning into their pupils. The lecture system has been discredited. The textbook method is being very much discredited. The problem project method, based on life situations, ideal or actual, involving the active participation of the mind of the learner, dignifies the school room today and makes it the seminary or, better still, the arena of real living.

Industry, too, is no longer regarded merely as a means of supplying the physical satisfactions of life, but as an organized method by which men may give expression to their desire to serve their fellow-men. Many capitalists and many labor leaders have not caught this vision of the place of industry in life, and so we have warfare between capital and labor. Eventually we shall have peace, because the interests of both capital and labor are the same when industry is properly conceived as an organized effort by which capital and labor may express their desire for the service of humanity. There is nothing selfish in this ultimate view of industry; but, on the other hand, there is everything that is ennobling and inspiring.

The leisure which our modern civilization provides for men is a challenge that too often has not been heard, and if it has been heard has not been met with the best success. The militaristic leaders of pre-war Germany were opposed to shortening the hours of labor. They feared that the unoccupied individual would bring about a dangerous situation. The time should come, however, in the progressive march of invention and the conservation of human energy through temperance when it will be unnecessary for the human race to labor long hours in order to produce the conveniences and the comforts that minister helpfully to human living. If there is one thing that we may be sure of, it is that leisure will increase for men. The use that men shall make of this free time is to be the engrossing problem of the future. It offers the human race its finest opportunity for progress and development, or it will become its greatest menace if improperly used. It is my thought that leisure offers us the opportunity for those personal, social, and spiritual ministries which are so necessary to the completest living, and here's hoping that wisdom may be given men in instituting helpful and upbuilding methods of utilizing their leisure time.

Government was originally despotic. It did not think it necessary to secure the consent of the governed for the measures it proposed, but the appreciation for individual man which the great Nazarene taught, through slow culminating processes, made necessary the appearance of democracy as the proper political organization, and Thomas Jefferson as spokesman for the American people in 1776 was able to carry conviction to the hearts of men in the Declaration of Independence when he penned those immortal lines, "All governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed." We have not yet fully comprehended the implications of the Jeffersonian democracy, but we are beginning to do so, and the day is coming not only when war shall cease, but when nations will conceive their highest function to be in the realm of human welfare, when they will become actually the servants of the life of people and not rulers over them.

One hesitates to speak about the Church, but it, too, has undergone a wholesome transformation during the nearly two thousand years of its organized life. We cannot forget the thousand years of darkness which settled down upon the human race when the Church autocratically undertook to control government and business and home life and the thoughts that men should think and to prescribe for them, under pain of excommunication, the methods by which they should order their life in even its minutest detail. The Church became the oppressor of the life of men. It tyrannized over their liberties. Freedom became a mockery. Then it was that Martin Luther led the revolt that has given us a divided Christendom. We cannot humanly see how it could have been otherwise, but we now recognize the sin of our divisions and are devoting ourselves earnestly and prayerfully to the effort to answer the prayer of our Lord for the oneness of His followers. We recognize the Church today as the servant of the life of men and not as its overlord. Much as we love the Church, much as we are devoted to it, we cannot but see that it, too, has been good for the development and the enlargement of the life of men.

PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE LETTER.

PREPARATION FOR LARGER SERVICE.

This institution is one of the American schools which believes in humanity; therefore, it labors to open its doors to culture to every boy and girl within its jurisdiction. The creed of our fathers was liberty and equality for all. We believe that all men have a right to be of as much use as they can in the world, and to prove our faith in the perfectibility of all we are willing to share their their investment in order to give them an education.

The demand of our time is a rational system of education, and this system of education will take account of changes in society and keep pace with their evolution. The true teacher today is essentially a man of the world. He looks about him to see the life for which he must train his pupils, and thereby shape his program. Judging by the direction of the most vigorous creative activity of the present day, we may say that we live in the age of industry. As feudalism was the supreme offering of the ninth and tenth centuries to history, so our industries will be our contribution to progress. Into them go the imagination, the inventive genius, the daring of the American people.

While pedagogues were arguing behind closed doors the perennial question of the humanities versus the modernities, the facts of life, which have an inveterate habit of keeping in advance of thought, came knocking without and crying, "In God's name, open! Dispute no more whether air or water is most necessary to our children's life, but think you what meat you will set before them, for they are sore hungry and would eat." The facts of life and their good friend, common sense, demands a school for the plain man. Just such a school you will find at Piedmont.

Too many are lured into the profession of teaching or some desirable occupation before taking any work in college, much less to graduate simply because they can earn a little money "now." If our poorhouses are ever filled with men and women they will be filled with those who have wasted human resources, by not fitting themselves for anything but a pauper's life by their ill-starred attempts at early self-support through lack of interest in due preparation for larger service.

Our youth not only lack knowledge of suitable vocations, but they need to be stimulated to think of their own qualification for the work of their generation. "Know thyself," said the old philosopher, and surely, in the choice of a vocation, self-knowledge is the beginning of wisdom. Yet it would seem that self-knowledge is a lost art in this romantic age. People are interested more and more in outward, objective things, forgetting that things are important only for their value and that value is an expression of personality.

An inspiring fact about charitable, neglected and corrective work is that it gives us better methods of handling normal individuals and opportunities, as is true with this hill section of the State of Alabama. These boys and girls have ambitions, ideals, and talents, just as the rest of the world. It is the task of the school to get hold of these, quicken and sustain them till they are lifted through education to a place of honor and service. Who knows what funds of usefulness are yearly squandered in people who come to nothing—good or bad—because their real abilities have never been given proper outlet in activity for lack of cultivation. And who can hesitate to prophesy that the national happiness and prosperity would be a hundred-fold augmented if every human being could find himself and do just that thing he came into the world to do.

YOUNG PEOPLE OF CHATTANOOGA DISTRICT.

The Congregational young people of Chattanooga district met at Soddy for the conference planned at the young people's rally held in Pilgrim Church, Chattanooga, during the State Conference. Enthusiastic representatives from our four Churches enjoyed a delightful fellowship in the day and a half of inspirational meetings, discussions and recreation. After registration at the Soddy Church, the group went up to the hill-top home of the pastor and met for a brief sunset service out-of-doors. Miss Grace Hair was in charge of this service. She was assisted by Soddy young people and by Miss Ruth Raymond, whose violin added so much to the worship.

Rev. and Mrs. DeJarnette opened their home to the young people for the supper and evening programs. Every one enjoyed cooking supper over the open fire and entered into the games which followed with fine spirit. Pilgrim Church young people presented an excellent one-act play, and other groups followed with stunts and songs. At the closing business session, plans for the year were made and committees appointed.

In spite of the weather, a good group assembled for the discussion of problems in personal religion, led by Miss Dorothy French. At the morning worship service, Rev. G. W. Blount, of East Lake, brought the message and Daisy Church furnished music. After dinner, at the Church, we returned to the home of the DeJarnettes for a discussion led by Mr. DeJarnette and for another fellowship supper about the open fireplace.

The Christian Endeavor meeting in the evening was led by Mr. Jesse Stinecipher, of the Pilgrim Church. Dr. C. Rexford Raymond, pastor of Pilgrim Church, conducted the evening service. The following officers for the ensuing year were elected: Robert Murphy, of Chattanooga Pilgrim Church, president; G. Leslie Poe, of Daisy, vice-president; Grace Hair, of Soddy, secretary-treasurer. It was voted to have four week-end conferences during the year, so that each Church of the district could entertain. East Lake invited the next conference to meet in Chattanooga and promised most cordial entertainment. The exact date for that meeting was not determined. A committee to plan the program was appointed, and we look to Azille Johnston, Jesse Stinecipher, and Grace Hair to make this East Lake meeting of lasting value to all. An appropriate name was selected by the delegates, who voted to call themselves "The Congregational Comrades of the Chattanooga District."

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Secretary.

A PRAYER.

Father of mercy, cleanse and keep Thine own from sin. Forgive, and bring us to tread only Jesus' path of perfect love and conscious duty. Make us doers whose work shall stand. As we bridge the expanse of time for eternity, show us that technical understanding with intensest application to directed effort, unless it produce the power to endure and to make returns in service, is resource but wasted. Teach us the value both of active endeavor and passive strength. Material structures admit of no slack nor slight. Grant us, Father, insight, eagerness, to build as well the "stately mansions" of the soul. In Jesus' name we ask it. Amen. L.

CHRISTIAN MISSIONS AND INDIA'S AMBITION.

(An address delivered at Madison, Wis., by Rev. V. M. Samuel before the Congregational-Christian Foreign Missions Conference, October, 1930.)

Coming from India, as I do, let me bring to you the heartiest greetings of the Indian people, the Church of Christ in India, the South India United Church, the American Madura Mission, and the Madura Church Council, of which I am a member.

India's whole ambition is to become a member of the family of nations. India longs for a true international fellowship and friendship. Here I must take the opportunity to most heartily congratulate the members of the American Board and the people of America for building Foreign Missions, which, without any shadow of doubt, are the greatest monuments for their love and friendship for the people of other lands, and which, speaking for India, I should say have brought India and America closer together than any other organization ever did.

Students of history know that for a long time the contact between East and West has been on political, economic and cultural lines. The superior ability, diligence, organized effort and perhaps the unscrupulous methods of the Western imperialistic nations, with capitalistic motivations, combined with the foolishness, indolence, ignorance, and disorganized condition of the Oriental nations, led to the economic and political domination of the Occident over the Orient. This situation has on the whole been selfishly in the interests of the West itself rather than of the East. Fortunately, Christian missionaries appeared on the scene; and the result has been salvation to millions, education to thousands of youths, special work for women, schools for the blind, deaf and dumb, healing of diseases, cleansing of lepers, elevation of the untouchables, advancement of the depressed classes, illumination to the criminal tribes, protection to the orphans and converts, asylums, sanitariums, gospel of love for all, the breaking down of the barriers of color, caste, and race, and the establishment of healthier relationships between East and West.

I am not at all claiming perfection in their behalf, but I am stating a fact when I say that history has no parallel to their unbounded love and consecration to work for the elevation, advancement, and emancipation of countless human beings. They did not come to India for the purposes of commerce, or professional gain, or official work, but for utterly disinterested service for the sake of the Master. They were men with signal devotion to their ends, who even in the deepest darkness never despaired of light. I can bear personal testimony to the unflinching devotion of many missionaries to help and educate the youths of India, so that they become leaders in the various walks of life in the India that is yet to be.

India, while rich in one way, is the poorest country in per capita wealth. You can see pinching poverty in all its implications. Millions of people do not know where their next meal is coming from, and many more do not have one good meal a day, even though a single meal costs about three or four cents at the most. The average income of an Indian is about eight cents a day. The factory conditions are still worse. The mill centers are the birthplaces of tuberculosis. Every minute one man dies of malaria, while many other diseases carry away millions year after year.

There is very little relief to these poor, helpless people. The average span of life of an Indian is about twenty-three years, while the average life of an American is about fifty-three. India's average length of life is perhaps the lowest in the world. Are not these facts a living challenge to all Christians? Can the Christian America close its eyes to this tragic situation which demands immediate solution? Have not the missions a noble part to play in this connection? In India, most of the people live in villages, but 99 per cent of them do not have a single dispensary or hospital. How can India afford to lose these devoted helpers that the missions send from time to time?

After 150 years of British rule, only ten in a hundred can read and write in their own vernacular—one woman in a hundred. Probably more than 40 per cent of the literacy we now have is due to mission schools. Is there any greater challenge in the world today than to attend to the sacred duty of educating the millions of boys and girls? Take my beloved alma mater, the American College, Madura, the only first-grade college entirely run by the American Board. It is a great force for righteousness in South India. It sends out many young men year after year to be leaders of India.

It is there as a symbol to Christian love and service. There the students, who formerly would not eat with one another because of caste distinctions, are now living together as members of the same family. Both Christian and non-Christian students go out year after year with a keen sense of duty and a burning desire for service. Does not such a college deserve the sympathy of every one? What India needs is education which will fit men and women for higher and nobler tasks. To be blind to this sacred duty is to demonstrate the negation of humanity.

Then what about the millions of people who have never heard the name of Jesus? Can we still be Christians and remain indifferent to the holy call of preaching the gospel to all the world? Is there any justification for the existence of the Church if it gives up evangelism in all its import? Considering all these things and many others, I am forced to believe that at a time when "the world has tried war with force and utterly failed," when there is a passionate cry for international good will and trust, and when thinking people all over the world are more than sure that education, fellowship, mutual understanding, genuine sympathy and the law of love will be the ultimate factors to peace and prosperity of all the nations, foreign missions can be one of the most effective means to this end, and the greatest force for righteousness.—Missionary Herald.

THE MESSAGE OF THE PULPIT.

We must recast the message of the pulpit, and recast the life of the Churches, if we are to lead our generation up to God. In the last few months I have seen a score of Churches whose cost was in the aggregate more than a million dollars each. What is the value of ecclesiastical architecture if there is within it no Shekinah, if the fires upon those altars have gone out and men stand shivering in doubt and fear, whereas by humbler altars their fathers glowed with warmth in the triumphs of faith? When marble stands in the way of men, the marble must go. When form has become powerless, forms must go to the scrap-heap.

We pass across England, we see the ruin of a stately cathedral. Its towers are crumbling, its roof has fallen in, its walls are moss-grown, and its rose window is emptied of beauty and color. Near by is a humble chapel. Its structure breaks all the laws of architecture, and, as a building, it ministers to aesthetic mortification instead of satisfaction; but on its homely altars spiritual fires are ablaze—humble men and women, on their knees, catch there a new inspiration, and from thence they go out to face the cares and denials and sorrows of life and to conquer them through a wisdom and power greater than their own. The aesthetic may minister to the sense of beauty, but it ministers to the soul's development only when it is the shrine and mouthpiece of spiritual consecration.

Perhaps there was never a time when the ministry of America had a broader training in human wisdom. It is familiar with history, philosophy and theology; but our schools of the prophets must be the center of a spiritual devotion if they are to make mighty the messages of human wisdom. Our ministers must be something other than "pickers-up of philosophic trifles," or expert promoters and organizers and money-getters. Is it not time for the prophetic note which only can unfold the glorious evangel?

Long ago, an earnest prophet cried, "Woe is me, for I am undone, because I am a man of unclean lips and dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips; for mine eyes have seen the King, the Lord of Hosts." When the prophet had seen that vision, something was sure to happen. It was then that there came the touch of a live coal from off the altar and the voice of the Lord, saying, "Whom shall I send, and who will go for us?" It would mean the bringing in of a new day if from every manse and from every pulpit the cry of a new devotion should thrill the lips of every pastor—"Here am I, send me." It is such a commitment on the part of the ministry and laity that will bring us the glorious evangel which the Church so needs today.—Dr. Goodell, in Missionary Review.

GANGSTERS AND PROHIBITION.

Many men and women in our great cities who are opposed to the legalized liquor traffic have, nevertheless, been led to believe that prohibition is responsible for the immunity from punishment of gang leaders and their gunmen. The illicit traffic in liquor, they believe, makes these enemies of society powerful by making them wealthy.

Certainly these men have filled their pockets with the proceeds of bootlegging and rum-running. None of this money has come from prohibitionists; it has all come from men and women who are willing to use these thugs as criminal procurers of forbidden goods. To the extent that bootlegging supports gangsterism, the wets are responsible.

However, it has been said with probable truth that bootlegging does not produce more than 20 per cent of the revenues of these organized gangs. In Chicago, for instance, the gambling racket is productive of a greater income to the murderous gangs of the city than the traffic in liquor. The distinguished Mr. Capone is reported to have said "prohibition has caused nothing but trouble," and so it has—trouble for him. If it were not for prohibition, he would, no doubt, be conducting a perfectly legal business in liquor; but there is no reason whatever to believe that his activities in other directions would be less extensive or productive than they are now. Nor do we think that they would differ in character. He would probably depend upon these other undertakings for the greater part of his income, and he would no doubt support them with the same strong measures which have served him so well in recent years.

The repeal of prohibition would not in any way wipe out gangs, eliminate gangsters, or stop racketeering. These are problems of crime, productive crime, and so long as crime can be made productive it will continue until it is suppressed by honest and efficient government.

Gangsterism in Chicago has been laid fairly wide open to public gaze in recent months. Beginning with the post-death exposure of Mr. Jake Lingle, late of the Chicago Tribune, the people of Chicago have been made to realize that gangsterism exists because it has friends in influential places. When Chicago is served by a police force, by a judiciary, and by prosecuting agents unitedly determined to crush gangsterism, that blood-sucking business will be crushed, and not before. Prohibition has nothing to do with it; the liquor traffic has less to do with it than many people think. Let good citizens learn to know their friends in public office as well as the gangsters know theirs; let them demand the kind of government to which they are entitled; let them resent effectively the journalistic conduct of a wet propaganda which stimulates the bootleg trade, and there will be no difficulty in handling commercialized crime.

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

It has been the custom of the good women in our denomination for a number of years to send us Easter dresses for the girls, and little suits for little boys. We trust this year will be no exception to this custom. We make it a rule, and it has been our rule for a number of years, to give each girl a new dress for Easter and a new pair of Sunday slippers. Our girls get Sunday slippers for Easter, and they are supposed to make them do for Sunday for a year. It is one of the joys of the year to watch them march off to Sunday School on Easter Sunday morning dressed in a new dress and new slippers, and they are one happy bunch. We trust the good women will be good to us again this Easter season.

We also need sheets. It takes lots of sheets. They will wear out through constant use every week. We buy new plows and they wear out. New wagons will wear out. Why not sheets? Keeping an orphanage home in good trim all the time is just like a private home. Hardly a day that something is not needed. We make it a rule to buy only the things that we just have to have, and we do our best to stretch every dollar as far as it can be done.

Belews Creek (N. C. & Va. Conference) joined our monthly offerings this week. Just four more to get on the list and it will be a 100 per cent Conference. The North Carolina and Virginia Conference stands even with the Western North Carolina Conference now, and it is going to be a race to see which Conference gets to be a 100 per cent Conference first. What school in these two Conferences will be the next to join?

ADVENTURES IN YOUTH FELLOWSHIP

"Youth at Work in the Church."

JEWEL TRUITT, Editor, Waverly, Virginia.

Celebrating the fiftieth anniversary of the founding of Christian Endeavor by Dr. Francis E. Clark, the Christian Endeavor Societies of the Christian Temple, Norfolk, Va., and the Newport News Christian Church held special anniversary banquets. Rev. H. S. Hardcastle spoke at the Newport News banquet.

Miss Jewel Truitt, field secretary of the Board of Christian Education of the Southern Christian Convention, is at her home in Glen Raven, N. C., for a two weeks' vacation. Owing to the amount of summer work to be done, some Church workers find winter vacations most enjoyable. Miss Truitt plans to be in her office after March 1st.

Young people of our Churches are always working unobtrusively at their tasks. Several young people of the United Christian Church, Raleigh, have helped Dr. Kirby and Miss Chase in providing leadership for the Caroleigh Christian Church during this winter. Reports have come in during the past few months that Christian Endeavorers of the Burlington, Pleasant Ridge (N. C. & Va.), Greensboro Palm Street, and Newport News have helped in organizing several young people's societies in near-by Churches.

Dr. L. E. Smith, minister of the Christian Temple, is planning a series of Sunday evening services on the "Modern Home." Dr. Smith plans to discuss "The Modern Girl," "The Modern Young Man," "The Modern Mother," "The Modern Father," "The Modern Home." In securing material for this series of sermons, Dr. Smith has written fifty different persons on some of these topics for their ideals and suggestions. A frank and helpful discussion, such as Dr. Smith will give on these topics, should make a great contribution to the homes of our day.

The leadership training school held at United Christian Church, Raleigh, N. C., February 8-12, enrolled twenty members in the classes taught by Dr. J. Edward Kirby, Miss Priscilla Chase, and Miss Jewel Truitt. Sunday School teachers and workers of the Auburn, Caroleigh, Piney Plains, and Raleigh Churches were in attendance upon the school. The school was very successful in spite of the fact that there was quite a bit of sickness in the city during the time of the classes. Raleigh plans to hold a similar school each year. Several young people took work for credit, and five leaders of young people studied in the class on "Young People's Materials and Methods."

The members of the four Sunday School classes of the senior and young people's departments of the Waverly Christian Church enjoyed a Valentine social on the evening of February 5th. The social was held in the main auditorium of the new Christian education building which the Waverly Church erected last summer. Mr. M. L. Gray, teacher of the young ladies' class, directed the recreation. Rev. F. C. Lester, pastor, presided over the business session. Officers for the combined senior and young people's department were elected as follows: Miss Mary West, president; Miss Rosemond Knoeller, vice-president, and Miss Mable Cox, secretary-treasurer. The young people of the Church plan to make a larger use of the splendid new building and equipment which is now available to them.

ADVENTURING IN THE CHRISTIAN QUEST.

A special chart, outlining some suggestions for work and study, is being used by some of our young people's groups. These charts may be used by a Sunday School class, a Christian Endeavor or missionary society, or by a department in the local Church. There is no need for a special organization, as any group can use the chart.

The chart outlines seven pathways we may travel in our quest for the best in Christian living. These pathways are the pathways of worship, play, study, service, training, organization, and fellowship. For each of these pathways, there are listed on our chart ways to guide us in making our quest successful. For instance, under the pathway of study, the following things are listed for the young people in your Church to do:

1. Study the life and teachings of Jesus Christ during the year in a class, or at least 50 per cent of your young people reading the gospels and a book on the life of Jesus during the year. (During some years the first part of this point would be taken care of in your Sunday School classes. If that is not the case this year, then you can score 100 per cent on this point if half of your young people read the four gospels and a life of Christ during the year.)

2. At least six missionary meetings during the year, with emphasis on the study of new fields which the Christian Church has entered.

3. At least six meetings of young people, where matters of Christian conduct are discussed.

4. Provision for the study and discussion of stewardship. (These points are to be worked out through the organization that each Church already has. Thus, in some Churches, there will be only the Sunday School classes; in others, Sunday evening meetings, and in others, missionary societies. Most pastors will be glad to co-operate with their young people in planning a larger program of work for the Church.)

All the pathways are not as easy to cover as the one on worship, given above, happens to be. The pathway that calls for most work in one Church may be exceptionally easy in another Church. But each Church is to work up the points that it needs to work up, and to keep a record of all of its work. Any group wishing a copy of this chart with further suggestions for its use, may have the same by writing Miss Jewel Truitt, Waverly, Va.

"And now life calls me to a quest,
To love, to laugh, to work, to play,
To serve, to sacrifice, to pray—
He calls, and He shall have my best."

"Take us on the Quest of Beauty,
Poet Seer of Galilee,
Making all our dreams creative
Through their fellowship with Thee.

"Take us on the Quest of Knowledge,
Clearest Thinker man has known;
Make our minds sincere and patient,
Satisfied by Truth alone.

"Take us on the Quest for Service,
Kingly Servant of man's need.
Let us work with Thee for others,
Anywhere Thy purpose leads.

"All along the Quest's far pathways,
Christ our Leader and our Guide,
Make us conscious of Thy presence,
Walking always at our side."

—Eleanor B. Stock.

TOPIC: "What Jesus Teaches About God Our Father."

SCRIPTURE: John 4:23-26.

In the Old Testament, we find the story of the Hebrew people as they searched for a God whom they could worship. When they were at war, God was a god of war to them, leading them in their battles. He was always interpreted by them in terms of their own experience and knowledge.

But the heart of God was grieved that His people should have such an unsatisfying idea about Him. And because it is important that man should know God as He really is, God sent His own Son to reveal Himself. It is in the life and teachings of Jesus that we learn of the true character of God.

The first recorded words of Jesus are, "Knew ye not that I must be about my Father's business?" To Jesus, then, God was Father. Jesus taught that God is the Father of mankind, too. As Father of all, He cares for our needs; He watches tenderly when we sin; He rewards our prayers with the best answers; He is impartial and loves every child of His; and He seeks our love.

Jesus came to earth to work the works of the Father who sent Him. God began work long before man was ever upon the earth, and He still works today. God does not work as man works, though. Man has learned by hard experience even the ways by which he can accomplish anything. With his meager knowledge of the natural laws of the universe, man has done wonderful things. But man has only worked on the surface. God directs the universe from the center of things. His work conforms to all the divine laws, natural and spiritual, many of which man has never even dreamed yet.

Jesus, by His words and work, taught many fine characteristics about God. But, summing up all of them is the declaration of John that "God is love." God in His infinite wisdom and love has done for us far more than we could ever have known or asked. How thankful we should be that God is a God of love!

For this topic, your Bible is your best source for information. The concordance will help in finding helpful passages for study. Select the thoughts about God that you want discussed and assign them as far ahead of time as possible. One topic may be discussed by two or three different people, as each person's thoughts will be different.

BOOKS FOR YOUTH.

"Youth-Ways to Life" (by W. H. Foulkes; International Society of Christian Endeavor; $1.00; 150 pp.). In this book for daily devotions covering a period of nine weeks, Dr. Faulkes has suggested nine pathways by which youth can attain the "abundant life." He presents the pathways of work, love, truth, beauty, play, duty, ambition, service and faith. Such a book is helpful in building a habit of daily devotions. The material found in this little book is also helpful in planning devotional services for the society or class.

"A Girl's Book of Prayer" (by Margaret Slattery; The Pilgrim Press; 35 cents; 64 pp.). In this book, Miss Slattery has given prayers for the girl on many occasions. Frequent reading of this book will help the girl who does not find it easy to word the prayers that are in her heart to find expression for herself in prayer to God.

Sunday School Lesson

BY REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE.

JESUS SENDING FORTH MISSIONARIES.

LESSON IX—MARCH 1, 1931.

GOLDEN TEXT: "The harvest indeed is plenteous, but the laborers are few; pray ye, therefore, the Lord of the harvest, that He send forth laborers into His harvest."—Luke 10:2.

THE TWELVE—THE SEVENTY.

"And He called His twelve disciples together, and He sent them to preach the kingdom of God and to heal the sick . . . and after these things the Lord appointed other seventy also, and sent them two and two before His face." The twelve and the seventy were ordinary men, flesh and blood, every-day kind of folks. But they loved their Lord and they were willing to put at His disposal whatever gifts and capacities they had. Usefulness is not primarily a matter of ability, but of willingness to use what one has for God.

They went out two and two—there was mutual comfort and confidence and courage in going that way. The Master remembereth our frame, and He will always deal with us according to wisdom and love. Those who yield themselves to Him will find that He will help them to develop naturally and joyfully.

It is to be noted, however, that Jesus warned His disciples that they were to be as sheep among wolves. They were going out into an unfriendly world. That prophecy has been fulfilled again and again and is being fulfilled in our day. The world is not always friendly to the ideals and the spirit of Jesus. There are many phases of life that do not want Jesus to rule over them.

HARVEST—LABORERS.

"The harvest indeed is plenteous"—it was true in Jesus' day, and it is true today. There are still large numbers of people and large areas of life which need Jesus and His gospel. "The laborers are few"—the work is inadequately manned; there is too much for the too few.

Jesus' solution to the problem is suggestive. The kind of workers whom He needed and whom He sought were not humanly called. They were to be divinely called—there must be a sense of divine commission in their inner lives. Therefore, men were to pray the Lord of the harvest that He would send forth laborers. Prayer would do two things: it would release God's spirit in the life of these who prayed, and perchance give them that divine commission which God had for them, but which He could not give them because they were not in a receptive mood; and it would release the power of God in the lives of others, and they would hear the divine summons to the great task. The modern Church needs to give heed to the Master's words—the solution to the problem of the need for workers is prayer.

FAITH, SIMPLICITY, EFFICIENCY, FRIENDLINESS.

The instructions which Jesus gave the seventy need to be read in the spirit which maketh alive and not in the letter of the law which killeth. Underlying the seeming strange and apparently impractical suggestions which Jesus made were the deeper qualities and principles which should govern all Christ's workers. They were to go in faith that God would provide for their needs. Their minds were to be free from worry, so that they could devote all their energies to the work at hand. God would provide for them if they gave themselves to Him. They were to live in a simple, sincere way, without ostentation and display, content with the necessities of life and gladly denying themselves the luxuries of life. They were to be up and about their Lord's business—there was much to do, and they were to do it well. In all their contacts with men they were to be friendly, even to those who were unfriendly to them. They were to bring comfort and peace and healing to the sick. These injunctions have as much binding power today as they did in Jesus' day when they are seen in their true significance.

Joy.

"The seventy returned with joy"—they had found a new joy in their religious life, the joy of working for God. Jesus Himself put a premium upon doing things when He said, "If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them."

And Jesus also "rejoiced in the Holy Spirit." He saw in the work of the seventy the beginnings of the work to which He had set Himself to accomplish. His joy was enriched by the fact that it was not necessary for men to be "wise" and "understanding"—that is, they did not have to be "high-brows—in order to learn the secret of the Lord, to do His work, or to find His joy. It was to "babes," those with the teachable spirit, that the rich secrets of God should come, and the rich joys of service should abide.

There are, alas! all too many today who are losing the joy of religion because they are not giving themselves in service to the Master.

NEW IDEA ENFORCED.

"It took well-nigh 100 years of agitation to get the prohibition of the slave traffic enacted into law, but on the last day of 1807 the slave traffic ended legally in the United States. In 1810, however, President Monroe, in his message, speaks of the illicit traffic which has grown up and calls for stricter laws making for better enforcement against the illicit traffic of slaves. In the thirties we read that over 200,000 slaves annually were smuggled across the Atlantic Ocean. In 1871 we have the last act against the slave traffic that appeared in our congressional records, according to the testimony of Du Bois. It is evident that had we tested our ability to win out against the slave traffic when the prohibition against it was six years old, we should probably have lost out on the ground that it could never be enforced. But the fact that we had passed the law blazed the trail by which in the course of two generations we got that law enforced."—Testimony of Mrs. Elizabeth Tilton, before a subcommittee of the Judiciary of the U. S. Senate, 1926.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE

One of our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy.

"If thou wilt make the Almighty thy treasure . . . then shalt thou delight thyself in the Almighty . . . and thou shalt make thy prayer unto Him and He will hear thee."—Job 22: 25-27.

MONDAY.

OUR HONOR TO ANOTHER.

"The journey that thou takest shall not be for thine honor; for Jehovah will sell Sisera into the hand of a woman."—Judges 4:8-16.

When General Barak was called to deliver his country from the attacks of Sisera, the Canaanite warrior, and his host, he refused to go to the war unless a woman, the prophetess Deborah, would go with him. "I will go with you," said stout-hearted Deborah; "but because you insist upon a woman's presence and upholding, the Lord will give the honor of the victory to a woman, and not to you." So it was that Sisera was slain by Jael, the wife of Heber, and not by General Barak or any of his warriors.

Thus it was that when Moses, terror-stricken at the prospect of facing Pharaoh, told God that he could not be the spokesman of God's people, his brother Aaron was appointed to speak for them, and Moses came near to losing his rightful place as the leader and deliverer of his nation.

What is the work for which we have been equipped by the school of God's providence and trained therein by the patience of the All-wise? That is our work, and no other's. We are not to look to the honor of it; but if we do not honorably perform it, it is to our dishonor.

Prayer.—O God, give us the bravery to assume our responsibility. O God, help us to complete our task. O God, may we not sell our own honor to another. Amen.—Wells.

TUESDAY.

A CONTRITE PRAYER.

"Wash me thoroughly from my sin; purge me with hyssop, and I shall be clean; wash me and I shall be whiter than snow."—Psa. 51:1-9.

A true consciousness of sin does not see the sinful acts of life only, but is sensible of the deep depravity of the heart, and find there, possibly, a terrible fountain out of which flows evil. Jesus says, "Out of the heart proceed evil thoughts, murders, adulteries, fornication, thefts, false witness, blasphemies."

This is certainly a contrite and noble prayer of David's, but any one can be spared the humiliation which he suffered and which was the source of his penitence. We do not have to learn contrition that way. We can do it by preventive grace; that is, quench the fire of sin before it bursts into a flame, stamp the eggs of the snake before they are hatched. If we ask God for it, He will not fail to so shape our lives that we shall not taste the bitterness of sin.

A sense of sin is necessary for contrition. Without this, we cannot know the sweet and blissful peace of His mercy, but we may save ourselves the stain of guilt by preventing the acts of sin. The fellow who crosses the bridge safely is better off than the fellow who falls off and has to be rescued with broken bones.

Mary said to her Lord, "If Thou hadst been here, my brother had not died." That is a little cross-section of preventive grace. If we have the Lord with us at all times, we will be spared much bitterness and be closer to and nearer like our Master.

Prayer.—Lord God, we do not often feel the deep humility of David; but we so feel the terrible consequences of sin. We are truly wretched at times. Cleanse Thou us from secret and all faults. Heal us and make us more like the Master. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

A DESERTED FIELD.

"He looked that it should bring forth grapes, and it brought forth wild grapes."—Isa. 5:2.

Are our lives like a deserted field? They will be unless we care for them in Jesus.

God has made us temples for His indwelling. He has planted us to be His Church. He has protected us with His power and fidelity. He has appointed us keepers of His house; watchmen and stewards of His vineyard. What is there that He has not done for us?

Of a truth, there is seen among us falsehood, deceit and injustice, idolatry and covetousness, enmity and contentions, gluttony, drunkenness and lasciviousness; and one of the sad aspects of it is that many who avoid these things look calmly on and say or do nothing about it.

God's love should imbue and embellish us all with the beautiful and bountiful fruits of His Spirit. For us to fail in this means to lay our soul vineyards to waste, and He will look on and find "briers and thorns."

Prayer.—Dear Lord, have mercy upon us. May we see the good we may bring forth out of the vineyards of our souls, clear them of all rubbish, and let the Spirit of God and grace be our guide to bring forth the fruit of righteousness—Thy kingdom. Amen.

THURSDAY.

IN A NUTSHELL.

"Behold, the Lamb of God that taketh away the sins of the world."—John 1:29.

This Scripture presents to us the sum and substance of the gospel, viz: Christ died for our sins; by Him we are made clean, and whosoever believeth on Him hath eternal life. Upon this faith, we may build our soul's confidence.

Paul had been, as he calls himself, the vilest of sinners, yet he received mercy and power for his ministry for Christ. You and I find hope in His grace, and that the promises of God fail none who trust in and rest on it.

Prayer.—O God, give us humble and believing hearts. For Jesus' sake. Amen.

FRIDAY.

TWO WAYS OF PRAYING.

"When thou prayest."—Matt. 6:5.

We wonder if we do not often feel like the Pharisee in his prayer. Isn't it true that we have a little subconscious habit of making sure in advance that we are not like somebody less fortunate than ourselves, and in thus making sure of ourselves we are really, after all, much like the Pharisee?

The fault of the Pharisaical way of praying is that he is only in the presence of himself and those who are looking upon him, or who are observant of his life, and he really does not come into the presence of the Lord. His mouth speaks with God, but his mind and heart is on something else. "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord! Lord! shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven." The Pharisee knew no law but that of self-love, and he does not doubt that he is a good and pious man. He did not ask for mercy and he received no mercy.

The publican stood before God and knew his sin and begged for forgiveness. He did not compare himself with others. He seemed to be conscious of the presence of none but God and himself. His prayer is earnest and sincere, God responds, and he goes from his prayer gratified.

God has presented these two men to us in order that we may see ourselves in them; that we may come into his presence, see Him and be strong in communion with the Infinite. Really, we never become too good to pray, "God, be merciful to me, a sinner." In this spirit we have the assurance that we are the children of God.

Prayer.—Dear Lord, give us this humility, this experience of Thy mercy, and this gift not only of prayer but of coming into Thy presence, that we may partake of Thy soul and Thy righteousness. Amen.

SATURDAY.

EXPECT NOTHING ELSE.

"If ye are reproached for the name of Christ, blessed are ye, because the Spirit of glory and the Spirit of God resteth upon you."—1 Peter 4:12.

Martin Luther once said that a pastor "should study diligently, and suffer himself to be vexed and criticised by every one." That is true also of every Christian. Vexation and criticism are the Christian's normal lot. He has no time to fight against them. He does not want to waste his strength against them. He is humble enough to believe that he deserves them. He knows proudly that his Master does not deserve them.

If we were never attacked, if we were never mocked and spit upon, if we were never vexed and unjustly criticised, how could we feel that we were crucified with Christ? What a small corner of His cross we are bearing, any way! How little of His infinite sufferings do we share!

Prayer.—Our Blessed Redeemer, we tarry but on the outer fringe of Gethsemane, and we are sleeping at that. Thou art deep in the darkness of the olive trees. Thou art in the clutch of the oil press. What we have to endure is but the shadow of what Thou hast endured for us. Count us worthy, we pray Thee, to share Thy full reproach. Amen.—Wells.

SUNDAY.

COUNT THE COST.

"Which of you, desiring to build a tower, doth not first sit down and count the cost?"—Luke 14: 25-35.

The United States is still paying pensions for the War of 1912—one hundred and eighteen years ago! Nine widows of veterans of that far-away war are now on the pension list, drawing from the government fifty dollars a month. How far the black cloud of war extends its shadow! Since the Pension Bureau has been established, it has paid out to veterans and their widows the enormous sum of nearly eight billion dollars—not a cent too much; but think of the saddened lives, think of the human loss, which this immense amount of money is wholly unable to measure!

And think of the long cost of any wrong, any sin. How it drags on over the years, a steady weakness and incompetence, a steady sorrow and shame! If, before a sin is committed, we would only sit down and count the cost! If we would only train ourselves to look ahead in our lives and make sure of a happy future! There is only one way to do it, and that is to live with Jesus Christ.

Prayer.—Our Saviour, we wish to build the tower of our lives. We wish to raise it on the one foundation, strongly buttressed against every wind that blows. We wish it to be beautiful, rising white and pure and lovely into the blue sky. Oh, be Thou the Architect, be Thou the Builder, our Prudence to plan, our Wisdom to direct, and our Strength to complete. Amen.—Wells.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN'S PULPIT

REV. JOSEPH W. FIX, Preacher.

THE CHURCH'S ONE FOUNDATION.

By DR. W. W. STALEY.

"Other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ."—1. Cor. 3:10-23.

(This sermon was delivered by Dr. W. W. Staley at the anniversary service of First Christian Church, Portsmouth, Va., and furnished The Sun "Pulpit" by the pastor, Rev. H. C. Caviness.)

1. Solomon's temple was the greatest building ever erected. Total number of men employed was 183,300 for seven years; total cost, $2,874,930,000. St. Peter's, in Rome, cost $50,000,000, or one-fifth as much as Solomon's Temple. In other words, the greatest building in all time was a house of worship—a Church.

2. The Mosaic dispensation was the greatest dispensation until Jesus came and founded the Christian dispensation on Himself—"and other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ." The Christian dispensation is the greatest dispensation this world has ever known.

3. Solomon's Temple was the greatest building of the Mosaic dispensation, but the Christian Church is greater than Solomon's Temple, because it is a spiritual structure, "for the temple of God is holy, which temple ye are" (v. 17).

Let us consider four things concerning the Church:

I. CHRIST THE FOUNDATION.

1. Man can lay no other foundation than that is laid. The Bible is not the foundation of the Church; history is not the foundation of the Church; education is not the foundation of the Church; theology is not the foundation of the Church; numbers and wealth are not the foundation of the Church. Christ is the only Foundation.

2. Isaiah revealed this same truth seven hundred years before Christ, when he said: "Thus saith the Lord God, Behold, I lay in Zion for a foundation stone, a tried stone, a precious cornerstone, a sure foundation" (Isa. 28:16). Revelation, in the Old and New Testaments, confirms this great truth, that the only foundation of the Church is Jesus Christ, who is God manifest in the flesh. The Church is not a human institution, but a divine, spiritual institution.

II. THE PEOPLE ARE THE TEMPLE.

1. "Know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you?" (1 Cor. 3:16.) The Church is not built of stone, but of redeemed souls. By regeneration, human souls are fashioned into material out of which God builds His Church; and this "temple of God is holy, which temple ye are" (v. 17). It is a spiritual building in which God dwells.

2. A house does not make a home; it is the family, with its love, its associations, its heart relations, that wood, brick and stone cannot build. The people in the Church make the temple founded on Jesus Christ. There may be a fine building and a poor Church; or there may be a poor building and a great Church; and there may be both in one.

III. MINISTERS ARE THE BUILDERS.

1. The prophets of the Old Testament prepared the way for the coming of Jesus and built up a great religious nation. Out of that nation Jesus was born and became the Foundation of the Christian Church. The foundation is the main thing in a building as revealed in the house built on the "sand" and the one on the "rock" (Matt. 7:24-27).

2. Jesus sent His disciples forth to teach or make disciples of all nations, to make Christians of all nations (Matt. 28:19); and His Church is composed of disciples won to Him by preaching the gospel. It is safe to preach Christ, and not the wisdom of men.

Real gospel preaching is building out of gold, silver, precious stones; but any other preaching is building out of wood, hay, stubble (1. Cor. 3:12).

IV. THE FINAL TEST.

1. At the judgment. No human authority can settle the destiny of the Church. That will be at the final judgment day.

2. By fire. The test will not be of the foundation, but for the Church built on that foundation—the people; if of gold, silver, precious stones, the building will stand the fire; if of wood, hay, stubble, it will be burned.

3. God will be the Judge, and He will determine all. The work of ministers may be burned, but they will be saved if they have made an honest and faithful effort to preach the pure gospel of Jesus Christ. Christ is the Foundation for (1) faith, (2) doctrine, (3) conduct, (4) character.

THE DEMOCRATS.

The political leaders and office-holders of the Democratic party, particularly from the South, have a job to do, and they should do it now.

They are being told that the next presidential election will certainly result in a Democratic victory if they will consent to the nomination of a candidate who is opposed to prohibition. The political experts of New York City are assuring them that the South really opposed Governor Al. Smith because he was a Roman Catholic and not because of his wet views and will accept a wet candidate if he is a Protestant.

Besides, say these New York experts on Southern and Western politics, the South is hungry and disillusioned and disgruntled about this and that, and the dry West is in precisely the same state of mind.

The Southern and Western Democratic political leaders will do well to trust what they know themselves about the South and West rather than swallow the abysmal ignorance of the wet politicians who make their headquarters in or around Hoboken. They know nothing whatever about the millions of plain, sensible, hard-working, intelligent Americans of the West and South—men whose fathers followed George Washington from Lexington to Yorktown in defense of a principle, and who themselves are just as ready to sacrifice today for the right to go to the polls with an assurance that their ballots, there cast, will actually achieve decisions. Let the Democratic senators and representatives and governors think of the men who are despised on Broadway, but who not infrequently stand in the furrows waiting for the dawn in order that they may start long hours of toil which yield the nation bread and clothing. Let them think of the women who were never inside of a beauty parlor, but who scrub their children on Sunday morning, pile them into the family "flivver" and proceed devoutly to Church. These people may be despised by the men who control the national Democratic organization; they may be held to be so unintelligent or so spiritless that they can be herded like sheep into the following of a wet-machine candidate, but it will not be safe for their local leaders to hold them in such contempt.

Do you remember, you Western and Southern Democratic leaders, that you were told before the election of 1928 that any one was a fool to think that any Southern State would go Republican? You are being told the same thing now. It is just as true now as it was then, and was just as true then as it is now. Let Democracy be not deceived by incidents which have occurred since 1928. They indicate only that the people of the revolting States want to be Democrats—that, and nothing more!

A great many of the people have been seriously offended by the adoption of the name "The Young Crusaders" by an organization devoted to the return of the legalized liquor traffic. "Crusaders" carries the suggestion of followers of the cross, and its use in such a connection is unfortunate. The organization has recently been very much better named by a Washington wit, who suggested that it be called "The Young Boozaiders."

"In a State, pecuniary gain is not to be considered prosperity, but national prosperity is found in righteousness."—Confucius.

EDUCATIONAL PROBLEMS FOR PSYCHOLOGICAL STUDY. By Goodwin Watson and Ralph B. Spence. Macmillan; $2.00; pp. 352.

Educational psychology, according to this book, is best learned by the solution of actual problems. Twenty fields of interest and one hundred and sixty-seven specific types of problems are considered as covering the general field problematically. A case or group of cases is given for each specific type of problem, followed by a group of searching questions which are to be answered by investigating the suggested source materials. The bibliographies are most valuable. A class or an individual teacher can use the book to splendid advantage. Not all the problems will necessarily be considered by any particular person or group, but only those that have significance for the present experience. It is a book that will not soon grow old. One of its chief values is its group of appendices, and particularly that appendix which is entitled "The A B C of Educational Psychology." To real thinkers, here is a real book. Any others will find it tiresome, not to say insipid and boresome.

THIS NEW EDUCATION. By Herman Harrell Horne. Abingdon; $2.50; pp. 280.

Few men in our day are able to evaluate the new trends in education as Dr. Horne is able to do it. He is, himself, in the sweep of the advancing educational process, and yet he is able calmly and serenely to sit in judgment on what is taking place. Few men can do this.

A doctor of philosophy of Harvard, trained under Royce and James, and with an unusually successful record as teacher and writer, Dr. Horne describes himself as half-and-half—not wholly old nor yet entirely new. Those who know his magnetic personality would claim for him that he connotes all that is good in the new trends as well as preserves the best of the old, and that he expects more light yet to burst upon us.

He treats of education in its total aspect and as conditioned by age trends, and does not leave religion out. It is doubtful if any assessment of the new education can surpass that given in chapters three and four of his book. Chapters eleven to sixteen will be especially helpful to pastors and religious educators, whether in the home or in the school.

The book is heartily commended.

CHURCH WORK WITH THE YOUNG PEOPLE. By Harry Thomas Stock. The Pilgrim Press; $2.00; 236 pp.

This is a very practical treatment of the problems met in Church work with young people. Mr. Stock considers the conditions in the local Church. He shows leaders how to adapt and apply approved plans and methods for effective organization and growth of a Sunday and week-day program for the young people who are in our Churches. He deals with the objectives of young people's work, its organization, the building of the curriculum for the Sunday School class, the program for the young people's society, the training and methods employed by leaders, the program of worship, service activities, financing the budget, the recreational program, the pastor and his young people, and the relationships between the younger and the older people of the Church. The suggestions made by Mr. Stock in this book are challenging, fundamental, and very usable.

WHY PROHIBITION HAS FAILED.

some "coercion" have to take place? Why did not Mr. Miller tell the whole story? Why did he not tell the story of Alexander's feast?

Since Mr. Miller was afraid it would terribly mar his argument if he told the full story, we turn to others. They have given us the sequel to Mr. Miller's banquet. The great English painter William Hogarth has left behind pictures of the aftermaths of such banquets as Mr. Miller wishes us to have—virtuous womanhood violated, the banqueters lying under the tables, dead drunk, wallowing in their own froth and slime until they came out from under the influence of the poison, fights, brawls, the banquet hall turned into bedlam—all this to the shame of the banqueters, we ask why Mr. Miller did not paint the remainder of the picture? If Mr. Miller did not do the painting, Hogarth did it from life, and the stench was just a little too strong for Mr. Miller's nose.

Such an argument as this shows the flimsiness of the liquor men's appeals, and there is not a single argument that the whole host of them can produce but is as flimsy as this one. We wonder why Mr. Miller did not add still that other old gag that we must have whiskey because it is "good for snake bites."

This ends Mr. Miller's arguments. We have endeavored to look at his arguments candidly, sincerely, and in the light of reason. We leave it to our readers to determine whether or not we have been convincing. Of course, the "wet" will not be convinced. But in the mind of him who has the best interests of his fellow-man, his nation and himself at heart, there is no compromise with evil. "They enslave their children's children who make compromise with sin." The man who looks for a forward and upward move in civilization bares his brow to nobler ideas and ideals, to loftier and holier sentiments than that found in the stench of the whiskey bottle or the rum-soaked devotee.

Mr. Miller promises another article outlining a plan which will meet with the approbation of both wets and dries. He sets himself up as the repository of all knowledge as he so confidently tells us that all will approve of his plans.

To our mind and to our way of thinking, anything less than we now have will be a subterfuge, and nothing will be acceptable to the good people of our country less than the absolute prohibition of the liquor traffic.

OBITUARIES.

McCAULEY.

John William McCauley departed this life at his home, Union Ridge, N. C., February 4, 1931, aged 47 years. He is survived by one sister and one brother. He had never married. In his life and manner he was quiet, modest and unassuming. He was a good neighbor, friend and citizen. He attended Union Christian Church. The funeral services were conducted from the home by the writer and his body laid to rest in Union Church Cemetery by the side of his parents, who fell on sleep some years ago. May the Master comfort the bereaved.

P. H. FLEMING.

MOORE.

Mrs. N. Willie Moore was born September 15, 1878, and was called home from labor to reward November 29, 1930, at the age of 52. In early life, Sister Moore made a profession of faith in Christ and united with Catawba Baptist Church. After her marriage to Bro. H. Willie Moore, December 5, 1898, she moved to the Pleasant Grove Christian Church community, Halifax County, Va., and has been a faithful and devoted member of this Church for 32 years. To this union, there were born nine children, six of whom, together with her husband, are living to mourn their loss.

She was devoted to her family, a faithful wife and companion, a devoted mother, a kindly neighbor, a devout Christian. Her devotion to her home was beautiful, and all who knew her loved her. The funeral service was conducted by her pastor from her Church, and the large concourse of friends who attended her funeral testify to the high esteem they had for her.

Mother.

"If when the mists and shadows come,
And starless are the skies,
You, that brought heaven's light to home
And made of earth a paradise,
Might heal the wounds of dreary years
And kiss away our childish tears.

"If we might know the love again,
Blind to every act of wrong,
And welded be the golden chain
When all life thrilled with song—
Ah, what, with your tender cares,
Could bar in life such happiness?

"Childhood's rosy ways should teem
With joys that only you can bring,
If walking from the golden dream
You might come to soothe the sting
Of loss that only hearts may know
Whose loved ones are called to go.

"But while time's hand is weighing down
Upon us with increasing years,
A hope that binds all wounds is found
To assuage sorrow's tears
A promise that, beyond the pain,
Love's broken circle shall live again."

W. C. WICKER.

TUNSTALL.

Mrs. Ellinor J. Tunstall, daughter of Austin and Lucretia Newman, was born November 2, 1842, and died January 19, 1931, at the ripe age of 88 years. In childhood, Sister Tunstall professed faith in Christ and united with Mt. Auburn Christian Church, Warren County, N. C., was fondly called, lived with Allie Hayes, and has been a faithful and devoted member of her Church through all these years. She was married to J. D. Cole at the age of eighteen, at about the beginning of the Civil War. They lived happily together until May, 1892, when her husband died.

She was married to William Tunstall in 1915, and they lived happily together for about fifteen years, until his death. After his death, "Aunt Ellen," as she

ELON COLLEGE

AN ACCREDITED COLLEGE

of the

CONGREGATIONAL CHRISTIAN CHURCHES OF THE SOUTHEAST

ELON was founded to train Christian leaders for the New South.

ELON has done its task well—one graduate in seven being in the Christian ministry. The other six express Christian leadership in the various professions and vocations. Experience teaches that spiritual leadership must be indigenous.

The South is now a New South ready for an inclusive Church, the type of Church for which Elon has stood for forty years and for which she is prepared to produce capable leadership.

With no Church in the community, save the College Auditorium, ELON has practiced Christian Union for faculty, students, and community for four decades.

Its contribution to Christian Education is nationally known and approved.

Its Christian Education Building, providing laboratory facilities for religious leadership training, is unique and is the first college building of its type in the world.

ELON confines itself to undergraduate liberal arts work with that religious emphasis which befits the Christian College.

In ELON the Congregational-Christian Church has an asset of marvelous hopefulness.

The South needs her Yale, her Oberlin, her Carleton, her Pomona for the intellectual leadership of the United Church. Many regard ELON as strategically located and spiritually endowed to become such a center of illumination and leadership training.

LANGSTON.

On January 18, 1931, Bro. David I. Langston passed from labor to reward; age 55 years, 6 months. At an early age in life he professed faith in Christ and united with the Christian Church at Auburn. On April 10, 1901, he was married to Miss Annie Gupton.

Mr. Langston was a charter member of the Henderson Christian Church, being first ordained deacon, first superintendent of the Sunday School, then teacher of the O'Kelly Class for some time, and at the time of his death he was teacher of the Wellons Bible Class. In his death the Church has sustained a great loss.

He is survived by his wife, five children, two sisters, two brothers, and many other relatives and friends. Services were conducted from Henderson Christian Church by the writer, assisted by Rev. W. C. Cummings, pastor of First Presbyterian Church, Henderson, and interment was made in Elmwood Cemetery, Henderson. May the Lord of love comfort the bereaved.

H. E. CRUTCHFIELD.

BLANCHARD.

Mr. F. U. Blanchard passed from time to eternity at his home near Hopedale, Alamance County, N. C., January 28, 1931, aged 93 years and 20 days. His wife preceded him to the grave some three years ago. Eight children survive. He was a Confederate veteran and one of the oldest, if not the oldest, in the county. On November 10th he united with Long's Chapel, of which Church he was a member at death. He served his day and generation to a ripe old age. A husband, father and substantial citizen has ended his pilgrimage. Funeral services were conducted from Long's Chapel by the writer, and his body was laid to rest in the Church cemetery. The Lord comfort the bereaved.

DR. EDDY RETIRES.—

Dr. Sherwood Eddy has retired from the Y. M. C. A. and will give the remaining years of his life to the advancement of Socialism. He expressed this purpose publicly at a Y. M. C. A. dinner tendered him by the National Council at New York City a few days ago. He is one of the most fascinating Christian leaders in the world today.

CORNELL AIDS CHINA.—

The association entered into between the New York State College of Agriculture at Cornell University and the University of Nanking, China, has a typical Chinese name. It is "The Cornell-University of Nanking-International Educational Board Co-operative Crop Improvement Project." By the arrangement made, members of the department of plant-breeding at Cornell agree to spend their sabbatical years in China through a five-year period, helping to develop crop improvement work. Twelve missions and government agricultural stations have entered into a co-operating organization under the leadership of the college of agriculture and forestry of the University of Nanking.

MARRIAGE ADVICE.—

A marriage advice bureau, which is thought to be the first project of this kind in the United States, has been opened at Labor Temple, Fourteenth Street and Second Avenue, New York City. Dr. Abraham Stone and his wife, Dr. Hannah Stone, will be in charge, and they will counsel with those married and about to be married in regard to the basic problems of married life. Such a bureau should teach people how to get married and stay so. There is entirely too many hasty marriages, too lax rules in securing divorce in America, and too little regard for the sanctity and moral obligation of the marriage ties. Jesus was very strict in His interpretation of the marriage relation as taught in the Scriptures.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR JUBILEE.—

Plans for the British Isles' celebration of the jubilee of the World's Christian Endeavor are going forward. At least 10,000,000 members, during these fifty years, have owed their training in Christian service to the Christian Endeavor. The meetings will be held in the Albert Hall on May 23, 24 and 25, in London. As a permanent memorial of the jubilee, there is to be a new headquarters for the movement in London; the fund of $50,000 for this purpose is rapidly approaching completion. They recognize with gratitude that this society is one of the debts which the Church of the British Isles owes to the United States, where, at Portland, Me., on February 2, 1881, Dr. Frances E. Clark formed the first Christian Endeavor Society.

BAER PASSES.—

Dr. John Willis Baer, pioneer Christian Endeavor leader, educator, and banker, died at his home in Pasadena, Calif., February 8th, of heart disease, at seventy years of age. From 1890 to 1900, Dr. Baer served the International Society of Christian Endeavor as general secretary; from 1900 to 1906 he was assistant secretary of home missions of the Presbyterian Church, U. S. A. He became president of Occidental College in 1906, which position he resigned to enter the banking business. In 1919 he was elected as moderator of the Presbyterian General Assembly. His life was a blessing to thousands of young people in the Endeavor and college life, and many of them will mourn his going.

CHURCH UNION IN CHINA.—

The triennial meeting of the General Assembly of the Church of Christ in China met in Canton in December. It was announced that since the last meeting in 1927, the English Church in Shantung and the ten district associations of the United Church of Canada in Szechuan have joined this indiginous Chinese Church. Another strong pronouncement on the imperative need for organic unity of the Churches in China was made and sent to all other Protestant bodies in China. After expressing the conviction that responsibility for administering and directing Christian work should rest upon the Churches, the assembly affirmed "that the services of missionaries are both greatly needed and ardently desired." We wish to go one step further and say that the need for missionaries today is greater than ever before.

TEN BEST BOOKS.—

It is difficult to name the ten best books in any field, but more especially so in the field of religion. Dr. Eislen, of Garrett Seminary, names the following: "The Universe Around Us" and "The Nature of the Physical World," by Jeans; "An Emerging Christian Faith," by Nixon; "Pathways of Certainty," by Brown; "Creative Religious Culture," by Culler; "Jesus and the American Mind," by Luccock; "The Authority of the Bible," by Dood; "Character Through Creative Experience," by Bower; "Our Economic Morality," by Ward, and "The Doctrine of God," by Knudson. I have three of these books and have read others and find that there is some clear, creative, courageous Christian thinking in store for those who read this list, and they are recommended to young preachers as stimulating, uplifting, inspiring.

FOSDICK DEDICATES CHURCH.—

The formal dedication of the Church which has recently been erected by the munificence of John D. Rockefeller, Jr., Riverside, New York, has just been conducted. The pastor preached the dedicatory sermon. While the Church has been opened since early fall, the crowds show no decrease in their attendance, and any stranger wishing to get a seat for the service has to go early or be crowded out. When preachers give people something to attend to when they go to Church, they usually go again. The crying need of this age in the ministry is thorough preparation. You may or may not like Fosdick or his liberalism, but his style of thought fits into the present century and meets the spiritual needs of the present age. Educate the ministry better than the scientists are educated, and then the scientists will hear them, and everybody else. There is no premium on ignorance in the pulpit.

EFFECTIVE MINISTRY.—

"Making Our Ministry Effective," is the general subject announced by the Convocation of Ministers in Illinois, which held its first session a year ago and determined, by unanimous vote, that the convocation should be an annual affair. Over three hundred ministers attended the first session and the attendance this year will be greater. This year the program will follow the same line of thought as last year, except that a part of each day will be given over to group conferences on vital subjects, led by men of authority on the subjects discussed in the conferences. The Church can never prosper under the leadership of an unprepared ministry, but when ministers take their preparation and improvement as seriously as the leaders do in other fields of professional life, the Churches will be well attended and religion will prove itself to be one of the most engaging fields of human interest that is open to intelligent investigation.

INTERNATIONAL COUNCIL.—

The International Council of Religious Education will soon hold its annual session and the Christian leaders will find in it an opportunity for further study and preparation for the great task which challenges their best thought and devotion. It is said that everybody who is at all prominent in religious education will be there. There will be no fewer than twenty-one separate sections, commissions, or conferences, most of which will meet concurrently. Religious education is becoming more and more a highly developed technique and will require as specialized professional training as that of academic education. The Jewish people began the work of religious education. After the return of Ezra and Nehemiah from Babylon, religious education devoted to the strict study of the law of Moses engaged the active attention of the scribes and Pharisees. From time to time since emphasis has been placed on religious education, but in recent years, with the development of the science of education, religious education is receiving a new impulse along scientific lines, but "the little done, the vast undone," applies here as in many other fields of enlightenment.

NOTES-PERSONALS

"The Preacher and His Missionary Message," by Dr. Stephen J. Corey, is, in our judgment, one of the best volumes of a decade on the topic treated. Dr. Corey has not confined his discussion to any single phase of the gospel, but to the gospel message as a whole in its saving power. It is indeed a wonderful book. It is published by the Cokesbury Press, Nashville, Tenn.

Last year the people of the United States did a business of ninety billions of dollars (an inconceivable sum), but there are only eight and one-half billions of actual dollars in existence. Now, the difference between the eight and one-half billions of dollars actually in existence and the ninety billions of dollars not in existence represents the faith and confidence of the people in each other. That is to say, more than ten and one-half times as much business is done solely on faith as is done on fact. Strike down faith and you paralyze business and destroy trade and commerce. The essential feature in business, as in religion, is faith—faith in folks and faith in God.

WINDSOR, VA.

Brethren, isn't it a fact that we are hearing much today about a "new age"? Aren't we being told that we have largely outgrown the Bible? that many things written in the sacred Scriptures are not practical for the "new age"? It seems to me that there is much unhallowed speculation about the sacred person of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and a clamoring for a modernized theology, new truth and a twentieth-century gospel. My honest conviction is that the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ—the gospel of Calvary—is still "the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth"; sufficient for the world's need for all time. It is no more a failure than sunshine is a failure. It needs no revision by mortal man. We should remember that those who have denied the deity of our Redeemer, not one of them has ever been able to explain the source of His wonderful life and marvelous power.

In these "new days" we need a new discovery of Almighty God in the vastness of His unlimited wisdom, power, grace and love, and a new obedience and loyalty to Him. We must re-enthroned the Redeemer—Jesus Christ. We must bring back the King of Glory and restore to Him the glory of His deity. Jesus only can satisfy the immortal soul. He only can regenerate, sanctify and illuminate. He will inspire with new ideals, holy desires, and unselfish and sympathetic helpfulness.

The greatest need of the Church is not more members, but more people growing God-ward. Those who are called to the Christian life must show some likeness to the Holy Christ. Beloved, it should be our constant aim to glorify God, the Creator, and His pure and holy Son, Jesus Christ the Saviour, and we can do it in no better way than by seeking the salvation of lost souls. A high obligation rests upon every Christian to try to bring some one else to Christ. Time is too short for idleness on the part of God's workers in the white harvest field of lost souls. Our daily lives should tell for the divine glory of the sacred Godhead. We need hearts large enough and sincere enough to feel every brother's sorrow, hands strong enough to aid, and words kind enough to inspire the weakest child of our loving Heavenly Father in life's battle. The need of the hour is Jesus in us. Our lives must be Christ inspired and Christ controlled.

E. B. WHITE.

ROSEMONT CHURCH.

Sunday, February 15, 1931, was a great day for the Rosemont Christian Church. It was not only the opening services of the new Church, but the dedicatory services as well. The Sunday School was aglow with a new spirit of enthusiasm as the boys and girls, men and women met at 9:45 A. M., and all were happy, even though all the new chairs and pews had not arrived.

At 11 A. M. the congregation gathered in the main auditorium of the Church, for the opening Church service. There was a spirit of gracious worship from the very first that prevailed over the entire audience, and we were aware that we were not only in the presence of a beautiful building, but that the great Head of the Church was very impressively present in the power of His Spirit. Rev. J. N. Cutchin read from the Word and led in our opening prayer. The choir sang most effectively the anthem, "Spring Blooming in My Heart." Mr. A. C. Dyer sang inspiringly, "The Holy City." The pastor brought a brief message on the subject, "I Love the Church—Why?" The choir led in the singing "There Is a Fountain Filled with Blood," during which six came and accepted Christ as Saviour and united with the Church, and two others united by letter. These were welcomed into the Church.

For the afternoon service at 2:30 the people gathered early. They came from all sections of Tidewater Virginia. The Church was filled, and yet the people continued to come. Many were turned away for lack of room. The service opened with a piano prelude by Mrs. J. F. Morgan, which was followed by an anthem, "Jesus, I My Cross Have Taken," sang beautifully by the choir. Rev. O. D. Poythress sang as I had never heard him sing before, "Open the Gate of the Temple." Bro. J. M. Darden brought a message to the children; Mr. B. F. Mitchel, our Church architect, spoke beautifully, and the audience got a look at and a bow from our contractor, Mr. J. L. Abbit. Dr. L. E. Smith, pastor of Christian Temple, Norfolk, preached a great sermon on the subject, "This Is the House of God." Dr. W. W. Staley conducted the formal dedicatory service, and Rev. J. E. McCauley led the dedicatory prayer, and Rev. Ira S. Harrell, of the Raleigh Heights Baptist Church, pronounced the benediction, and the second service was over.

At 6:30 P. M. the Christian Endeavor Society held a great service, in which the society was dedicated to Christ and the new Church. This was a most unique service, and most helpful.

At 7:30 we were again in the main auditorium for the closing service of the day. Miss Elizabeth Mills rendered the piano prelude to the delight of all; the choir sang the anthem, "Praise the Lord, O Jerusalem"; Mr. A. C. Dyer and Mrs. T. M. Rust sang most helpfully, "O Love that Will Not Let Me Go." Dr. Charles Eldred Shelton preached a splendid sermon on the subject, "My Church." Two more were received and welcomed into the Church while we all sang, "O Happy Day."

We are proud of our new Church. It has meant hard work, much prayer and sacrificial giving. For more than three years we have been struggling, and it is because of the hard work before hand that enabled us to get the Church paid for by the time we entered it. We are tired, but glad and so thankful.

The building committee was as follows: O. F. Smith (chairman), A. L. Guynn, J. R. Morrison, Jr., W. H. Farrow, Dr. L. C. Ferebee, Mrs. O. S. Mills, Mrs. E. H. Cuthrell, H. R. Morrison, and H. L. Bondurant. The whole Church is grateful to this committee for its fine work, and on behalf of the Church we say to them we thank you; also for every thing that any one has done to help us in this building program we are so grateful.

J. F. MORGAN.

METHODS CORNER

BY REV. ELISHA A. KING, D. D.
Miami Beach, Fla.

One of the most valuable efforts put forth for the local Church is the "Friendly Visitation Day." Churches are often asking for money, or for something that has money at the end of it. For this reason, it is fine to do something that is not, at least immediately, a bid for money. It surprises the neighbors! It gives something delightful for members of the congregation to do. It creates sociability and widens acquaintance. And, best of all, it does the Church a world of good. Furthermore, it relieves the pastor of the Church from the sole responsibility of calling.

It is easy to do. It can be done by a committee, or by the woman's society, the men's club, or whatever society can get at it quickest and do it most efficiently. I might suggest, from ample experience, that the date should be set at least a month in advance. The pastor is the logical one to make up the calling list, though the various societies in the Church could add many names. An examination of the Sunday School record cards would yield many names. What one needs is names, names, names! However, it is not wise to put on this list names of people known to favor some other Church. When the names and addresses are selected, the next important thing is to select teams of two each who will call. Either the supervising committee (with the pastor) or the pastor alone should designate the personnel of the teams and assign the names. Of course, the names should be put on cards. (In some Churches it might be well to let the teams select their own cards.) I believe, however, it is better to have the pastor decide, because this visitation is for the purpose of making new contacts, and if left to voluntary choice, people will select friends or acquaintances to visit.

The visitors should have something to take with them when they call. An attractive folder could be printed, telling something about the name of the Church, its location, the name of pastor, residence and phone number. Perhaps it might state something of what the Church stands for religiously. By all means, it should give the hours of all services. Something of this kind would help to introduce the visitors. In case you were to have a Mothers' Day service, the visitors could focus on that and invite people to attend it.

Just one more thing about these calls. There should be a blank registration card, and where the people are willing, the visitors might record the names of those who make up the family, their Church relations, and perhaps the business of the father or members of the family. No attempt should be made to do this unless the people are willing. In this way, many new families are found, changed addresses learned, and a general spirit of friendliness shed abroad.

NOTICE.

At the last session of the Virginia Valley Central Conference, action was taken authorizing the holding of a mid-year session of conference, Bethlehem Church to be the place of meeting, and time left with the executive committee. The committee has decided on Saturday, March 10th, as the time, Conference to be called to order at 10 A. M.

Churches are urged to send at least two delegates, and as many more as they can. Dinner will be served by the Ladies' Aid Society of the Church at a reasonable price. Those expecting to attend will please notify Miss Ella Pickering, Broadway, Va., as soon as convenient. This will be of great help to the ladies in planning the meal.

CONGREGATIONAL NEWS

REV. E. C. GILLETTE, Editor; REV. F. P. ENSMINGER, and REV. M. J. SWEET, Associates.

JUPITER, FLA.: Rev. Frederick Held and his workers have recently organized a junior Christian Endeavor Society with twenty-one members. Mr. Held declares that he never was so happy and so hopeful.

HOLLY HILL, FLA.: Dr. Edgar S. Rothrock is pastor of this Church and has been afflicted with a serious throat trouble, and Dr. John Richmond and Superintendent Gillette have supplied for him on recent Sundays.

C. E. ANNIVERSARY: In connection with the Christian Endeavor anniversary, it was brought out that the first Christian Endeavor Society in the State of Florida was organized in the Union Congregational Church of Jacksonville. Miss Martha Race, of that Church, was secretary of the State union soon after its organization.

DR. C. T. ERICKSON, formerly American Board missionary to Albania, and now director of the Albania American School of Agriculture, has been visiting in Winter Park, where he spoke at the Congregational Church on Sunday evening, February 8th. Dr. Erickson has had a remarkably interesting missionary experience and a service of immeasurable value to that interesting country.

A CHRISTIAN-CONGREGATIONALIST is president of the Men's Club of Pilgrim Church, Chattanooga, and is active in the Rotary Club and other civic organizations. He is Mr. Emerson P. Poste, whose father was an influential Christian Church pastor and educator. The Men's Club programs follow dinners and are attended by from thirty to forty men, who are addressed by notable speakers.

ORMOND, FLA.: This Church has recently added to its Sunday School and social building a well-equipped kitchen. A largely attended supper marked its first use. Superintendent Edwin C. Gillette was the speaker on this occasion. The Sunday School of this Church is well organized and has a splendidly equipped Sunday School building, with individual class-rooms for all classes. The pastor of this Church is Rev. Geo. D. Owen.

JACKSONVILLE, FLA.: Union Church has served Sunday dinners on recent Sundays for the families of unemployed or families who were in distress in the city. While not undertaking to feed large numbers, those that were fed were particularly needy. In one instance, the funds for the dinner were provided by a donor who gave the dinner instead of giving flowers for the Church in memory of a deceased member of his family. This Church has a remarkable record and tradition for charity in times of distress. The pastor of this Church is Dr. H. Samuel Fritsch.

MIAMI BEACH, FLA.: The Community Church at Miami Beach celebrated the tenth anniversary of the Church on February 8th. The Church calendar carried a picture of Dr. Luman H. Royce and a paragraph honoring him as the organizer of the Church. During the years the Church has made a remarkable record, having built a beautiful Church and parsonage and paid off all indebtedness, even to the grant from the Building Society. The pastor, Dr. Elisha A. King, has led this Church ever since it was organized by Dr. Royce. Dr. King has recently been elected president of the newly organized Miami Beach Welfare Federation, and is also a member of the Dade County Welfare Board.

CHATTANOOGA, TENN.: On February 1, Dr. C. Rexford Raymond celebrated the fourth anniversary of his pastorate with this Church. His pastorate has been a notable one in the record of this Church. The total growth in membership during that period was 159, a net increase of 133, raising the membership from 173 on February 1, 1927, to 306. During these years the Church has given for missions on the apportionment $2,921, and for all benevolences $4,311, and for local expenses $33,574. Dr. Raymond has not only been a successful pastor of this Church, but a real leader in the Southeastern fellowship.

CONFERENCE OF CAROLINAS will be held May 5, 6, 7, this year. The meeting-place will be at Burlington, with the Christian Church, or with the United Church, Raleigh. Definite announcement will come later. This meeting will be a most significant one, in that a proposition to unite Christian and Congregational Churches into a united State conference will be considered. At least eighteen representatives from Christian Churches have already been appointed. Dr. John Brittan Clark, moderator of the Congregational Conference of the Carolinas, is preparing an overture to be sent to the Christian bodies, asking them to meet with power to act at this meeting. All Christian Churches may send delegates if they so desire.

ATLANTA UNITED: The pastor-at-large, Rev. Milo J. Sweet, dropped in on a mid-week meeting of this "big city" Church recently and found a most cordial welcome. A fine group of splendid people, with a happy pastor. Superlatives were exhausted in their praise of the sermons their pastor is giving them these winter Sundays. Large plans are being made for their ministry to Atlanta, and it looks as though the harvest will be abundant. Miss Brackin, borrowed from Alabama for a season, has just completed an extensive survey which has resulted in furnishing the pastor with certain facts which will prove to be helpful in the days to come. The ladies of the Church volunteered to furnish papers and magazines to Miss Campbell for her work in South Georgia. This is co-operation which marks a going Church.

EASTER FELLOWSHIP SERVICE at Star, March 29th. Under the direction of Rev. J. O. Atkinson, D. D., the second fellowship meeting of the five Christian and five Congregational Churches in and near Star, N. C., is being prepared for March 29th, a fifth Sunday. This, too, is a straw. It is indicative of the ability to meet "the ultimate test" of the union of the two denominations. More and more, as Christian and Congregational Churches in contiguous territory fellowship together, the union will become effective in splendid co-operation. The world is looking to us to see whether or not we can stand the test. Here at Star is a laboratory of the spirit of union, the most outstanding in the Carolinas. These fellowship meetings will help the people of both denominations to become acquainted with each other. And when they know each other well, they will know just how to serve their community best.

DR. CADMAN IN FLORIDA.

Dr. S. Parkes Cadman, pastor of the Central Congregational Church, Brooklyn, N. Y., will deliver a series of addresses at the University of Florida in connection with the annual observance of "Religious Emphasis Week." His addresses will be especially for students and members of the university, but the public in general is invited. Several of his addresses will be broadcast over WRUF. The ministers of the State are especially invited to visit the State university and listen to the addresses of Dr. Cadman on Monday and Tuesday, March 2-3. At special gatherings with the ministers there will be discussion of their individual problems.

NEW CHAPEL FOR ROLLINS.

President Holt has announced that funds sufficient to build a new chapel at Rollins College this year have been provided by Mrs. George E. Warren, of Boston, and her sister, Mrs. Homer D. Gage, of Worcester, Mass. The chapel is to be named in memory of Francis B. Knowles, father of the donors and himself an early benefactor of the college. It will supplant the present "Knowles Hall" which was given in 1911 by the widow of Mr. Knowles. Three years ago Dr. Holt announced that Mrs. Warren and Mrs. Gage had given $100,000 with which to build a chapel, but this was found to be inadequate for a building that would meet the standards of the whole architectural plan for the college.

The chapel will be designed by Ralph Adams Cram, one of the best-known Church architects in America. It will be Spanish in style, of the fifteenth century parish-house type, with a beautiful tower. This will be the fourth building in the new architectural plan, all given during the last eighteen months. Mrs. Warren also gave Rollins last year $35,000 toward the endowment.

WORSHIP.

BY REV. WALTER METCALF,
Pastor First Congregational Church, Tampa Fla.

(Written at the Congregational Ministers' Convocation, Daytona Beach, Fla.)

All nature worships!
Even the sea oat,
Bathed in silvery spray,
Lowly kneels
Before God's sunrise altar
To receive
The early kiss of dawn.

Doth not the fragrant rose
Feel in its soul
The breath of life divine?
And,
In expression of the highest,
Blossom red . . .
Like Calvary?

And man—
The image of his Maker;
Doth he not feel
The vital stirrings
Of life's all-conscious thought?
Bound by his yesterdays,
And ever-present now,
Doth he not know
The energizing urge
Of God's eternal morrow?

To sip the nectar out of yesterday:
To really live our present
Regally,
Without consuming fear;
And consciously
To feel
The God Transcendent,
Yet immanently near.

Is not this,
To longing souls,
True worship—
Royal and supreme?

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to commune or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

SOME SUNSHINE.

(Editorial Correspondence.)

St. Petersburg, Fla., Feb. 21, 1931.

The State highways, thronged with automobiles, and the railway trains crowded with passengers are pouring their thousands of health-seekers and sunshine lovers into Florida every day now. People have the "flu," and the "grip," and "bad colds" largely because they are housed up in winter or go from steam-heated or over-warmed offices out into the shivering cold. So thousands of people come to Florida, especially in February, the peak of the cold winter, to avoid coal bills and doctor's charges. One "tourist" from the far North told this scribe recently that he could live in Florida the three coldest winter months—December, January and February—on what it cost him to heat and keep comfortable the house in which he lived back home. "Why shouldn't I come to Florida and live out in the open sunshine where our Creator furnishes the natural heat, and throws in good health besides?" So thousands leave their houses to the cold and come where sunshine consumes disease germs and gives warmth and good cheer at the same time.

Two days ago a good friend from Pennsylvania invited me for a ride out to the Gulf and along the beach. After half-hour we were looking on the green waters of the Gulf of Mexico glimmering gloriously in the sunshine, and the bathers were having their afternoon plunge and dry-out on the warm, sandy beach. For miles the white sands gleamed in the distance, the balmy breezes blew in from the Gulf, and the far-reaching, placid waters, broken only by the surge of the ebbing or flooding tide, told a story of God's wisdom and wonders in providing for the needs, as well as the pleasurable pursuits, of man. God has done His best to make ours a bountiful and a beatific world, and through it to reveal His majesty and His goodness that we might be humble before Him and grateful for His rich provisions for our eye and heart as well as for our body and mind.

Today we drove out forty miles to the city of Tarpon Springs, made famous as being "the largest sponge exchange" in America. The city has a large Greek colony, who do most of the diving for the sponges, and preparing their "catch" for the market. These divers go down as deep as seventy-five to 150 feet under the water to "fish out" the sponges with hand. They stay down from twenty to thirty minutes, having on diving suits, and frequently bring up or send up large catches as a result of one dive. These divers sold, through the city exchange, in 1927, $886,381 worth of sponges; in 1928, $729,676 worth, and in 1929, $692,259 worth, or $2,308,316 for the three years. The same boats that carry out divers also carry tourists and other fishermen, and from this source bring in an additional $250,000 a year to the industry—over a million dollars a year revenue in this small town, and mostly by the Greek colony in the town. Sponges grow quite rapidly, and grounds fished over one year may be fished with equal profit the next year. Sponges go out from here to all parts of the world. Grapefruit and oranges and sunshine in winter are not the only assets of Florida.

Yesterday we drove out to a "bird hatchery," where they were hatching, raising and sending to all parts of the country "canary birds." The beautiful little "yellows" sell at $10.00 each, though mixed colors and poor singers sell for one-fourth that sum, or less. So on, on the earth, under the waters, and out of the air come blessings and benefits to serve and enrich man. When God made the earth He told man to subdue and have dominion, and man has come very near to obeying that command.

I was talking to a man yesterday who three years ago was "down, out, and done for," so far as health was concerned. He came out of a frigid North with all his rheumatism and aches and pains to try to spend his last days of suffering in a comfortable climate, and so try to face impending death with as much composure and complacency as possible. Well, he didn't die. Now he looks as well and healthy and healthful as any man I have seen here. He says the sunshine and God's great open did it all for him. He is an apostle of sunshine. Surely God is good to all His creatures, and that which man most needs God made in infinite abundance—sunshine. Whether in Florida or in Timbaktu, each one should try to get his share of sunshine. J. CHURCH ORGANIZATION.

In this day of organizations, the Church, without close and logical organization, will suffer loss and decline. The day for personal domination has passed away. God works through organizations. The heavens are organized. The earth is organized. Man is organized. The body is one, and hath many members; and all the members of that one body being many, are one body. Society is organized. We are members one of another. God works through organizations, and the Church can work successfully in no other way. Organization is not a matter of opinion or choice, but a necessity. "The children of this world are wiser in their generation than the children of light" (Acts 16:8). That is, the people of this world are wiser for their generation, for their purposes, than the people of God for their purposes. The Church can learn from the world and make worldly wisdom honor God. Wisdom can be converted as well as sinners.

The Christian Church can be congratulated upon many of its original conceptions and the introduction of new ideas—for example, religious newspapers, co-education—but she has been slow in organization for solidarity and effective service, and numerical growth. People cannot be held together over large areas without sub-organizations closely related to the main organization. The United States can function only through States. Cohesion is essential to efficient co-operation, and this can be accomplished through closely and wisely organized groups.

The Southern Christian Convention cannot guide the whole membership except through annual Conferences. The Convention can speak to Conferences, the Conferences to the Churches, and the Churches to the people. The key-man between these related organizations is the pastor. He must not only know, but feel, his responsibility. The Convention is composed of representatives from the Conferences representing the Churches and people. Convention calls should be heeded as obligations self-imposed upon the pastors and members of the Church, for this relation implies promises made to support the policies and institutions of the Church. Calls for the support of missions, THE CHRISTIAN SUN, the Orphanage, and Elon College are obligations binding upon all the ministers and members of the Southern Christian Convention.

The Christian Church has accomplished great things for the kingdom by suggestion, example, influence; but the time has come for self-development for greater kingdom service. No doubt, her liberal position toward education, woman, private interpretation, and unity have led others to think and act more fraternally; but the Christian Church needs closer organization to make her position more vital and potent in the thought and conduct of the Christian world. KEEPING THE SABBATH.

A day of rest and worship is essential in both the Jewish and Christian religions. With the Jews, the original Sabbath, or the seventh day, was set apart for this cause. With the Christians, the Lord's Day, or first day of the week, is the one set apart. The first day of the week, or Sunday, was adopted by the Christians in honor of the day of the resurrection of our Lord. Since that is true, and was approved by our Lord, we, as Christians, ought to keep that day and use it for the cause and purpose for which it was set apart.

The Jewish and Christian religions are so closely allied with the Sabbath and Sunday that when you take away or desecrate the holy day, you take away the heart of the religion. A time and place for regular worship is essential in the life of every devout soul. The Sabbath appointed and adopted are the workings of the Divine Being. God has appointed a time and place for His children to meet and worship Him. If the human races destroy that sacred day, either by wilful neglect or by carelessness, its religion is doomed. There must be a day of recognizing God's power over the destinies of mankind. He has said in His word, "Remember the Sabbath Day to keep it holy." So long as the Jews did that, they never forgot God, they maintained their national and religious independence and prospered as a nation. But when they failed to keep the Sabbath, they soon forgot God, went away after idols, failed in their religions, and lost their national independence. They were carried away into captivity time and time again. They were usually carried away because they failed to keep God's law. The book of lamentations and many of the psalms were written while the children of Israel were in captivity. According to the testimony of the sacred writers, they forsook the command of God in not remembering the Sabbath Day and worshiping God at the appointed time and place. In every instance where the Jews were taken into captivity, there was a season of neglect on their part prior to their going.

Has not the Christian religion been subjected to similar experiences? Does it not face some trying ordeals just now? It is a known fact that wherever we have an open Sunday, the morals are low. In Spain, Mexico, and other countries, the Christian Church was founded long before this country was discovered. But the Lord's Day is made a day of amusements, and, as a result, disorder reigns. In the cities of America where they have a wide open Sunday, we have the greater portion of the crimes of this country. If the nation as a whole ever gets to the place where it neglects that day as a day of rest and worship, then it is just as sure to fall, as the Jewish nation did. We will do well to ask the same question here that Jeremiah asked, "Is it nothing to you all, ye that pass by?" Is it nothing to you, Christian friend, that the day the Lord has appointed is being attacked by the evil forces? It is up to the devout in soul to see to it that His day is kept holy.

HINES CHAPEL.

Hines Chapel, Guilford County, N. C., Rev. J. L. Neese, pastor is one of our splendid rural Churches, ripe with years and experience, but is still vigorous and progressive. Recently remodeled and improved by removal of the old tower and the addition of a Sunday School room, which room, by opening folding-doors, becomes a part of the main auditorium. The building has been recovered with heavy asphalt shingles, and cement steps have taken the place of the worn wooden ones. The cost of the improvement was $900, all of which was paid as bills came due. There are Sunday School rooms across the entire rear of the Church, one entrance to which is shown on the above cut. One of our best and most active rural Sunday Schools is the hope and promise of this prosperous and progressive congregation.

Rev. J. L. Neese, Greensboro, is not only the preacher, but a real pastor to this people. THE SUN editor worshiped recently with this congregation when the additions were completed and the Church opened for service.

FILLING THE AIR WITH RELIGION.

The largest single enterprise on the air today is religious broadcasting under Protestant leadership. That will be news to many people, but it is announced by the joint radio commission representing the Federal Council of Churches and the Greater New York Federation of Churches, which, we read in the New York Sun, met recently with the National Broadcasting Company and elected Dr. John W. Langdale, book editor of the Methodist Episcopal Church, as its new chairman.

Approximately $100,000 annually is reported necessary to maintain programs worthy of national reception, the facilities, operating and wire charges, valued commercially at $1,000,000, being furnished free of charge by the National Broadcasting Company.

Protestant services, exclusive of the contribution of the National Broadcasting Company, we are informed, cost last year $84,853.44, this total including a combined program expense of $67,247.23 for providing musical artists of the highest type, and $17,606.21 for the administration of the national religious radio department.—Literary Digest.

"THE DOUBLE CURE."

By Rev. H. V. Cox.

I.

For what saith the Scriptures (Rom 4:3)? It is not the writer's intention to try to answer that question or to convey the thought that he is able to tell all that the Scriptures say and teach. But I trust, by the help of the Spirit, to lift out of them that the "double cure" is essential and vital to our salvation, and it is something that cannot be dispensed with if we are to finish our course successfully and have that "abundant entrance in."

First, notice that our Lord tells us (John 5:39) "Search the Scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life; and they are they which testify of (Jesus) me." That is what our Lord said to do with the Scriptures. And again He says (John 10:35) "The Scriptures cannot be broken." Then the psalmist sang out of his heart, "For ever, O Lord, Thy word is settled in heaven." This leaves the Word absolutely unchangeable by man, no matter how much he tries to change it to suit his own notion. So the only wise thing he can do is to conform his life to its teaching and requirements. But the natural man cannot do this; he must be born again before he is eligible to be taught spiritual things. For the apostle Paul tells us that "The carnal mind is enmity against God; for it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be." "But as many as receive Him (Jesus), to them gave He power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on His name." And again, "Because ye are sons, God hath sent forth the Spirit of His Son into your hearts, crying, Abba, Father."

This is the experience of one who was born "not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God." This excludes all who are trying to go to heaven on hand-shaking, card-signing, or just "believe" (without really repenting of their sins), and this "decision day" stuff which is filling the Church militant with worldliness today. There is a great difference between a child's being born into a family and its being adopted into it. It was said of a little girl who had been adopted into a family, that one day she ran, sobbing, to her mother, saying, "Mamma, am I really your little girl?" The mother assured her that she was truly a member of the family, and inquired, "Why do you ask such a question?" The little girl replied, "My sisters have been telling me that I am not truly your little girl, but that I was 'dopted; that Daddy found me on the doorstep, and you took me in and 'dopted me." The mother continued to comfort the little child, and finally the little one said, "Mamma, was I really born to you?"

It is a sad, deplorable fact that thousands have been and are being taken into the organized Church in this modern age without having been scripturally born again. They are only "dopted" into the Church family, and as a result do not understand spiritual things, having no real heart experience. Their faith is just standing in the "wisdom of men, and not in the power of God."

But after having been born from above, we need to study to show ourselves approved of God, for "all Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness; that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works." We certainly need all the help we can get, and especially in this age of corruption that seems to be sweeping through this nation both politically and religiously, to say nothing about the unbelief, skepticism, infidelity that is creeping into the organized Church on every hand and making it a place of entertainment instead of a house of prayer. Just as Jezebel brought idolatry into Israel, so the modern Church weds Christian doctrine to pagan ceremonies. And some of their ministers have strayed so far from the straight and narrow way that they attend the moving-picture shows and indulge in all sorts of athletic games and are recommending that their brother-ministers do likewise. The modern Church is thus going forward with the slogan, "Onward, Christian Soldiers." They are going forward, all right, but what to? But that doesn't sound like the apostle Paul, who said, "I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus." The child of God is commanded to abstain from all appearance of evil. The writer has personal knowledge of ministers, who once preached against the above-mentioned worldliness, including needless ornaments, radios, swimming-pools, and such like. And later these sins became so mild that they indulged in them.

Paul foresaw that the Church would be infested with ministers of this class, when he wrote, "For we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places." Doesn't that sound like the need to "be ye holy, for I am holy," to be able to stand against such things as Paul describes in this verse? For he tells us that where we look for angels we will find devils standing where they ought not to be. But the baptism of the Holy Ghost, which constitutes the "double cure" will enable one to distinguish between sheep and wolves. For as our Lord tells us, "My sheep know my voice and a stranger they will not follow for they know not the voice of a stranger."

Enoch also was privileged to view this condition that the Church militant is being infested with, and prophesied, "Behold, the Lord cometh with ten thousand of His saints to execute judgment upon all and to convince all that are ungodly among them of all their ungodly deeds which they have ungodly committed, and of all their hard speeches which ungodly sinners have spoken against him." Every sinful act of man is against God. David realized this fact when he caused Uriah to be killed in order that he might take his wife (Bath-sheba) for his wife. And said, "Against thee, thee only, have I sinner, and done this evil in Thy sight." But wherein David repented of his sins and got right with the Lord again, most of the backsliders and unbelieving Church members cover up their sin and hide behind the fig bushes in society and say it is impossible to live without sin.

"But what saith the Scriptures?" "We know that whosoever is born of God sinneth not; but he that is begotten of God keepeth himself, and that wicked one toucheth him not." But Jude goes on farther and classifies the so-called sinning Christian: "These are murmurers, complainers, walking after their own lusts; and their mouth speaketh great swelling words, having men's per-

SUFFOLK LETTER.

There is loss and gain in the Church as well as in business. This is revealed in the modern relation of the Sunday School to the Church. There is a growing tendency for men, women and children to attend Sunday School, then return to their homes, or elsewhere, and neglect Church attendance. Organized adult classes, so far as surveys reveal facts, do not furnish more than 25 per cent of their attendance at Church, though most of them are members of the Church. Many children are sent to Sunday School and return home while parents remain at home during Sunday School, and then go to Church. This is discouraging to pastors and regular attendants at the preaching services of the Church.

The question has arisen in many anxious minds whether, if this practice continues, Sunday School will be a real benefit to the Church or the preaching of the gospel a real help to those who attend Sunday School and absent themselves from the Church. New questions arise as human society moves forward in education and prosperity. How to overcome this seeming lack of interest in the gospel and the Church is a problem that demands solution. It is plain that the Church is the first in its historic organization and development. There would be no Sunday School but for the Church. There would be no place, no leaders, no literature, not even a Bible, but for the Church. It is like children neglecting their parents when their parents have provided for their development and their place in life.

This condition is not so serious in the country as in the city. In the country the family all go to Sunday School and all remain for the public worship in the Church. Conditions make this difference. They all ride to Church and must all ride back together, as part of them will have to walk. That makes it a delight to preach to a country congregation. Adults, young people and children are all together in the pews. The congregation seems like one big family. That is as it should be. The Bible is for all ages, and all conditions. Religion is at its best when it teaches all minds and all hearts as they sit together in one group. Singing is then at its best, prayer is at its best, preaching is at its best. The sermon must be learned enough to meet the learned, and simple enough to be understood by the child. If the present tendency keeps on in the city, the sermon will be a one-sided deliverance. Any preacher with experience knows that it requires better preparation to preach to a country congregation than to a city congregation. There is a greater variety in the audience and those who think the sermon over more when they go home. Country custom should be kept up in the city.

ELON LETTER.

Last week in the Elon Letter we considered the changes that have taken place in the institutional organization of our life. Parallel with these changes are the changes in the concept of man, and also the concept of God, which are even more fundamental than institutional changes and which affect life in a very decided way. We shall consider these in this way.

It is a long story to describe the transformation that has taken place as respects man's relationships to man. Every transformation which has touched this fundamental concept of our life's relationships has expressed itself likewise in the institutions and organizations that minister to man's life. Herein is a fruitful field of study, with much profit and understanding of human progress. For our purpose at this time it is only necessary to say that in the beginning man conceived of his relationship to his brother-man in terms of vengeance. If his brother-man had done him an injury, it was his privilege to do him a greater injury. The times were terrible in those days for humanity, and in that era of beastly struggle the wonder is that human life was able to survive at all. Later we find the law-giver with his demand for justice in social relationships, and then as the heart of man was touched by human weakness and frailty there arose the prophet with his plea for mercy as tempering justice. Finally there appeared the Master Teacher, the God-like Christ, who taught love as the fulfillment of the ideals of men's relationships to one another, love grounded in forgiveness and expressing itself in sacrifice. It was not enough for him to forgive a man once or even seven times, but an unlimited number of times. It was not enough for him to do unto others as he would that they should do unto him, nor to love one's neighbor as one's self. He could be satisfied only through the complete giving and sacrifice of Himself in love for His fellows. That is the hopeful, prophetic transformation in social relationship toward which the human race must ever look with wistful expectation, and in the realization of that ideal the kingdom of God will have become real and actual in the world.

Men's conception of God has conditioned their concept of man and expressed itself in the institutions and civilizations of life. The most determinative force in individual and in social living is the view that men entertain as to God. When men conceived of Him as bent on vengeance, they themselves practiced vengeance with reference to one another, and the institutions of their life were organized in the same terms. When they later conceived of Him as just and impartial, they themselves desired to be just to one another, and their institutions reflected that aspiration. When they later conceived of Him as merciful, they themselves became charitable and brotherly in their attitudes toward one another and expressed this brotherliness and fraternal spirit in the organized institutions of their life. In our day, when men conceive of God as Christ-like, as loving in His attitudes toward His spiritual offspring, as anxiously concerned for the growth and development and happiness of their life, we find ourselves anxious likewise to express this same affection in our relationships with our brother-men and to organize it into the institutions that minister to our life. We cannot conceive that there should be any finer revelation of God than that which we have in Jesus Christ, but we do recognize that the Holy Spirit is able to interpret to us in a larger way from day to day the meaning, the inner meaning of this concept of God, and we believe, too, that the Holy Spirit is leading us constantly into more becoming applications of this concept of life as expressed by God's attitude toward men in our personal and institutional life.

PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE LETTER.

PROGRAM FOR CHRISTIAN CIVILIZATION.

Our educational program is largely religious. Never before has the call to duty and devotion been quite so strong to Protestant America as today. To maintain the Christian civilization as we know it in America is going to be a tremendous strain upon the moral stamina of the next generation. American youth needs more specific training than general education, more good example than dogmatic precept, more Christ-like moral stability than mere intellectual sharpness, and greater power for work and service than ability to avoid them.

Education must be reduced to practice through training for work and service; training must be surcharged with the ideals of Christian practice, to the end that the individual and his service shall aid and not hinder society. There must be a more practical education for the needs of the present and for future generations, and both education and training must be predicated upon an applied Christianity by the trained individual himself.

The first emphasis in the education of young people should be in the development of character, to the end of attaining stability, dependability, and habits of right living. They should also receive training which will fit them to earn a living through production and service, giving them the possibility of maintaining their independence in modern society. Culture should produce refinement in speech and action, thus fitting farmers, doctors, merchants, mechanics, lawyers, homemakers, judges, nurses, bankers, stenographers, ministers, teachers, journalists, engineers, and the like to be peers in their associations with one another.

Every Christian Church should stand back of her educational institutions, for the Church as a whole is an educational institution and should be fundamentally recognized as such, and the Church will not function rightly nor will human society be right until she does. The Church and the schools are more closely related than are recognized to be in American society at the present day. We need not go to the extreme of making the Church absorb the school or the school the Church, as that is opposed to the principle of the division of labor in social evolution, which holds for institutions as well as individuals. There can be and should be the closest co-operation between the school and the Church. The Church has, in a sense, the most important education of all to carry out for our youth—the education in the higher social values, in moral and religious ideals.

If the Church is to create a Christian world, it must control in larger measure public opinion, which is the ruling force of our time and the real sovereign of democracy. But to do this the whole method and machinery of the Christian Church must be modernized. The Church must make a larger use of scientific, sociological and psychological knowledge of every sort through her colleges. The Church must be profoundly interested in promoting and diffusing social and religious knowledge. The world is perishing for lack of knowledge of the way in which human beings should live together. The Christian movement will develop its full power only when it allies itself with social science and when it seeks and diffuses the fullest scientific knowledge of social conditions.

A GOOD BEGINNING.

The first four words of the Book, "In the beginning God (Gen. 1:1), have been revolving in my mind for some time, especially since January 1, 1931. Perhaps many others have associated the same words with the "beginning" of the new year, for they embody a great central thought applicable to place as well as time. Once upon a time, this scribe knew of a woman, Mrs. A, who was a pronounced chronic grumbler. She made perpetual complaint against something or some person; but especially was this true of Mrs. A towards Mrs. B. She hated Mrs. B because she said that Mrs. B told so many scandalous falsehoods on her, and no matter who visited her, especially her pastor or any other preacher, in answer to the inquiry, "How are you, Mrs. A?" her reply was, "Oh, I'm all down and out because Mrs. B has told another scandalous falsehood on me."

The preacher tried to console Mrs. A by telling her that Mrs. B or any one couldn't harm her very much by a falsehood; that it was only a scandalous truth, upon proof, that could ultimately injure one. So Mrs. A took the preacher's reply as suggestion of a trial and court procedure. Without giving the detailed legal course that was pursued when on trial before the court, the judge very courteously asked Mrs. A, the plaintiff, to state her grievance against Mrs. B. All agitated, she said, "Oh, where shall I begin? where shall I begin?" Some one knowing Mrs. A and her pedigree said humorously, "Woman, begin with Adam"; another said, "No, begin with Eve"; another said, "No, begin with the serpent." After a pause, the judge said, "No, let us begin with God." So they did, and the result was the plaintiff, Mrs. A, lost out, and the defendant, Mrs. B, was exonerated. Now, such has been, and is, and will be true in the final victory for those who begin and continue with Him who said, "I am Alpha and Omega—the beginning and the end."

"In the beginning God," and also the ending God. The first and the last (Rev. 22:12). Not the beginning and ending of God, but all things else, for He is without limitation. Such used to confuse me, because I misread into the Word, "In the beginning of God." Here our little finite mind can easily and foolishly plunge into unthinkable depths (John 11:7-8; 1 Cor. 1:21).

"In the beginning God." In the beginning of what? Not God, but of everything else, except sin. That began with Satan, but in God's presence. In the beginning, all things were made by Him, and without Him was not any thing made that was made (John 1:3). Such is all-inclusive and exclusive. Shall we, as finite beings, try to think of and about Him who is infinite in His being and attributes, viz: He that cometh to God must believe that He is (Heb. 11:3). Such is the place of beginning. There is a text that reads, "Before the world was, I am." The beginning of all worlds and all things. Ages planned and worlds framed by His word (Heb. 11:3). How sublime the Bible! The book of Genesis is the book of beginnings.

Can we conceive of a time, perhaps billions of ages ago, when God, in His Holy Trinity, said, let us make a universe and all that is included and implied by the word universe? Was there ever a time when nothing existed, nothing lived and moved in infinite space but a self-existing "I am"? Yes, by faith—not by intellectual reasoning—we may understand that the worlds were framed by the Word of God; that things which were seen were not made of things which do appear (Heb. 11:3).

Yes, everything began with God. How suggestive and worthy of our thinking and meditation! This writer loves to think about these things. The Lord knoweth our thoughts, even afar off (Psa. 94:11, 139:2). No wonder the good evangelist, Dwight L. Moody, when meeting good and great men and women, was often heard to say, "Give me a good and great thought." And Queen Elizabeth said in her last moments before her exit into eternity, "Oh, give me a great thought to die with." But God in the beginning and in the ending is far better!

Finally, brethren, "Whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good or correct report, if there be any virtue, any help, and if there be any praise, think on these things" (Phil. 4:8). For "as we think in our hearts, so are we." Some of us, no doubt, think of making new resolutions between the exit of the closing year and entering the portal of the new. And if so, this writer knows of no thought better than the one suggested by the first four words in the Book, beginning with God.—The Thinking of B. N. (Back Number).

"THE MOURNER'S BENCH."

There is an old term that ought to be restored. Some of our younger people today have never heard it used only in a spirit of contempt. The time was when men held eagerly "to the mourners' bench." This recalls the old-time Church and the old-time camp meeting, the rural schoolhouse, with its improvised bench in the front where hundreds, if not thousands, of men who helped make the Methodist Episcopal Church up to the present generation, found their way into the kingdom of heaven. Personally we found Christ at a bench at a camp meeting. "The mourners' bench!" How significant! Yes, and today how largely repulsive! Think of a man mourning about his sins, or over his spiritual condition! What substitute have we made for being sorry for our transgressions? It would be a good thing if the Church would "go into mourning" for the present state in which she now finds herself. If some one could find a bench and invite the Church to come again, in sackcloth and ashes; yes, in a mourning spirit, in a repentant attitude, perhaps a new spirit would come in upon us. We have enough grouching over and complaining of a depressed situation. In reality, we need to mourn over our sins of omission; not the faithful who have kept true during the past months, but those who have forgotten and grown cold; those who have neglected the means of grace; those who have forgotten the Holy Communion; those who have permitted themselves to become indifferent; those who have sold themselves to the spirit of secularism; those who have become victims of this world. There is going to have to be "mourning" on the part of many people who have forgotten God in the past few years if they ever get on the road to heaven again.—Western Christian Advocate.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Secretary.

A PRAYER.

Father of mercy, cleanse and keep Thine own from sin. Forgive, and bring us to tread only Jesus' path of perfect love and conscious duty. Make us doers whose work shall stand. As we bridge the expanse of time for eternity, show us that technical understanding with intensest application to directed effort, unless it produce the power to endure and to make returns in service, is resource but wasted. Teach us the value both of active endeavor and passive strength. Material structures admit of no slack nor slight. Grant us, Father, insight, eagerness, to build as well the "stately mansions" of the soul. In Jesus' name we ask it. Amen. L.

STEWARDSHIP AND THE CHURCH.

I.

MEMBERSHIP AND STEWARDSHIP.

Although coming into the Church may be with some no more than a religious gesture, both early example and accepted Christian ethics refuse to sanction such assumption. At the preaching of Peter, in the instance of the three thousand, there was no delusion or pretense, nor today does constituted Christianity doubt the sincerity or depreciate the value of voluntary religious response en masse. However, it is to be deplored that, in much of modern usage, wheedling and methods of indirectness dishonoring to the Holy Spirit, employed to induce persons to offer for Church membership, constitute cause for discriminating judgments. It is providential that these judgments do not, and cannot, affect the actuality of salvation. In the matter of being saved, finality now is as it was when Peter preached—of and by the Holy Spirit. And the Holy Spirit's work of grace upon the heart, only God discerns and appraises. He knows both the wheat and the tares, and He seals and adds to His Church those that are saved.

Whatever types prevail in its realm, evangelism—the indispensable, vital, first step in kingdom procedure—is the active influence that achieves Church membership. But Church membership accomplished, even when entered upon by reason of genuine change of heart, in itself is a cake in process, properly begun, containing all requisite ingredients, headed for perfection, but only half done; in a sense, a cake not turned, therefore unpossessed of the highest nutritive or productive value. To make it self-enriching and efficacious, stewardship must complete the baking. For the stewardship conscience to pervade a Church constituency, local or general, stewardship principles and teaching must be active in the parent loaf—the official, administrative membership. S. S. "THE DOUBLE CURE."

sons in admiration because of advantage." But, remember ye the words which were spoken before of the apostle of our Lord Jesus Christ; how that they told you there should be mockers in the last time, who should walk after their own ungodly lusts. These be they who separate themselves, sensual, having not the spirit." The last word explains all "having not the Spirit." For we are told, in the Scriptures "Now, if any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of His." So many trying to live a Christian life without the Spirit and the reason they have not the Spirit is because the world cannot receive Him. And our Lord has clearly stated, beyond any controversy, that the world is not eligible to receive this gift. There is, on the part of those classified as the "world" something lacking in their make-up that makes them incapable of receiving the gift of the baptism of the Holy Ghost. Again, he said the reason they could not receive Him was "because they did not see Him, neither did they know Him."

But what saith the Scriptures on my subject? It would seem that the disciples were enjoying a relationship with the Lord to be coveted by all of us poor creatures; better still, they were told that their names were written in heaven. And when our Lord sent them out to preach the gospel of repentance, they had revivals, the dead were raised, the lame made to walk, the blind made to see, the ears of the deaf were unstopped, and they came back rejoicing and telling their Lord that the devils were subject unto them. But our good Lord said to them, in substance, that they needed and must have another "Comforter." I can imagine the apostle Peter saying, "Lord, didn't I get all that when I left the fish-nets to follow Thee?" No, Peter, you have yet "two minds." You have both the spiritual and carnal minds, and you will be overcome by the carnal (man) mind, and will deny me thrice before the cock crows. "No, Lord (the spiritual mind speaks), I will go with you into prison or to death, though all the rest forsake you I'll not." Then our Lord speaks to Peter and said, "I have yet many things to say unto you, but you cannot bear them now. Howbeit, when He, the Spirit of truth, is come, He will guide you into all truth." "But the Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in my name, He shall teach you all things and bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you."

Dear reader, have you received the Holy Ghost since you believed? If not, why not? The plan has been completed for you to have this "double cure." "Wherefore Jesus also, that He might sanctify the people with His own blood, suffered without the gate." This is the kind of circumcision Moses was talking about when he told the children of Israel, "And the Lord thy God will circumcise thine heart, and the heart of thy seed, to love the Lord thy God with all thine heart, and with all thy soul, that thou mayest live." And the apostle Paul brings out the same thought, "In whom also ye are circumcised with the circumcision made without hands, in putting off the body of the sins of the flesh, by the circumcision of Christ." Paul realized the need of the "double cure" when he expressed himself thus, "When I would do good, evil is present with me." It seems that the apostle Paul immediately sought for the remedy, and found it, as he speaks thus in the next chapter, "There is, therefore, now no condemnation." He had gotten relief, the burden had been lifted, and he says in the next verse, "For the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death."

Paul was now a free man. What was the matter of Paul before he received this relief? Why, there were two men trying to live in the same house. And as the good book tells us, two cannot walk together, except they be agreed. Ishmael cannot dwell in the house with Isaac. He will have to be cast out or there will be trouble. And James tells us, "Draw nigh to God, and He will draw nigh to you. Cleanse your hands, ye sinners, and purify your hearts ye double-minded." Who is a double-minded man? It must be a fellow with two minds. Then, if a man has two minds, what are they? It must be the carnal mind that he brought here with him, and the spiritual mind that he received when he was regenerated. "A double-minded man," James tells us, is unstable in all his ways. He tries to serve two masters, but he can't do it. If he happens to be a preacher, he may be straight in his theology, but you cannot rely upon him, for you cannot tell which mind he will follow. If he gets with a worldly crowd, he is one of them. And when he is with the saints, he tries to be a saint. I believe our Lord described this character thus, "They honor me with their lips, but their hearts are far from me." They are usually good hands to advise others how and what they ought to do, but they seldom practice what they preach.

*(To be Continued Next Week.)

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

Our hearts were saddened last Friday evening (February 20th), about 10:30 o'clock, when the news went to the cottages that Mrs. Mary S. Trigg, head matron in the "Baby Home," where the smaller children live, had passed away. She had been in her usual good health, except a slight cold, up to the time of her death. She ate her evening meal as usual and sat by the fireside talking to the children and others of the building, and went to her room about 9 o'clock and was taken ill about 10 o'clock. She called Mrs. Wagener, the other matron, who went to her room at once; she then called the head matron, the superintendent, and the doctor, and all reached the building in just a few minutes, but she had breathed her last.

Mrs. Trigg accepted work in the Christian Orphanage six months ago, and had charge of the smaller children. She knew children and knew how to reach them and develop the best in them. She was a fine Christian character, with high ideals, and could inspire a child to do its best. During her six months' work in the Christian Orphanage she had won her way into the heart of every child, every helper and all those with whom she came in contact. She was a real mother to the little children who were in her care. Her heart of sympathy and love went out to them as tenderly and affectionately as if she had been their own mother. All hours of the night if one coughed she went to its bedside. If it was sick she would sit by its bedside and sympathize with it.

The children loved and respected her as a real mother. They know they have had a great loss, and at the little service just before the body was carried to the station to ship back to her home town in Missouri, there was not a child in the institution whose heart was not crushed with grief, and but few eyes not filled with tears.

We will miss her in her building, we will miss her on our campus. Her work is finished. But her kindly disposition and her wholesome influence will live in our hearts till time is no more. Surely a good woman has gone to her reward.

Superintendent.

WITHOUT GOD WE ARE WITHOUT HOPE.

The supreme need of our country today is a general revival of religion throughout all its wide-extended domain from ocean to ocean.

Upon such a revival depends even the return of national prosperity to the nation.

The wisest business men of the land declare that the financial depression is largely attributable to the religious declension of the people.

Hard hearts have had no small part in the making of hard times. Gambling and mammon worship in many forms having enfeebled the interest of the people in religion, have brought commercial and industrial depression as the inevitable result of departure from God.

But a revival of religion cannot be sought and secured as the means for curing the financial depression.

Repentance for sin must be genuine sorrow for godlessness, not piteous lamentation for commercial adversity.

If the deep depression in the realm of material things constrains the people to forget the loss of mere things, and to return to God, the want of prosperity will prove an immeasurable blessing.

Both preachers and people must repent for their excessive dependence upon earthly goods and return to God, who only is our hope and salvation.

We can welcome poverty with thanksgiving if it revives piety by bringing us back to our Heavenly Father.

The distressing want of the prodigal son drove him to return to his father's home and heart.

It is time for this wayward prodigal nation to cease bemoaning its loss of goods and begin to bewail its loss of God.

To multitudes, God is dead. They are horrified by professions of atheism, but they practice the worst form of atheism, which is living as if God did not exist.

"Men without God are without hope in the world" (Eph. 11:12).—Bishop W. A. Candler, in Christian Advocate.

WET OR DRY?

Is the Wickersham report wet or dry? Let the report itself answer:

1. The commission is opposed to repeal of the eighteenth amendment.

2. The commission is opposed to the restoration in any manner of the legalized saloon.

3. The commission is opposed to the Federal or State governments, as such, going into the liquor business.

4. The commission is opposed to the proposal to modify the national prohibition act so as to permit the manufacture and sale of light wines and beer.

5. The commission is of opinion that the co-operation of the States is an essential element in the enforcement of the eighteenth amendment and the national prohibition act throughout the territory of the United States; that the support of public opinion in the several States is necessary in order to insure such co-operation.

ADVENTURES IN YOUTH FELLOWSHIP

"Youth at Work in the Church."

JEWEL TRUITT, Editor, Waverly, Virginia.

WANTED: LEADERS!

Wanted: Leaders in our Churches.
 Wanted: Leaders to teach Sunday School classes and study classes.
 Wanted: Leaders in our young people's work.
 Wanted: Leaders to show the way, to assume responsibility, to finish the task.
 Wanted: Leaders who are consecrated and devoted and unselfish.
 Wanted: Leaders who are not afraid of hard work.
 Wanted: Leaders who are not seeking the easy part.
 Wanted: Leaders who inspire others.
 Wanted: Leaders who lead, and follow.

Every Church or Church organization that is progressive has a leader or many leaders. The Church that is dead, or dying, lacks a leader. No Church can have too many leaders of the right kind. Leaders co-operate. Leaders go before the group and show the way; they invite others to follow; they persuade; they open up the way; they lead on by their own example; they persevere. They may not be recognized as leaders, but, under their direction, tasks are accomplished. Leaders are needed in every Church, in every organization, on every committee. Plan to be a leader. Prepare for leadership.

Wanted: Leaders!

A big tri-motored Ford plane was resting on a landing-field. The engine was in perfect running order. The tank was full of gasoline. Every mechanical device which the skill of man had developed for the safety and efficiency of flying had been included in the make-up of this plane. The seating capacity was filled. But the big plane did not move. The crowd grew impatient, tired of sitting in the same place, seeing the same things, when they could and should have been making progress toward their desired destination. One thing was necessary before the purpose for which the big ship had been created could be achieved—a pilot, a person who would apply his intelligence and skill to the control and direction of the potential power of the monster plane, a human engineer.

The Church can be compared to this airplane. The Church organization, in its many different forms, is not sufficient by itself. It takes Christ at the head. It also takes men and women and boys and girls in their respective places. Christ has left His work to us. If we fail Him, there is no other way provided. It is our privilege to speak the word or do the work that is going to win some person to more active service in the Church. Christ does His part, but He cannot and will not do ours. We dare not be lacking.

All have a share in the beauty,
 All have a share in the plan;
 What does it matter what duty
 Falls to the lot of a man?
 Some one has blended the plaster,
 And some one has carried the stone—
 Neither the man or the Master
 Ever has builded alone.
 Making a roof from the weather,
 Building a house for the King;
 Only by working together,
 Men have accomplished a thing.

—Selected.

YOUTH AND THE CHURCH.

The youth of today has a task to perform. It is the task that has challenged every generation since the days of Christ. It is the putting of the influence of the Church into the every-day tasks of the world. The example of Jesus, if a serious attempt were made to follow it, ought to lead us into this simple yet satisfying way of life. We put our Church in our place in our lives, and our politics, our moral and social problems, our cultural and intellectual interests in other places. We do not dare mix them! This makes life complex and perplexing.

There should be a unity in life. To be full and abundant, life must be unified. The ideals in one part or section of our lives should be as high as our ideals in regard to other things. The example of our Master teaches that sometimes the simplest action or word has infinite meaning. And sometimes the seemingly important matters are of but little consequence. But in everything, the spirit of love in our hearts counts for a great deal. The Church is at work in a world that is concerned with all of life and with all the problems of men and women. The sooner the world seeks the will of God in solving its problems, whatever their nature, the sooner will peace and harmony reign between the nations. Individuals must seek God in all times and places before nations will ever do it. Do you count God your intimate Friend and Companion in every relation of life? If not, will you begin to seek Him as such a Friend today?

"If our lives were but more simple,
 We should take Him at His word;
 And our lives would be all sunshine
 In the sweetness of our Lord."

—F. W. Faber.

LIVING.

Living is not getting Jewels, land and gold.
 These, despite our striving,
 Long we cannot hold.

Living is not finding Pleasure's maddened whirl.
 Pleasure is but fleeting—
 It is of the world.

Living is but giving
 Balm to heal life's woe,
 Strength and power to lighten
 Tasks our comrades know.

Living is but loving—
 Christ would have it so.
 He's our great Example;
 Live with Him—and know!

MEDITATION.

Today I went to my Church. I like my Church. I believe in my Church. For me it is the best Church. It is my home. I am familiar with its services. I can approach God through its worship. I know the folks who worship in the pews around me. We know each other's faults and joys and sorrows. We are neighbors and friends. Unconsciously we are helping each other by being in God's house. I cannot afford to miss going to God's house because it brings strength and power for the daily tasks.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Sunday, March 8, 1931.

TOPIC: "What Is the Church?"

SCRIPTURE: Eph. 2:18-22; Rom. 12:4, 5.

The Church is the organization or institution which was founded for the purpose of establishing the Christian way of life. Not many people have ever seriously doubted that the Christian way of life is the best. But there has been a constant clamor that the Church is not living up to what Jesus taught and lived. Christ is generally recognized as the religious Leader of all time, and His way of salvation for individual and for civilization is conceded to be the only way.

Judging from what the Church is, rather than by what it could and should be, causes some to doubt its value. A study of the history of the world brings one to respect the Church as the preserver of Christianity, learning and civilization. There is something in the Church worth the investigation and support of any individual. To ignore the Church because it is not perfect is cowardly. Brave and dauntless young men and women follow its standard in seeking the best in life.

"The Church cannot be greater than the vision and consecration of those who constitute it. God's presence must be real and vital in the lives of Church members and His spirit felt in the services of the Church or it will not be different from the hundreds of other present-day organizations. Christian leaders who have endeavored to discover the causes of the present ineffectiveness of the Church think that the lack of insight, power, and unity of purpose that come from public and private worship is one fundamental cause. Hence the great emphasis at the present time upon worship.

"The Church as an agency for righteousness should be a champion of world peace, social justice, and the brotherhood of man. It is a blot on the record of the Church that other institutions have been organized for the purpose of bringing about changes in our social order that were fundamentally the work of the Church. In recent years the Church has been taking a fearless stand on many of the great moral issues that confront civilization. The Church can no longer be silent on things involving Christian principles.

"The failure of the Church to comprehend its responsibility for the total welfare of humanity has been a large factor in permitting some very distressing social conditions to develop. The conditions of crime, poverty and disease that infest our present civilization are so serious that they have led to the formation of agencies outside the Church to meet the situation. Social welfare organizations for the relief of these distressing conditions have been formed. Workers are trained and employed to learn and remove the causes of these conditions. But these methods are all very impersonal and mechanical. The Church should permeate every agency that is concerned with human welfare with an appreciation of the dignity and worth of human personality and with a spirit of warm-hearted, Christian love. Work commonly known as 'social service' should be done under the inspiration of the Church and in the spirit of Jesus."

"THE STARS ALSO."

The world could get along somehow
 With the sun and moon, I know;
 But after God had finished these,
 He "made the stars also."

The world will get along somehow
 If I give grudgingly, I know;
 But, rather, I would give like God,
 Who "made the stars also."

THE GOOD SAMARITAN.

LESSON X—MARCH 8, 1931.

GOLDEN TEXT: "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."—Lev. 19:18.

LESSON: Luke 10:25-37.

THE QUESTION.

"Teacher, what shall I do to inherit eternal life?" It is a great question; one of life's fundamental questions. In this instance, however, it was not asked in the spirit of sincere seeking after the truth, but in order "to make trial of Jesus." There are a great many people who raise questions about religion simply to get into a discussion or to avoid an issue, and not to obey the truth involved in the answer. Honest doubt has a legitimate place in the religious life. Mere speculation, divorced from any earnest moral effort to find and obey the truth, is damnable.

THE ANSWER.

"What is written in the law?" The man was a lawyer, one who was supposed to be well versed in the law of Moses and the traditions. It was a favorite custom of Jesus to answer a question with a question, which always put the problem in the true light. The lawyer, cornered by his own question, promptly replied that to love God first with heart, mind, soul and strength, was the first great law, and the second was to love one's neighbor as one's self. Like so many of us, He knew what he ought to do; he simply lacked the power or the willingness to do what he knew.

THE PROBLEM.

"And who is my neighbor?"—he asked this question to justify himself. The thing started early. Adam and Eve tried to justify themselves in the Garden of Eden. When they faced the demands of moral ideals and saw their failure, they tried "to pass the buck"—Adam, in justifying himself, blamed Eve, and Eve, in justifying herself, blamed the serpent. In a measure, all of us try to justify ourselves for our moral imperfections by blaming heredity, environment, circumstances, or companions.

THE SOLUTION.

In reply to the question, "And who is my neighbor?" Jesus told the immortal story of the Good Samaritan. No comment can do justice to it. It is its own best interpreter. In this case, however, the writer of these notes desires to call attention to the three types of people represented in the story, this scheme not being original with him.

Those who beat up travelers on life's highway. The robbers stripped him and beat him and departed, leaving the man half dead. They are typical of that large group of people in our modern life in every community who try to get from others all that they can. They prey upon human life. They do not always use open and strong-handed measures; in fact, it is usually just the opposite. Let any man think for a minute, and he will readily call to mind the type here represented—those who, in the ultimate analysis, are, by their ideals and their actions, enemies of mankind, robbing them of life's real riches and beating them in ways far more harmful than would be the case if they simply used physical means.

Those who pass up travelers on life's highway. The priest and the Levite did not have any part in beating up the man. They were probably a little shocked to find him in that condition. They probably delivered a mild protest against a man who would do a thing like that. But they did not do anything about it. They passed by on the other side, or came near and did nothing. There are still those who are content with negative goodness. Their only boast or claim in matters religious is the things they have not done. There is no positive, out-going, constructive output to their lives. The eternal indictment against the priest and the Levite was not that they did not beat up the man, but that they did nothing about it when they found him beaten up. Inasmuch as ye did it not—Jesus said there are sins of omission as well as commission.

Those who lift up travelers on life's highway. The good Samaritan came and lifted him up and set him on his own beast. He was typical of that large following of the Master who go about doing good unto all men, whether they are of the household of faith or not. Their deeds are not heralded in the papers and they are often simple and unostentatious. But they are sympathetic and constructive, and they not only bind up the broken hearts of life, but they develop the spirit of friendship and good will.

Every man determines to which of these three classes he belongs. But in Jesus' answer, "Go, thou, and do likewise," all those who name His name find their example and their inspiration.

THE REVIVAL.

Many are of the impression that the old-time revival has passed. Nevertheless, we are holding them at various places while men stand by observing the results. Reports coming to our office would lead us to believe that the collective revival is still functioning. From various parts of the State where this paper serves, we receive announcements of meetings indicating that revival campaigns are proving successful. One district superintendent writes that eight of his Churches have held revivals that resulted in scores of conversions. Indeed, it continues to remain a conviction on the part of many people that the gospel has power to draw men and to work the conversion and regeneration of repentant souls. Why should this not be true? The times never get away from God where He has men committed to His will. The revival may be had where the pastors of the Churches are willing to pay the price in sacrifice, self-denial, devotion and application for it.—Western Christian Advocate.

One of our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy.

"If thou wilt make the Almighty thy treasure . . . then shalt thou delight thyself in the Almighty . . . and thou shalt make thy prayer unto Him and He will hear thee."—Job 22: 25-27.

BY DR. AMOS R. WELLS.

MONDAY.

THE MIGHTY TONGUE.

"Death and life are in the power of the tongue."
—Prov. 18:15-21.

Matthew Simpson, the great Methodist bishop, made a set of rules for his life. His first three rules were: "(1) Never injure the feelings of any person with whom I converse or am associated, unless that injury be the result of the declaration of a truth which it becomes my duty to utter. (2) Speak evil of no one; never utter disrespectful words or indulge in a conversation wherein any one is unnecessarily spoken against. (3) Suffer not myself to give way to a jesting or jocose spirit, or to talk upon unimportant subjects."

Those rules are good for the humblest Christian as well as for a bishop. Probably no one but the recording angel has any idea of the vast mass of wrong done by careless, critical words. They are malarial. They spread on the wings of the wind. But life, as well as death, is in the power of the tongue. It is as easy to speak praise as blame, and praise brings forth rich and plentiful fruit. Praise is joy-producing. Praise makes for energy and efficiency. Praise is creative. Thank God for the praisers of earth!

Prayer.—Fill our tongues with life, O Thou who spake as never man spake! Fill our mouths with life and love, O Thou Word of God, Spokesman of love divine. May we speak as in Thy presence and filled with Thy Spirit. Amen

TUESDAY.

DREAMERS AND DOERS.

"In the multitude of dreams there are vanities, and in many words; but fear thou God."—Eccl. 5:1-7.

"You cannot dream yourself into a character," said Froude; "you must forge and hammer yourself into one." Many of us are forever thinking that we will be stronger, purer, wiser, more kindly, more courageous. Some way we are satisfied with these dreams as if they were reality. We see ourselves so clearly as we want to be, that we imagine we have already attained our ideals. But at the first temptation how easily we fall! How swiftly our house of dreams tumbles into the dust!

It is better to walk a rod on the solid earth than a thousand leagues up in Cloudland. It is better to do a single loving deed or speak a single kind word than fancy ourselves the most glorious saint in heaven. It is better to rise and accomplish one of the many practical little tasks that crowd upon us than to sit in an easy chair and make out a schedule of the tasks we hope to accomplish, day by day, for a year to come. Dreams, even a thronging multitude of dreams, are only vanities, only emptiness. Let us fear God, and get to work.

Prayer.—When we sleep, our Father, let the sleep follow work and be the preparation for more work, the dreamless slumber of Thy toilers. Free our lives from the mirage of vain imaginations. Grant us the substance of labor with Thee. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

CENTER AND CIRCLE.

"His heart is fixed, trusting in Jehovah."—Psa. 112:1-7.

Archbishop Trench, who wrote so many wise and inspiring poems, wrote the following sagacious stanza:

"Wouldst thou go forth to bless,
Be sure of thine own ground;
Fix well thy center first,
Then draw thy circles round."

Perfect circles cannot be drawn except by first fixing the center. A compass must keep one arm on the center, and then the other arm may swing around an exact circumference; and you can widen out the circumference at will, circle outside of circle endlessly, each circle parallel to the first. It is like the beautifully growing series of waves that follow the throwing of a stone into still water; but first the stone must make the center.

Young people often fail to realize this. They plan their lives on lines that reach out in one direction after money, in another direction after fame, in another direction after pleasure, in another direction after social graces and influence. Such lives have no continuity, no congruity, no balance or harmony or force or growth. They have no fixed center from which to grow, about which to organize their existence.

Prayer.—Infinite Spirit of order, Thou creative power who dost bind the universe in one, we fix our souls upon Thee. From Thee we start all our plans. We work on Thee and we rest in Thee and in Thee we make our happy progress. Thou shalt be, throughout eternity, our All-in-All. Amen.

THURSDAY.

ACID-RESISTING.

Resist the devil, and he will flee from you."—James 4:1-10.

A man who died recently, Frank Limberg, is said to have been the first to make an enamel that would resist acids. In that acid-resisting enamel is a parable for us all. The world is full of corrosive influences, agencies that cut and eat and tear down, acid habits and acid words and acid cruelties and lusts. Our souls are easily attacked, easily depreciated. It is hard to maintain our integrity and purity.

But there is an acid-resisting enamel, a preservative covering of the spirit, with the aid of which we can go through life exposed, as we must be, to evil influences, yet holding our souls clean and strong, sweet and pure, meet for the Master's use. This resistance is given us by religion, and by nothing else. It is applied often in the heat of fiery trials. But whatever hardship it involves is wonderfully rewarding.

Prayer.—Our Father, who art in heaven, lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from the evil one. Give us power to resist the devil. Cause him to flee from us. Enclose us in Thy protecting armor, and we shall have no fear of any harm. We ask it in Thy name. Amen.

FRIDAY.

A RIVER SURVEY.

"Everything shall live whithersoever the river cometh."—Ezek. 47:1-12.

Our national War Department is engaged on a vast work of peace. It is surveying two hundred rivers of the United States, and the work will require three more years, costing more than twelve million dollars. The aim is to learn the river resources of the country so that they can be developed.

Such a river survey might well be undertaken in our spiritual lives. Ezekiel, in the best known of his prophecies, has a marvelous picture of the river of influence proceeding from God's sanctuary, growing ever deeper as it flows, bordered with ever-fruitful trees, and bringing life wherever it goes. Has that river reached our lives? How much is it to us? Have we ever surveyed our spiritual resources? Do we know our wealth in God?

Prayer.—Flow into our hearts, O water of holiness! Lift us on thy swift waves. Wash us with thy purifying current. Bring us to our desired haven. Through riches of grace in Christ Jesus our Lord. Amen.

SATURDAY.

MEDITATION.

"Oh, how love I Thy law! It is my meditation all the day."—Psa. 119:97-104.

Various persons have been confessing to the newspapers their reading habits, and some have admitted the reading of from ten to twenty books a day. However we may envy such ability, we may console ourselves with the reflection that, for the best fruitage, time is necessary. Meditation is required if one would get the most out of his reading. The psalmist, because he loved God's law, meditated on it all the day.

They tell us that men, in these rushing days, and especially in our hurrying country, have lost the art of meditation. That may be so, though the many thoughtful readers of this page of daily meditations go far to prove the contrary. If it is so, and in proportion as it is true, our country is woefully poorer. Meditation is the fertilizing element that enriches the soil of our mind. Meditation is the time element that contributes sturdiness to our spiritual fiber. Meditation is the tempering that changes our iron to steel. Meditation goes far to make men.

Prayer.—Holy Spirit of God, brood over our souls. Admit us to the secret recesses of the divine nature. May we dare to be much alone with Thee. Amen.

SUNDAY.

AN UNWALLED CITY.

"He whose spirit is without restraint is like a city that is broken down and without walls."—Prov. 25:17-28.

It does not mean much to us that a city is not shut in behind walls, and no walls would furnish any protection against modern artillery; but in the ancient days a city without walls, however large, was no more than a big village. It was at the mercy of any foe, and its inhabitants might as well have dwelt in the open fields. That was why Nehemiah wept so bitterly when he heard that the walls of Jerusalem were down. Every Jew had been proud of that great and beautiful city, but Jews could be proud of it no longer.

Equally defenseless is a "spirit without restraint." There are walls for the soul which seem to the thoughtless to confine it, and reduce its independence. Really, as in the case of the city, they enlarge it and render it independent of its adversaries. The restraint of laws means liberty. The restraint of obedience means governing power and authority. To be shut in with good things means the shutting out of evil things.

Prayer.—Be Thou our wall, God of all freedom. Be Thou our restraint, Lord of all liberty. Defend us by Thy restrictions. Enfranchise us by Thy loving bonds. Be our fortress and our strong tower forever and ever. Amen.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN'S PULPIT

REV. JOSEPH W. FIX, Preacher.

"I WILL BUILD."

BY REV. WM. T. SCOTT, B. D.

(A sermon preached in the Whitley Auditorium, Elon College, on the eighth anniversary of the fire, which occurred on January 18, 1923.)

"It was in the heart of David, my father, to build a house for the name of the Lord God of Israel, and the Lord said unto David, my father, Whereas, it was in thine heart to build a house unto my name, thou didst well that it was in thine heart. Nevertheless, thou shalt not build the house, but thy son that shall come forth out of thy loins, he shall build (the house) unto my name."—1 Kings 8:12ff.

These words are from the lips of King Solomon, the son of David of Israel.

"And these all having obtained a good report through faith, received not the promise; God having provided some better thing for us, that they without us should not be made perfect." These words are from the Hebrew Hall of Fame, found in the 11th chapter of Hebrews.

Elon, too, has her fathers who have dreamed dreams, seen visions, and had it in their hearts to build a great sanctuary of learning to the glory of God. Elon, too, has her Hall of Fame, yet it seemed not to be the will of God for the visions and feelings of heart of these pioneers, who founded Elon in 1888, to be completed in their day, though all these attained a good report through faith and faithfulness to their cause. They, like David, had it in their hearts, and that was well, but God had provided some better thing for us: that they, these early ambitions of the founders of Elon in the nineteenth century, without us (of the twentieth century) should not be made perfect.

The second and greatest epoch in Elon's existence began on that memorable 18th day of January, 1923, when it seemed that all previous heart ambition lay low in the crumbling ruins of older Elon. There it lay, the work of over a generation, in a massive heap of smoldering debris! To us, whose hearts and lives had been strangely touched and molded in those sacred halls of learning, that sight on that January morning came as something of a death-knell to much we had held dear. If there was ever a work-day for Elon and for those who loved her, it was January 18, 1923. If there was ever a bright day for Elon and for those who love her, it is January 18, 1931!

Eight years ago today all was dark for Elon, it seemed. The administration building, which had long graced the campus of giant oaks, and which had served as the only class-room, library and office building for over thirty years, was in ashes! With $25,000—the only insurance on the building—anxious hearts asked: "What can be built with that sum? What will Elon's future be?"

Those moments we would not like to live over again, for they were too heart-rending; yet not one of us who was here that day would have the sacredness of those moments erased from memory.

One who experienced it cannot forget the meeting of the student body in the boys' gym that day, while the air was still filled with the smoke of destruction, when, in the tenseness of the moment, heroic hearts of Christian Church leaders and members of the student body hailed the catastrophe as a stepping-stone to greater things; that out of those smoldering ruins and that heap of ashes would rise greater halls of learning; and out of the pathos and emotion of that moment rang out as never I have heard before or since:

Here's to dear old Elon,
Faithful and bold;
Here's to her banner
Of Maroon and Gold.

Here's to men and women
Who have come and gone
Singing the victors' song
Of old Elon.

Out of the challenge of that moment—divine as it was—a leader of the student body proposed that each man and woman stand by Elon in her distress, and to that challenge came a unanimous approval of the student body. They stood by, every man and woman of them, accepting inconveniences with a glad smile.

All waited anxiously through those days for future hopes and plans for our beloved alma mater. Our noble president and other leaders fought bravely through those dark and trying days, and they won—we all won—a great victory. Soon, indeed, we saw through the cloud, which had overshadowed Elon's future—a silver lining, which is being realized in such a definite way on this eighth anniversary.

Eight years ago today we saw no humor in the occasion, for we thought there was none to be seen, but today we can recall many of those ridiculous scenes and happenings. For once, the boys saw the girls without any make-up, for the powder-puff was lost in the rush; one fellow was seen carrying down the steps of east dormitory—and without much difficulty—his trunk, which took three men to carry back after the fire. And we shall not forget the girls in the boys' dormitory throwing bedding, suits, hats, and all other manner of wearing apparel out of the windows. Many a young fellow diligently searched the campus, as the evening shadows began to fall, in a fruitless effort to recover the picture of his best girl, which had been thrown from the fire-threatened alumni building, either through spite or otherwise, by the fire-fighting heroines of Elon College. And, last but not least, we cannot forget those brave lads in search of an axe in order that they might cut down the trees on the campus, that they might not be ruined by the fire.

But I see I am not doing what I am perhaps supposed to do. I am supposed to preach a sermon for this occasion. Lest I completely desert my task, let me again call your attention to the deeper significance of this day. I want us to consider some of the material, spiritual, and idealistic progress of Elon since those epoch-making days of 1923. If I should dare take a subject after making all these preliminary statements, I should simply take the statement and assertion of Jesus, which pertained to all institutions dedicated to His cause, "I will build," for indeed Elon has built, and Christ has been the motive power. Eight years have marked a great change in her equipment, usefulness, and position.

The past eight years have indeed been an executed plan of advance for Elon College. In that period she has built at least three structures which will last through eternity; and we, the sons and daughters of Elon's founders, have it in our power to realize and perpetuate some of the ideals and visions of those pioneers, yet to be attained: "God having provided some better thing for us, that they, and their work, without us should not be made perfect." The open door of a new day lies before the new Elon. It is ours to let her pass, fully equipped, through that door on into a future of opportunity, service, and leadership for the quest of the abundant life in all of the world's relationships.

As never before in the history of Elon, she has built herself into the hearts of her alumni and friends. Since 1923, her equipment has been increased to a valuation of nearly $1,500,000; her endowment has been increased to $550,000; she has raised over $50,000 in cash each year for current expenses, and $600,000 in cash for the greater Elon.

All this has been made possible, under the leadership of Jesus Christ, the Builder, by the response of generous hearts of alumni and friends, like the citizens of Alamance County, the Carletons, the Orbans, the Dukes, the Dardens, and others. These responses were made because of a pride of Elon's past and the promise of her future, and because these donors had confidence that you and other students of succeeding generations were worth it all and that you would do your utmost, in loyalty, to perpetuate the cause.

In Elon's loss in 1923 there was felt a great need; and out of the efforts necessitated for Elon's recovery, which were genuine sacrifices on the part of many, there has been born and grown a new and more abiding love for Elon College. It is always in the hour of sacrifice that a new faith, hope, and love issue forth.

But the work is not all done. There falls to us our task; and without our best efforts, the noble start for a bigger, better Elon cannot be fully realized, for God having provided some better thing for us, that, the work before us, without us should not be made perfect.

The million-dollar campaign rises before us as our task. Our alumni, students, and friends can perpetuate Elon's noble past by a noble response to that call. It was my privilege to talk with an alumnus of Elon soon after the plans for the million-dollar campaign were announced. He is one of the finest athletes Elon has ever produced, and today he holds one of the best positions in the State school system. He heralded this campaign as one of the finest opportunities ever to face Elon, and further he pledged himself to do his utmost to help his alma mater realize her worthy ideal, for indeed he felt he owed her a debt which nothing short of his best possible gift in life and service to her would pay. This is the sort of attitude and loyalty it will take to carry this task of ours to a successful finish.

Elon has built character during these past eight years. That which makes a building is the life it molds.

We are all blind till we see
That, in the human plan,
Nothing is worth the making
Unless it makes the man.

Just here I should like to pay my own personal tribute to my alma mater, for truly she is that mother to me, and for all I am or hope to be, Elon will be largely responsible. She is my benefactor; I am her debtor. And, God giving me strength, I shall give her my best in living the life she has taught me and in giving her of my best material gifts.

I have little time or place for the ungrateful son or daughter of Elon, who says, "I don't owe Elon anything." It was my privilege, or rather task, to meet one such person while I was a field secretary for Elon. That person, a graduate of Elon and a member of a family of other graduates of Elon, said to me when I approached him for a gift for the college, "I don't owe Elon anything." I said, "How do you have the heart and ingratitude to say that? Here you are in one of the best positions society has to offer, and you can say you don't owe Elon anything! She has put you where you are today." "Well," he said, "I could have got what Elon gave me at any other school." Yes, you might have," I said; "but, as a matter of fact, you didn't. You got it at Elon. You might have been given a better chance by some adopted parents than that which your own father and mother gave you; but, as a matter of fact, your own father and mother reared you, and yours is an everlasting debt to them. Likewise, Elon is a parent to you. She administered to your need of mental discipline and development, and she guided you in character development—not some other school. Therefore, you owe Elon an everlasting debt of gratitude. You can't refuse her call and need, and keep your self-respect."

For some reason, that fellow saw the light, and gave me his check for twenty-five dollars, and promised more. That man, I believe, redeemed his own self-respect. Any person who has received his training, or a part of it, at Elon owes her a debt, and should respond to her call. We grow only in proportion to our sharing.

Elon has built a place in the world's structure of education in quest for the abundant life, and she is an instrument of the kingdom of God. Her equipment and faculty offer a real opportunity of service to the Christian world. Her standards and leadership in the field of Christian education, both in theory and practice, have merited and received world-wide acclaim.

It has been my privilege to study at two great universities since graduation from Elon, and in these schools of higher learning and scholarship, the most kindly reference was made to the pioneer work of Elon in the field of Christian education. Her experiment in laboratory demonstration in the field of Christian education was cited in the class-room on many occasions as having intrinsic value in developing lay and professional leadership for the Church school. It was with a sense of pride that I could say I was from Elon.

Not only has Elon built a place in the field of Christian education, but also in the field of liberal arts and science. During the past eight years she has achieved membership in the coveted Southern Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools. This in itself is the highest honor that can come to a college in this area of the United States.

But again, even if Elon has built three structures which will have eternal significance, the task is unfinished, and it is ours to perpetuate and make more noble, and pass on to succeeding generations a greater Elon, through a genuine response of students to her leadership and through an unselfish response of alumni and friends to her every need, for "God having provided some better thing"—for Elon, that without us she should not be made perfect.

Elon claims our best and noblest life. We personify her life, her place in the world. What kind of an Elon will we give to the world of men? It is within our power to answer!

Most of you are members of the Christian Church, and I want to say this word to you. Elon is the product of the Christian Church. The history and the present effectiveness of the Christian Church in the South is bound up so intricately in the work of Elon College, that to think of one is to think of the other. Look at your Church "year-books"; read the names of the ministers and lay leaders and their accomplishments in the Southern Christian Convention, and facts will convince you. About 85 per cent—and that is a sane estimate—of our ministers and lay leaders are products of Elon. If this is true of the past and the present, the future makes its call and promise on the same quality of leadership.

To support Elon is to support the Christian Church. Yea, and more—to support Elon is to support a united Church. Our larger Congregational-Christian fellowship will be turning its eyes upon Elon for leaders. Will Elon measure up to the need and opportunity? Will we allow her to measure up? That answer lies largely within the response of the membership of our local Christian Churches. If these will lead out upon this present million-dollar campaign with a response commensurate to the opportunity and responsibility, others who are financially capable of doing greater things will follow.

To support Elon is to support the kingdom of God, for the ultimate aim of Elon is to search for and apply truth. Jesus was bold enough to say that to know the truth is to make free. To know and to live the truth is to practice the reign of God, for the kingdom of God is the reign of God in the hearts and lives of men.

If we would perpetuate the message of those early Christian Church leaders; if we would carry their message of Christian union on to a joyful realization, let us make Elon measure up to its opportunity, for it is to Elon that we shall look for leaders in the future as we have in the past.

"And these all having obtained a good report through faith, received not the promise; God having provided some better thing for us, that they without us should not be made perfect."

"And they said, Let us rise up and build. So they strengthened their hands for this good work.

"So built we . . . and the halves were joined together, for the people had a mind to work."

CHAPTER 23.
THEN spake Jē'sus to the multitude, and to his disciples,

The GEM TESTAMENT has been steadily growing in popular favor ever since its first appearance. In size, 3 3/4 x 4 1/2 inches, it is not much larger than the Vest Pocket. It is also the only Testament of its size with large bold type and pronouncing text.

The edition on India paper is ideal, and we know of no better gift at the price than one in the finer bindings.

INDIA PAPER ONLY—Size 2 1/4 x 4 1/4 inches x 3/4 inch

The JEWEL is the latest and most attractive Pocket Testament made.

The TYPE is black, bold and larger than that in the famous Vest Pocket edition, and the book itself is smaller. It is printed exclusively on the famous Holman India paper, noted for its opaque quality and unusual tensile strength. One advantage of this India paper is that the leaves do not cling together.

The size, 2 1/4 x 4 1/4 inches, is so small that the book practically fits the palm of the hand.

OBITUARIES.

HOLLAND.

Miss Martha F. Holland was born July 2, 1863; died January 2, 1931. She joined Liberty Spring Church in her early girlhood and remained a loyal member until her death. She gave her life in service for others as long as she was able. For the past several years she had made her home with her sister. Although afflicted and confined to her room, she was patient and resigned to her Heavenly Father's will.

Her funeral service was conducted at Liberty Spring Church by Dr. I. W. Johnson and her body laid to rest in the Church cemetery. May the dear Heavenly Father comfort the dear sister in her lonely hours, who so lovingly and faithfully administered to her every need in her last days, and we pray God's richest blessings may rest upon her.

Resolved: First, That we record our appreciation of her faithful life and service, and hereby extend our sympathy to the beloved family.

Second, That a copy be sent to the family, a copy be entered upon the Church record and a copy sent to the Christian Sun.

BUTLER.

Whereas, God, in His all-wise providence, has removed from our midst one of our faithful and loyal members—Mrs. Cora Duck Butler—we, the members of the Ladies' Aid Society of the Franklin Christian Church, offer the following resolutions:

1. That, while we mourn the departure of our friend and co-worker, we bow in humble submission to God's will, knowing that He doeth all things well.

2. That we extend to her bereaved husband and children our heartfelt sympathy in their great sorrow, and pray that faith in God may give them comfort in their hour of need.

3. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, a copy sent to The Christian Sun for publication, and a copy be spread upon the records of our society.

GARNER.

Lillie Maie Garner, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. H. C. Garner, was born May 25, 1912, was called to be with Jesus on February 8, 1931, at the age of 18 years, 8 months, and 14 days. She professed faith in Christ more than a year ago and has let her light shine for Jesus ever since. Her last testimony was that she was going home to be with Jesus and she wanted her friends and loved ones to meet her some day. Funeral service was held at Pleasant Union Christian Church in the presence of a large audience, and was conducted by the writer. The body was placed beneath a beautiful mound of flowers to await the resurrection morn. May the loving Spirit of Christ comfort the beloved family.

ELON COLLEGE

AN ACCREDITED COLLEGE

of the

CONGREGATIONAL CHRISTIAN CHURCHES OF THE SOUTHEAST

ELON was founded to train Christian leaders for the New South.

ELON has done its task well—one graduate in seven being in the Christian ministry. The other six express Christian leadership in the various professions and vocations. Experience teaches that spiritual leadership must be indigenous.

The South is now a New South ready for an inclusive Church, the type of Church for which Elon has stood for forty years and for which she is prepared to produce capable leadership.

With no Church in the community, save the College Auditorium, ELON has practiced Christian Union for faculty, students, and community for four decades.

Its contribution to Christian Education is nationally known and approved. Its Christian Education Building, providing laboratory facilities for religious leadership training, is unique and is the first college building of its type in the world.

ELON confines itself to undergraduate liberal arts work with that religious emphasis which befits the Christian College.

In ELON the Congregational-Christian Church has an asset of marvelous hopefulness.

The South needs her Yale, her Oberlin, her Carleton, her Pomona for the intellectual leadership of the United Church. Many regard ELON as strategically located and spiritually endowed to become such a center of illumination and leadership training.

GARRISON.

Wallace West Garrison was born May 18, 1898, and died February 6, 1931, in his 33rd year of life. He leaves his wife, who before her marriage was Miss Josephine Brown; one small daughter, Ramona; his father, Mr. E. D. Garrison, of Burlington; two half-brothers, Charles and Dan; three half-sisters, May, Nina and Pearl; one sister, Mrs. Louise Walker, and many other relatives. He was a member of Reidsville Christian Church and a fine Christian gentleman. His friends were legion, as shown by their presence at his funeral on the evening of February 7, which was held in the Church, conducted by the writer and Dr. C. H. Rowland. His body was tenderly laid in its final resting-place in the family lot in Ocean View Cemetery to await the resurrection of the dead. The grave was covered with the many beautiful floral designs.

Jesus said, "What I do, thou knowest not now, but thou shalt know hereafter." May the sorrowing loved ones and friends be submissive to the will of our Heavenly Father and await the unfolding of His divine plan.

STRICKLAND.

Miss Tamsie D. Strickland died January 27th, at the home of her niece and with whom she made her home, Mrs. J. Settle Sharpe. She was about seventy-five years of age at the time of her death. Funeral services were held in the New Lebanon Church, conducted by her pastor, Rev. B. A. Whitten. Interment was made in the Church cemetery.

For many years and up until the time of her death she was a member of Mt. Bethel Church. She loved her Church and expressed herself as ready to answer the final summons a few days before she was called from labor unto rest. She leaves a number of relatives to mourn her going. May God comfort each sorrowing heart.

MISSIONARY CONDITIONS.—

The chief cause of the unrest in India is the tragic poverty of the people and their resentment under present conditions; for they must pay the salaries and pensions of their British overlords. The poverty of the people in India is the most pathetic thing that one could see in the Orient. The population of India has increased 50,000,000 in fifty years. Increase of population is a principle of their religious life, and all life with them is sacred. In China and Japan, conditions are not much better than in India, and they are calling for missionaries to guide them to the light of Christian civilization. Shall our people send the light?

EPISCOPAL LIBERALS.—

Several speakers of the liberals in the conference of the Episcopal Church held at Philadelphia, early in this month, urged a revision in the Church canons so that bishops could be recalled, and protested against Bishop Manning's action in barring a Presbyterian minister from conducting Communion in a Church of his diocese. It is charged that in the last twenty-five years quite a number of bishops have secured election through political accidents—not outstanding men intellectually or spiritually. When a bishop's conduct and teachings are contrary to those of his Church, it is contended that the diocese should have the privilege of recall.

WEEK-DAY SCHOOL OF RELIGION.—

A recent report of the enrollment of week-day schools of religion in Cincinnati shows a total of 9,059 for the first term, a gain of 319 over last year. It would be a great thing for all city Churches to conduct a week-day school of religion each year, and a greater thing for rural or country Churches to provide for similar instruction in the teachings of the Scriptures, the life of Christ, the teachings of the gospels, and other subjects for a better understanding of the Christian religion. It would be a great help to the minister to have a background of preparation for his people. It would make preaching more effective and helpful. Groups of Churches could cooperate in such schools and denominations could unite in such work.

A NOTABLE LEADER PASSES.—

Dr. Anna Carlin Spencer, special lecturer in social science at Teachers' College, Columbia University since 1920, died February 12th, in New York City, following a heart attack, at eighty years of age. Dr. Spencer was ordained and installed as minister of Bell Street Chapel in 1891, and served as pastor of this Unitarian Church for fourteen years. She frequently preached in liberal and Unitarian pulpits. She was one of the founders of the Congress of Religious Liberals, following the parliament of religion held in Chicago in 1893. She held a number of professorships. Her life and influence should inspire many an ambitious young woman to undertake great things, expect great things, and achieve great things in the pursuit of worthy ideals.

DESIRE FOR UNITY.—

About three hundred ministers of nearly a dozen denominations assembled at Springfield for the second annual session of the Illinois Convocation of Ministers, February 9-11, expressed a desire for unity, even something approaching some form of organic Protestant unity. The attendance at the convocation was well attended, despite the fact of the depression in the financial situation. Such a meeting of such a large number of ministers reveals the fact that ministers are anxious to study the problems that confront the present age and study them in group thinking. In council there is wisdom, and the counsel of the combined wisdom of such convocation will throw light on many common problems. Our ministers of the Christian Church do well to assemble themselves for study and mutual improvement.

EVANGELISM OF TOMORROW.—

The evangelism of tomorrow will be characterized by four things. First, it will be largely outside of Church walls. The day of mass-evangelism has passed. You have to have a man about four-fifths converted before he will come to Church. Second, it will be personal. Personal evangelism is more lasting, more in keeping with Christ's method of reaching people, and will result in greater loyalty to the kingdom. Third, it will be a lay activity, pastor-led. The pastor will direct the evangelistic campaign, but the membership of the Church will do a large part of the work. Churches must get away from the idea that they can hire a preacher to save the souls of the community. Fourth, it will be case-work in character. In the cure of sick souls, we must use the same method that the physician uses for the body. He carefully diagnoses each case, learns the specific difficulties with each case, and plans his treatment accordingly.

TIMES HAVE CHANGED.—

"Jesus never saw a Church or Sunday School, a hospital or a clinic, a missionary society, or a peace society, a battleship, a railroad or an automobile, a radio or telephone, a submarine or a twine-binder. And He never saw a carbine or a rapid-fire gun, an electric light or a wireless machine, a flying-ship or a typewriter, a cash register or a skyscraper. The common things all around us that are a part of our necessary daily life, Jesus never knew. There were no public schools and no State universities in Jesus' time.

There were no scientific ways for the battle against diseases, no anesthetics to relieve the agony of pain, no immunity from awful plagues that now yield to the skill of discovery in the realm of medicine and surgery. The old and the poor had no organizations worthy of the name to care for them. The social conscience was unborn. The brotherhood of man was a dream far more than now, and about the only institution on a large and world-wide scale that is here after all these centuries like that of Jesus' day is war."

DR. CHARLES' DEATH.—

Dr. R. H. Charles, archdeacon of Westminster, whose death is announced, deserves more than a passing notice. He was a famous scholar in apocalyptic literature. He began his studies in apocalyptic literature in the close of last century and has become the greatest apocalyptic scholar of this or any other century. It is no exaggeration to say that since he began his studies in this field, he has made as deep impression on our thinking as any theologian of his day.

His great work on Revelation is but one of many. His work on the apocrypha is an accepted authority in the schools of religion at the great universities. He began and remained a broad churchman, especially in recent years, when it became his turn to preach in the abbey he would deal fearlessly with various debated issues, such as the nature of resurrection, the teachings of the gospels on marriage, our visions of last things, and kindred subjects. Bible scholars of the entire English-speaking world owe him a debt of gratitude for his studies in apocalyptic literature.

CALVANISTIC AMERICA.—

"Predestinating America" was the general theme of Dr. Finley in his address in the Inter-denominational Pastoral Conference of the Pacific School of Religion, held in the First Congregational Church, at Berkeley, Calif., February 10-12. He said in his address on this theme that "It was almost at the same moment that John Calvin was born that Copernicus was developing his history of a heliocentric instead of a geocentric cosmos. Thus, though America was baptized under the Ptolemaic system and claimed by a Catholic sovereign, the colonies which became the United States of America were settled under the Copernican system, and its first settlers were most of them fed upon the spiritual doctrines of John Calvin. Men of Scottish ancestry were the first to declare for independence. They had a determining part in winning independence, and they had an important, and even dominant, part in framing and securing the adoption of the Constitution of the United States, which, like a decree of destiny, no whim of day can repeal." The eighteenth amendment is predestined to stand in the Constitution of the United States, since the Supreme Court has declared it constitutional.

NOTES-PERSONALS

Among the visitors at THE SUN's office this week was Dr. L. E. Smith, President of the Southern Christian Convention and pastor of Christian Temple, Norfolk, Va. Dr. Smith is carrying on two men's work, but he is doing it well, and it certainly seems to agree with him.

Dr. W. A. Harper and Mr. Geo. D. Colclough, of Elon College, were in Richmond on business during the first of this week, and spent some time at the office of THE SUN. Dr. Harper seems quite enthusiastic over the "Million Dollar Campaign," and we bespeak for him great success. He deserves it.

The Ladies' Missionary Society of the Union Christian Church, Union Ridge, N. C., sponsored a prayer meeting, which was held Sunday night, February 22nd, in the Church auditorium, with Mrs. W. H. Garrison presiding. The meeting was held in observance of the "World--Wide Week of Prayer," and the members of the Church and Sunday School were invited to join the society in the prayer, song, and discussion of the hour.

The very regrettable news comes that Pleasant Cross Church, Rev. H. V. Cox, pastor, Ramseur, N. C., was totally destroyed by fire on a recent Friday morning. There was no insurance, and therefore the fire occasioned a complete loss. Our Pleasant Cross congregation has courage and faith and will rebuild, though that will mean sacrifice in this time of depression. If any CHRISTIAN SUN reader has the money, here indeed is a fine opportunity for making an investment in kingdom service.

Pre-Easter services at Salisbury, N. C., mark another advance movement in this virile Church, with Rev. William T. Scott as pastor. The evangelistic committee, appointed by the Church at its annual meeting, recently got together and outlined, in counsel with the pastor, a full program. Each member of the committee to enlist two or three others to act as a sub-committee. The Young People's Sunday School Class, under direction of Mrs. Scott, will act as another group, each group to make lists of possible candidates for membership. Weekly meetings will be held to check up on what is being done. The pastor will hold special Lenten services, emphasizing evangelism, and Easter as a good day to join the Church, the visible body of the living Christ. The program is commendable and worthy of being copied. Another interesting work at Salisbury is the Boy Scout troop and the boys' Sunday School class, Dr. Frank Kirk, teacher. As the teacher, and in conjunction with another male member of the Church, a dinner was given to all these boys and their fathers as guests Friday night, February 27th. The dinner was served by the ladies of the Church, in the parlors of the Church, and a great time was had.

WELL, SUPPOSE IT WEREN'T TRUE?

For the sake of argument, then, let Jesus be a myth. Let Christianity itself be a myth; let the whole Christian Church be founded on a legend—a mere child's story. What will the doubter have gained, and what will religion have lost?

Let us see.

Well, replies Thomas F. Opie, who brings up the question in the Churchman (Episcopal), "this ideal—this myth—this legend—this fairy-tale for children has been the most potent single force in two thousand years of civilization." Yes—

"This mere idea has transformed life. This figment of the mind's vagaries has given us love for hate, purity for lust, fineness for filth, hope for despair, optimism for cynicism, brotherhood for misanthropy. Such an idea is grandly pragmatic. Such a fairy-tale is phenomenally potential. Such a legend is miraculously transforming."

So long, then, as it has given us all this and been the inspiration of the best in life, let the myth persist.

"Yes, in the name of God and of heaven, long life to the ideal!" exclaims Mr. Opie. "The world's noblest literature, the world's highest art and the world's divinest music may have been produced because men and women have followed a figmentary ideal—and not the actual personification of the Godhead!"

"But look about—gaze, seriously and appraisingly, at current life! Has it not been worth while? The greatest intellects of nineteen centuries have believed in this ideal; 'purest women, strongest men, and simple children have believed it—and have believed in it—and all who have devoutly believed it as a truth and who have lived by it as a truth have become exemplary for all that is beautiful in holiness.' If this be a myth—let Jesus be a Myth!"

"Confucius doubtless lived. Ask Confucianism, 'What are the higher powers?' The answer comes, 'We cannot know the higher powers.' This is a kind of religious agnosticism. It has given us China!"

"Buddha doubtless lived—or was this a myth? Ask Buddhism what are the higher powers. 'The universe is the highest power,' comes the answer. This is religious pantheism, so to speak. It has produced India!"

"Mohammed doubtless lived. Ask Mohammedanism what the higher powers are. The reply is, 'Law is the highest power—inflexible law.' This is a type of religious fatalism. It has produced Turkey!"

"But Christianity says, 'God in Man is the Higher Power.' This may be termed revelation—call it what you will—a myth! Call Jesus, the Great Discloser of God, a Myth! But in doing so, do not blink the facts! Christianity has produced England and America!"

"If Jesus, a Myth, can lift civilization to its zenith—and men and nations never have risen higher than their religions; if the legend of the Galilean can put heart into men and women and transform a Saul to a Paul and a Cephas to a Peter—all honor to the Legend! All hail to the Myth! Jesus, Good Paragon! Thou Crystal Myth!"—Literary Digest.

ALL HOPE IS NOT LOST.

Merle Thorpe, editor of the Nation's Business, published by the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, declares that we are entering the final stage of our folly, and explains that he refers to the whispering campaign of gloom and prediction. The talk of trouble ahead, and the frequent and insistent complaints regarding conditions and what has gone before, appear, at least to him, as about run their length. Advising a turning away from all who talk of depression and unemployment and inferences suggesting that the worst is yet to come, Mr. Thorpe takes up a defense for 1930, which has been greatly abused, to prove by facts and figures that not everybody is idle, not all factories are closed. While admitting that some are distressed, he declares that many are only frightened.

"The folly of too many of us is to accept the echo of the locker-room and the club-car as the voice of America," says Mr. Thorpe. "For example, consider 1930, lately interred. Now lies he there, and none so poor to do him reverence. Yet that maligned year loaded and unloaded 45,-800,000 freight cars, and with three million trucks on the job, too. It made and sold a new automobile for each ten families, at a cost of $2,159,600,000, and saw registrations highest of any year, with a gasoline consumption of 399,-000,000 barrels, an all-time record!"

There are some other interesting figures given for 1930; the statement indicating the usual two and a half pairs of shoes made for each inhabitant—315,000,000 pairs—and 4,500,000,000 yards of textiles manufactured. Work was provided for more than forty million men and women. Earnings, through dividends reported, were about $4,500,000,000. "Nineteen hundred and thirty saw to it that expenses of living did not exceed income," Mr. Thorpe finds, "evidenced by hundreds of millions of dollars increase in savings banks and eighteen and a half billions of new life insurance."

METHODS CORNER

BY REV. ELISHA A. KING, D. D.

Miami Beach, Fla.

Many Churches, especially small ones, do not engage in publicity work because they cannot afford it. Let me give you a bit of experience. I was pastor of a very small Church in the West. The Church was "run down" in almost every way. It seemed to me that the Church needed advertising, so more people would know where it was and what it proposed to do. I was the new minister, and it seemed to me that something must be done to arouse interest. I proposed to the board of trustees that they provide me with a "clerical fund." That meant creating a small fund for the minister's use in getting out mimeographed letters and announcements, sending them by mail to members and constituency, and, of course, providing stationery and postage.

It seems odd enough now, but at that time my board would not appropriate the money. They said that it was hard enough to get money to pay the necessary bills. But I pled with the board to give me the privilege of trying to raise money enough to start it. Reluctantly they yielded. On the night of our meeting, as we left the Church, one of the trustees came to me and shook hands, saying, "I think the idea a good one. Here is something to start with," and he left a bill in my hand which turned out to be five dollars. Thus encouraged, I proceeded.

I drew up a letter to the people, telling them that we needed some money for publicity, stationery, postage, etc., to begin a real advertising campaign to make our Church better known. I enclosed in every letter a small envelope with the words, "Clerical Fund" printed on the outside. We set a day for the return of these gifts. I asked them to give 10 cents, 25 cents, 50 cents, or $1.00, as they felt they could. To my great delight, the response was generous. The people saw the advantage of such a business-like move and supported it. This became an annual affair and a successful one.

It is not right for a Church to expect the minister to provide the stationery, postage and printed announcements out of his salary, though I have known many ministers who were obliged to do so. The smallest Church can have a sort of business office (probably in the minister's home), where carefully-worked-out publicity can be supervised. It pays large returns. In the case I have cited above, we reached a great many people and aroused their interest, and they came to Church and some joined the Church and some gave money to it. It is a little thing, but very efficient.

CONGREGATIONAL NEWS

REV. E. C. GILLETTE, Editor; REV. F. P. ENSMINGER, and REV. M. J. SWEET, Associates.

DR. ROBERT A. GEORGE, of Memphis, Tenn., spent two weeks visiting his brother at West Palm Beach. He preached at the West Palm Beach Church on February 15th.

DR. J. DELMAN KUYKENDALL, of Coconut Grove, Fla., has purchased a printing press, he having had experience along that line in his early newspaper work. With the help of some of the boys of his Church, an attractive Church bulletin is printed weekly.

THE PROMOTIONAL COUNCIL of the Commission on Missions is holding a meeting this week on Tuesday and Wednesday at Waltham, Mass. Superintendent Gillette is attending this meeting as a member of the council. He will also visit Hartford and New York.

DR. EDGAR S. ROTHROCK, who has been filling the pulpit at the Holly Hill, Fla., Church this season, has been afflicted with a throat trouble and his doctor has ordered him to give up preaching for some months. He has, therefore, resigned at Holly Hill, but will continue to reside there until later in the spring.

DR. JESSE K. MARDEN, who, with Mrs. Marden, is visiting at Mt. Dora and Windermere, Fla., is speaking at a number of our Churches, including St. Petersburg, Tampa, Winter Park, Mt. Dora, Tavares, Sanford, Orange City and Daytona Beach. Dr. Marden is one of the outstanding medical missionaries of the board and has charge of the medical work of the mission at Athens.

CONGREGATIONAL MINISTERS who have been spending a vacation in Florida are Dr. Samuel Lane Loomis, formerly secretary of the American Missionary Association; Dr. Dan Bradley, formerly associate moderator of the National Council, and Dr. George LeGrand Smith, formerly superintendent of the Cleveland Congregational Extension Society. Dr. Smith was recently taken seriously ill and has returned to Cleveland with Mrs. Smith.

WEST TAMPA MISSION: The annual meeting of the directors of the West Tampa Mission was held at the mission on February 17th. Rev. and Mrs. Carl H. Corwin served dinner to the members of the board and to the staff of the institute. Rev. C. DeW. Brower presided and was re-elected as president of the board. Most satisfactory reports were given as to the progress of the work with regard to Church attendance and enrollment in the day school and in the work generally. Mr. Corwin reported that he had made 2,175 calls during the year and that the teachers had made 440 calls, making a total of 2,615 calls. We challenge any other Church or institute to exhibit an equal record.

NEW MEMBERS at Gaillards marks the beginning of the pastorate of Mr. Crawford Moncrief, recently called to be pastor and preacher of this fine rural Church of Central Georgia. Mr. Moncrief is owner, manager and editor of the Georgia Post, published at Knoxville, Ga. He is a layman of unusually fine spirit, well thought of by every one in Crawford County, and has been a licensed preacher for the Methodist Church. He was originally a Congregationalist, and has recently united with the Pleasant Hill Congregational Church, at Gaillards, and became its regularly called pastor. Two or three other Congregational Churches of middle Georgia are considering asking Mr. Moncrief to act as their pastor, and it is thought that he may be able to bring these Churches together into another "greater parish" in Georgia.

DR. NEIL McQUARRIE, after putting forth a final effort to make his Church at Columbus, Ga., happy by continuing the pastorate, finally decided he would better leave it in others' hands. The people were loyal, and, with deep regret, very reluctantly let him go. He will return to Stuart, Fla., where he will make his home. It will be remembered that it was four months ago that Dr. McQuarrie was stricken at the close of a Sunday morning sermon and has been steadily regaining health since, but is not well enough to go on with the work he so dearly loved. In connection with the above, it is good to hear that the Church is looking for another pastor. It is also planning to hold a series of revival meetings, beginning Sunday night, March 1st, with Rev. C. C. Hamilton, of LaGrange, as preacher. The Church is also looking toward a reorganization, including a union with the Congregational Church, and possibly other Christian bodies.

SERVICE HYMN BOOK.

This book of hymns and service has been compiled by the Congregational Seminar on Worship for general use in the Churches, and is published by the Commission on Evangelism and Devotional Life. It contains 177 hymns and responses, also responsive readings and a very fine series of worship services, with several pages of prayers, affirmations of faith and other devotional material. The selection of hymns is very well made and is most serviceable for the ordinary Church. It includes several of the more familiar hymns of the so-called "Gospel Hymn" type, and also hymns that have come to be the finest expression of the devotional life.

NATIONAL COUNCIL DIGEST.

Compilation of all the important acts of the National Council of Congregational Churches from the date of organization at Oberlin, Ohio, in 1871, down to the meeting of the Council in Detroit in 1929, has been published under the direction of the Executive Committee of the National Council. It has been compiled by Dr. Charles Emerson Burton, secretary of the National Council. It is very thorough and is the result of exhaustive study and will be of great service to all those who have occasion to trace the development of the National Council or to refer to its actions on any subject over the years. A debt of gratitude is due Dr. Burton for this service to the denomination.

DR. DAY AT CIRCULAR.

Dr. Day spoke in Circular Congregational Church, Charleston, S. C., Sunday morning, February 15th. His thesis was that the two focal points of our own development from our Puritan ancestors, liberty and fellowship were the two essentials in the developing life of other Churches besides our own. While in the early years of American life, the passionate desire for freedom to worship God had built up independency and had finally and fundamentally separated Church and State, yet it was the corresponding principle of fellowship which was now working out a democratic unity in our own Church and bringing a new spirit of unity into the divided members of the Protestant Church in America. His account of the way in which the men of his Church in Bridgeport had organized a successful campaign for membership told to the men's class was an inspiration to undertake something of the same kind in Circular.

Dr. Day also gave a most interesting message to the Plymouth Church (colored) in the evening, telling them of the whole nation-wide work of the denomination to which they are a contributing factor. Dr. and Mrs. Day were much interested in viewing some of the historic and artistic features of Charleston and enjoyed a morning chapel concert of spirituals at Avery Institute.

FOUR CHURCHES UNITE.

Four Churches unite to call Mr. Theodore L. Leverett of Yonkers, N. Y., to the pastorate of the Macedonia Larger Parish, Ga. They are Macedonia Church, Brazelton; Liberty Church, Bowman; Sardis Church, Oxford, and New Trinity Church, Lawrenceville.

The process of union began at the State Conference last October. It was then the pastor-at-large was asked to visit each of these Churches and advise them how to proceed toward a unified program which would result in each Church having a pastor as well as a preacher one Sunday in the month. The recommendation was made early in December by a personal visit to each Church. It was evident that two things were much needed by the Churches. First, a closer, finer local organization, whereby each Church would come to understand itself, its obligations, its opportunities, its possibilities, its relationships to the community and its further relationship with the great denomination to which it belonged.

The second thing needed was a working program, assumed in a strong, dignified way and entered into sincerely and faithfully by each Church. Reorganization was soon begun, and the suggested program vigorously adopted. The trustees of each Church put on a well-planned every-member canvass. The work was thoroughly done by each Church. Result: Fourteen representatives of these four Churches met the pastor-at-large, Rev. Miles J. Sweet, at Hoschton, Friday, February 13th, compared notes, voted to call Mr. Leverett, who is to begin service March 1st. It is a settled conviction of these Churches that no Church can live and prosper without a pastor. They have had good preaching by some very able preachers who have nobly supplied the pulpits each month, but the lack of pastoral leadership and personal contact have been a constant handicap which good preaching could not overcome. With a settled pastor, permanently on the field, it is expected that these Churches will come to vigorous life and strong community influence. The enthusiasm of the representatives at the Hoschton meeting indicates a new life and a determined effort to bring great things to pass.

Another fine piece of work was the organization of these Churches into a "Fifth Sunday Fellowship Club." Mr. James Mahaffey, of the Macedonia Church; Mr. C. L. Butler, of the Sardis Church; Mr. P. J. Gunnells, of the Liberty Church, and Mr. G. A. Brown, of the Trinity Church, were elected a committee, with Mr. Mahaffey chairman, to prepare the first program for an all-day meeting at Macedonia Church May 31st next.

One of the most significant features of this union of these Churches is the fact that other groups of Churches in the Carolinas and Georgia are studying this movement, and it is believed within the year several similar unions will be consummated. It seems a most practical way to secure pastors for each Church, and, as stated above, that is the only way good communities can develop good Churches. Without a pastor, no Church will long make progress.

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to commune or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

THE GREATEST MIRACLE.

One does not have to go to the Bible alone to find miracles. The growth, the influence, the power of Christianity itself is the supreme miracle of all time. Think of it. Not two thousand years ago just a few men and women in Judea, without organization, program, educational or other institutions, accepted the challenge and the commission of Christ to tell the world about Him. Those few men and women were bold and daring enough to believe that this task could be done, and in doing it a different and a better order of things would take place. They believed, these unlearned and untrained men and women did, that love and not force, truth and not error, justice and not injustice, mercy and not might could rule in this world. In the light of such belief they began their missionary task. They began a crusade of righteousness in the name of Him who had been crucified. Today that crusade is the mightiest single factor on this earth. It has changed the course of history and made the world and humanity different. There isn't a nation on earth, nor a tongue spoken among men that is not different and far better than it would have been but for that handful of devout, though daring, dauntless, untutored men and women who took Christ at His word and went forth to bear witness of Him. Take this one instance, and behold what a miracle. When Robert Morrison went to China about a hundred years ago he faced contempt, danger and constant threat of death. He toiled seven years before he had his first convert. He stood, during those years, alone, ridiculed and hated. But today there are more Christians in China than in the whole Roman empire one hundred years after Pentecost. A majority of those in the President's cabinet are Christian men. There is now a Chinese Home Missionary Movement in China dedicated to the task of reaching all China for Christ. There are 500,000 converts to Christ, with six Christian universities headed by Chinese Christian men.

And the miracle that has taken place in China is taking place on a scale equally as marvelous in India, Africa, Japan and the islands of the sea. The supreme miracle of all time is the power of Christianity in the remaking of a world.

MISSION MONTHS.

Our Christian Church calendar gives March, April, May and June to missions. This was done that Easter, the resurrection, the cross and the victory through Christ might be included and emphasized in this supreme task and mission of the Church. Through His crucifixion and resurrection, our Lord was acclaimed by men and angels an all-sufficient Saviour and Redeemer. He is able. He is sufficient. Through suffering and sacrifice He came to victory over all foes. Now is the time of year to emphasize that glorious truth in all the Churches, and before all peoples. To this end He came to the world, and for this purpose was the Church founded. Unless the Church is missionary, is ready, willing, anxious to proclaim to all the world that Christ is risen, and that in Him alone is salvation, then the Church has no excuse for living.

During the four months now before us, the Christian Churches of the Southern Convention have the opportunity and the task of proving to the world that they are a part of the body of Christ, and as such have a mission to fulfill, a duty to perform, a message to deliver. Only through sacrificial service can this be done. These four months will test the validity and prove the power or the impotency of our Churches as no other period of the year will or can. What will be the answer of pastors and people? God help us.

WEAKNESSES OF PROTESTANT CHURCHES.

The Hudson Presbytery of the United Presbyterian Church names two weaknesses in Protestant Churches:

"In the conviction that two of the greatest weaknesses of our Protestant Churches in America at this time are: First, our failure to reach about one-half of the children and youth of the nation with religious education, and, second, our failure to enlist, train and use any large proportion of our Church members in active personal spiritual service for Christ."

It is difficult to decide which is the greater weakness of Protestantism, the failure to give any adequate instruction in religion to the youth or the failure to enlist Church members in spiritual service for Christ. There is one spiritual service that the Church of the present is sorely lacking in, and that is in the service of winning others to Christ. Take our Southern Convention as example the past year. Here in the home land it required 150 of us Christian Church members a whole year to win one person to Christ. This with millions of dollars of Church property at our disposal or to assist us in our work. Not a very good showing at best. Are we very anxious, very zealous in winning others to Christ when, on an average, we require a whole year for 150 of us to win one soul as a recruit in kingdom service?

RELIGION CONFORMS TO EXISTING CONDITIONS.

In early ages, emotion controlled the world. It was the childhood age of the world. Feeling dominated mankind. In the early stages of this country, primitive conditions had not faded out entirely, and emotion entered largely into religious meetings and experiences. Shouting told of new converts and happy hearts. The appeal of sermons was to the emotional nature. People enjoyed religion in that experience, whether in apostolic times or uneducated conditions in society. The old-fashioned protracted meetings were types of the emotional expression of religion. Sermons were plain, biblical, loud and appealed to the heart. Under conviction for sin, penitents fell upon their knees at the altar, cried aloud for mercy, and when relief came arose and shouted for joy, embracing their friends and telling them what the Lord had done.

The second age of religion was belligerent. Nations warred. Individuals quarreled and fought. Duals were common. Arguments were bitter. Co-operation had little place in society. Independence and unfriendliness characterized the age. It developed great energy and effort, but it was selfish in its spirit and practice. The Church caught the spirit of that age and divisions arose and new denominations came into existence. Great leaders were developed, great preachers proclaimed the denominational positions and people grew apart in their religious thinking, worship, and meetings. Each denomination thought it was contending for the "faith once delivered to the saints." The age was more religious than Christian, more contentious than spiritual, more selfish than liberal.

The next period was educational. Education entered into the mind of society, schools sprang up in the form of Sunday Schools, public schools, seminaries, and people came in contact in a new way that changed their attitudes toward one another. By study together, they grew more and more into harmony. Out of this new condition, denominations grew more friendly, and religion grew more co-operative and what is known as practical. The shouting age has passed. The belligerent age is gone. The educational age takes its place. As the emotional age was often wild, and the divisive age was often belligerent, so the educational age was intellectual and skeptical. Education was everything. To be illiterate was to be irreligious. Mind ruled, and education was the religion of many saints. It remains true that religion conforms to the ruling condition of the age.

The last historic age is the financial. We have already entered that period. Money is the controlling factor in the thought, purpose and effort of men and nations today. To have money is to wield influence. To give liberally is to win position in the Church. Religion absorbs the ruling passion of society and conforms to its life. At one period, members of the Church were measured by their expressed emotion; at another time by their advocacy of their denominational position; at yet another by their learning and intellectual standing; and last but not least by their wealth and their money contributions to the Church and its enterprises. A niggardly Church member in this age has no religious standing, and hence no religious value. Religion has produced this great financial age, and religious people must share its money with the Church and its great institutions and benevolences.

The Elon Million-Dollar Campaign.

REPRESENTATIVE MINISTERS SPEAK OUT OF THEIR HEART.

By DR. L. E. SMITH, President Southern Christian Convention.

A committee of the board of trustees of Elon College, consisting of the writer as chairman, P. J. Carlton, Dr. W. W. Staley, Mrs. R. J. Kernodle, Dr. C. H. Rowland, L. L. Vaughan, Rev. S. C. Harrell, Rev. A. W. Andes, and Col. J. E. West, has issued a statement to our ministers, calling upon them to support the college by immediately raising the quotas in their Churches. I feel sure that our ministers will do this, because they know the value of our college.

Below I am giving some quotations from letters that representative ministers have written in the last few days, giving their whole-hearted endorsement to this campaign. I trust that our leaders will read these endorsements, because they mean that Elon has a large place in the hearts of our ministers.

From Rev. H. S. Hardcastle, Suffolk, Va.:

"Any one who wants to know the place that Elon College has in the life of the Christian Church needs only to call the list of the ministers of the Christian Church and to check off the names of those who have either graduated from Elon or who have attended Elon. He will readily see that an overwhelming majority of our ministers are Elon men; furthermore, a list of the members of many of our Churches will show the names of many Elon students, and in a great many instances these Elon students have responsible positions in the Church life and wield a large influence for the things which concern the kingdom. Because of these facts and other facts which might be named, it is to be hoped that the members of the Christian Church will respond as liberally as possible in the effort which is now being made in behalf of the one-million-dollar campaign for the college."

From Dr. G. O. Lankford, Burlington, N. C.:

"Going back to the early years of the college, to the days when it had to struggle terrifically for its very existence, the people of this section, as well as many others, manifested a spirit of real sacrifice in seeing to it that this enterprise did not fail. At that time, many gave their prayers and their means that it might be maintained and that it might go forward to a larger usefulness and service to the youth of our great country. And it may be said that there has not been a year since the college was founded that this spirit has not been in evidence on her behalf. The spirit of loyalty was never more evident than in 1923, when the great fire laid the college in ashes, when great numbers of our people responded to the call for assistance at that time. Even during the past year, notwithstanding the unusual depression under which the country has been struggling, the community has continued its loyal support."

"Now that the college is seeking to continue and to enlarge her service to the youth about us, and to do this is launching in the near future a campaign to raise $1,000,000, our people in every walk of life should feel obligated and impelled to continue their interest, loyalty and support. The college needs us, and we need the college. The community and the college are parts of each other. When the time comes for this campaign, let us be true. Let us not desert our own in the time of her need and in the day of her great opportunity to serve the world."

From Rev. Elwood W. Jones, Havre de Grace, Md.:

"The campaign in behalf of Elon College has my unqualified endorsement. My own years in a college under Christian influences, and the years I have spent in the ministry, years enriched and made more useful through a refined and cultured college training, convince me of the value of the denominational college. My more recent experience as an accredited teacher in standard training schools, a period of five years, gives me great appreciation of Elon College's fine course in religious education."

From Rev. R. L. Williamson, Winchester, Va.:

"I heartily endorse the action of the Southern Christian Convention authorizing the raising of a million dollars for Elon College. This fund, when raised, will help the college to render an even greater service to the Church and to the cause of Christian education. I am expecting our people to rally nobly to this most worthy cause."

Rev. W. T. Scott, Salisbury, N. C.:

"To do their most effective work, Elon's leaders must be relieved of some of the impending financial crises which they have had to face every year since her founding. In the million-dollar campaign, the opportunity to do this now opens to the Church, the alumni, and friends of Elon."

"Elon has standardized her faculty and literary requirements during the past eight years; she now deserves a financial standardization. The opportunity to accomplish this comes to us through this million-dollar campaign. To succeed in this will enable Elon to complete payment for her excellent physical equipment and to raise her endowment sufficiently to allow her president, unmolested by these annual and avoidable financial hazards, to devote more of his time and genius to the leadership towards scholarship and character training. Let us respond to our opportunity."

From Rev. J. W. Patton, Elon College, N. C.:

"You are hereby invited to accept the invitation to contribute to the million-dollar endowment fund for Elon College."

"Look not on this as a duty, but as a privilege and an opportunity to do good."

From Rev. W. C. Hook, Winchester, Va.:

"Elon is naturally and of necessity the shrine of our Church in the South. It is here that we prepare our leadership; it is here that we gather for summer schools, conferences and conventions from which we receive inspiration and direction in the various programs of the Church."

"The college represents our laboratory, our library, our workshop, our adjusting agency, our service station, by which we are kept running smoothly and successfully in our whole scheme of affairs, and we must not forsake her in her financial crisis. In fact, the Church that fails to support its educational institution with both its young people and its money soon drops into the line of march toward decay and extinction, and my earnest desire is that every Church shall make an honest effort in the support of this very worthy enterprise."

From Rev. D. R. Moffitt, Coleridge, N. C.:

"In regard to the campaign for the college, I am willing to do what I can in my Churches in the campaign, although times are hard."

Rev. Alfred W. Hurst, college pastor, Elon College, N. C.:

"Elon College has rendered a notable service in the forty years of its history in providing a trained leadership for the Churches of the Southern Christian Convention, both in pulpit and pew. It now has the unqualified endorsement of leaders in the Congregational Churches as a college which they feel is destined to occupy a place of larger usefulness in the life of the United Churches in the Southeast."

"Denominational colleges are facing grave financial problems, and many are being closed for lack of adequate support. Those colleges which survive and receive the generous support of thinking people in the future will be colleges with a unique program enabling them to render a unique service. Elon has that in its program of Christian education which is the unifying center of the entire college program. There is nothing comparable to it elsewhere in the country. Elon has a physical plant and an educational program designed with a definite, clear-cut purpose—the training of Christian leaders for the Churches. With adequate endowment, the college will face a new day of usefulness. The necessary million dollars which is being sought should be provided at once, so as to relieve the college of its financial burden and set the college free to fulfill its primary mission—the building of Christian character. Elon college is the child of faith, vision, sacrifice, and Christian devotion. This very fact should endear the college to all our hearts and cause us to give to the limit for the institution of our heart's desire."

From Rev. R. A. Whitten, Reidsville, N. C.:

"Elon has produced fruitage in the training of ministers, teachers and laymen for Church work which makes its value to the Church incalculable. Their interests are inseparable. A contribution to Christian education today is an investment in the Church of tomorrow. I would, therefore, urge the enthusiastic support of every one in this major campaign to a successful end."

From Rev. B. J. Earp, Harrisonburg, Va.:

"When Elon calls, her friends have always responded. Many have done so at a sacrifice, but they have denied themselves only to be the happier later. When the standardization call came, friends proved their loyalty. After the fire, another proof of our love for Elon was manifested; now the million-dollar campaign for dear old Elon will test the real love and loyalty of her sons and daughters and friends, but we will respond and later be the happier that we did. Our Conference should go over the top. Every ordained minister making report last year was a product of Elon College. I am for the campaign most heartily."

From Rev. M. T. Sorrell, Danville, Va.:

"Notwithstanding the present depression all over our country and the scarcity of money or at least the poor circulation of money at the present, I feel that it has become necessary for the million-dollar campaign for our college to be placed before the people in order to maintain the high standard for which we are proud that Elon has now. I am sure that none of us would be willing for this high standard to be lowered or for the college to lack, if we could possibly avoid it. I feel quite sure if the people will respond as far as they are able, the amount can be reached and the work of our college can be carried on effectually."

"The value of our college to our Churches cannot be estimated in dollars and cents. If we hope to train men and women for the future, who will have our Church at heart and its work, we must train them through our own school. Our Church can only grow and broaden as we train men and women for this great task. If we ever hope to attain to the far-reaching program that our founders had at heart and in mind, when they founded our great denomination, we surely must remember that our educational program will play a great part in this work."

From Rev. M. F. Allen, Newport News, Va.:

"I am glad to add my endorsement to the million-dollar campaign for the college, and to pledge my prayers and my very best efforts toward reaching the goal. Great shall be the reward of the denomination that can point to a well-equipped

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The annual Elon Alumni banquet was held in the Fellowship Hall of Suffolk Christian Church on Friday night, February 27, 1931. Sixty-nine tickets indicated the number present. President Rev. F. C. Lester called the group to order, and Rev. R. E. Brittle led in prayer. Rev. F. C. Lester delivered the address of welcome, and Mrs. Frank A. Holladay responded in befitting words. Dr. J. E. Rawls, head of Lakeview Hospital, was toastmaster, and called on the following alumni and alumnae, who rendered topics announced by the toastmaster: Rev. H. S. Hardcastle, Mrs. Mills Riddick, Rev. J. Cleveland Barrett, Dr. L. E. Smith, and Dr. N. G. Newman. Miss Margaret Corbett presided at the piano for the song service, which was led by Rev. H. S. Hardcastle, and while Mrs. Mills Riddick rendered a poetic number.

Dr. J. U. Newman, a professor in Elon during its entire history, was to have delivered the main address on "Reminiscences," but, to the disappointment of all present, was unable to attend on account of sickness. His brother, Dr. N. G. Newman, by request at the late hour substituted successfully for him, as he graduated in the first class at Elon College. The Philathea Class, taught by Col. J. E. West, served what was spoken of as a delicious dinner, which all seemed to enjoy. It seems, from the Jewish Church before the Christian era, feasts have been enjoyed by group gatherings. The background of all social gatherings is the religious festival. The best in educational, commercial, and social organizations is the religious element of feasting, and it is not found outside of religious sentiments either false or Christian.

On account of time, President F. C. Lester did not deliver his prepared address, but substituted an appropriate extemporaneous speech in place of it. It is hoped that he will furnish his written address for publication in THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

Dr. J. E. Rawls, in the business meeting, was elected president for the coming year.

The occasion was brimful of hilarious enjoyment from start to finish; and it was full also of genuine enjoyment through memories of the past and the renewal of living friendships. It was a campus in a fellowship hall, a commencement in after years, a night of stars and songs that recalled Elon College days. The value of Elon as an institution of learning is not measured by class-work alone, but by friendship, association, service and histories written by the lives of alumni and expressed in banquets and renewed associations.

A picture of this meeting would have been a fine advertisement for Elon, and next year's banquet should have a photographer present to snap the whole group in attendance. Institutions are giving more attention to their alumni, as they have come to realize that they market their alumni in the world's activities. Commencement day is simply the cradle roll in the field of education. The great world outside is the great school, and the examination is not for answers to questions, but for service to meet the requirements of society. A diploma in this school is of much more value than the diploma on parchment from the college.

ELON LETTER.

A large and influential group of sincere Christians have said, in effect if not in language, that a man's life consists in the abundance of the things he believes. There is no doubt that faith fills a large place in the Christian experience. The great Paul said that Christian faith is the real substance of the objectives for which we hope in Christian living, and further, that it is the proof to the believer that the things he aspires to achieve will ultimately be realized. We should not, therefore, under any circumstances, depreciate or under-value faith as a fundamental factor in Christian character. The saints, the prophets, the reformers, the progressives of the kingdom have always exhibited a splendid faith, a faith that comprehended in its grasp their own personalities, their fellow-men, and God. We may well, therefore, emulate those who teach that life consists in the wealth of its beliefs, and we should be anxious to include in our own attitudes this essential quality of the Christian way and program.

However, faith is not the all-inclusive abundance of the Christian life. Even in Paul's day there was dissatisfaction with the tendency to make it the whole of the Christian obligation, and James, reputed to be the brother of Jesus, protests against this view in no uncertain terms. James insists that he will show his faith by his works. He is in his contention the stalwart representative of a vigorous group of Christian believers. These energetic persons think that life consists in the abundance of the things which a man does. Unfortunately, in some instances, those who have believed in works as evidence of the Christian life have not been able to appreciate those who have believed in faith as its foundational principle, and contrariwise it is difficult for the man of devout and trustful faith to comprehend the busy and aggressive activity of the man whose spiritual convictions must seek an outlet in reformatory service. The truth of the matter is found in neither view taken separately and alone. The truth of the situation is found in a synthesis of faith and deeds. We should trust God as if it all depends on Him, and then work as if it all depends on us. There is no question that Christian faith should properly express itself in Christian conduct. It is inevitable that such a dynamic faith as Christianity is should bear fruit in the life of those who have embraced it. Its Founder said that His followers would be known by their fruits, that there would be evidence in their daily living and attitudes of that change of heart which had been wrought within by the sincere and ardent embracing of His teachings.

We speak in these days of Christian civilization. This is as it should be, but we are far from having yet achieved a special order that may be properly characterized as Christian. The realization of such a civilization is the goal of the Christian life on earth, is what Jesus Himself described as heaven on earth, as the kingdom of heaven in contradistinction from the kingdom of God, and the realization of this spiritual kingdom can only be achieved by the wedding together in happy wedlock of Paul's principle of faith and James' principle of works, the welding of these two principles into an indissoluble union, "one and inseparable, now and forever." The social gospel is personal faith expressed in co-operative effort to redeem the world and its institutions, and to render them truly Christian in outlook and influence. This is what we mean when we speak of a college as Christian. We do not mean a "goody, goody" place where prayers are said and converts are wont to be made, though both will be done there, but primarily a place whose very atmosphere is tense with the spirit of the social gospel, a place where young men and young women become motivated in terms of Christian idealism and go forth into the world activated to serve as Christians in whatever vocation they may choose. We mean even more than this—we mean that such a college will send forth as its fruits men and women who will make any calling they may select itself Christian, or who will find another avenue of expressing their Christian good will for the world. When an institution does this, it is the embodiment of the social gospel, is contributing its part to make our civilization Christian, and may itself be properly designated as a Christian college. This is a severe test, but none too severe.

CROSS-BEARING.

"I am crucified with Christ: nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me; and the life which I now live in the flesh, I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me, and gave Himself for me."—Gal. 2:20.

Many times we hear people speak of their crosses, as they call them, such as loss of money, disappointment of plans, sickness, and troubles of all kinds, saying as they do so that they are so hard to bear. But they should not be called crosses, for they have no significance with the cross of Christ. Jesus had the same circumstances to contend with, yet the cross was ever before Him, leading Him on through the Garden of Gethsemane, through Pilate's judgment hall, and up the hill to Calvary. He had no place to lay His head; the plans He tried so hard to have men follow were cast aside and mocked at; sickness of all kinds were ever around Him; and troubles of others were brought to Him and He bore them as well as His own. Did He ever speak of them as crosses? We have no record that He did, so we should not speak of what we have to bear as crosses. Our cross is to put self out of account, even as He did, and then give ourselves over to Him in all that we have and are for His loyal service.

Jesus bore the cross of guilt and shame, bore it that we might be free from sin. Our cross is not full of shame; it is only the yielding of our will to His will. We must do the yielding for man is a free moral agent; God made him so and does not force His way in where He is not wanted. To the stubborn will that wants its own way, God wants to show that His way is best, for He can see what we cannot see. That is our cross: our surrendered will, our mind, our heart; that His will may be done in us; that He may think His thoughts into our minds; that His love may fill and thrill our hearts and overflow to those around us in deeds of kindness and words of cheer. May we say as He said in the garden, "Not my will, but Thine be done."

In Hebrews, Paul speaks of "looking unto Jesus, the Author and Finisher of our faith, who, for the joy that was set before Him, endured the cross." Dr. Adam Clarke, the commentator, says: "It never can in any sense be said of Jesus that He endured the cross in the prospect of gaining an everlasting glory, when He had the fullness of that glory before the world began. It was the joy of bringing back the lost, of lifting up the fallen, of binding up the broken-hearted. For these, 'He endured the cross, despising the shame, and is set down at the right hand of the throne of God.' We may also share in the same joy if we follow in His footsteps, denying self to carry out the will of the Heavenly Father.

"Bane and blessing, pain and pleasure,
By the cross are sanctified;
Peace is there, that knows no measure,
Joys that through all time abide." W.

"THE DOUBLE CURE."

By REV. H. V. COX.

II.

Again, the "double cure" is necessary in order to have the mind of Christ. One cannot have that perfect love with a dual-nature experience, much less the mind of our Lord. For to be carnally minded is death, but to be spiritually minded is life and peace. Yes, the writer has heard the remark by quite a few that they did not have that peace in their soul that they once enjoyed. What had gone wrong with their experience? For "the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end," not only are we to have the peace of God in our souls, but it is to increase, and not decrease. Oh, beloved, the trouble is that they do like the nine lepers did: instead of returning to the Lord for the "double cure," they go away and dry up and die spiritually. But in order to receive this perfect love, one must have a desire to be cleansed from all sin. For our Lord said, "If any man thirst, let him come unto me and drink. He that believeth on me, as the Scripture hath said, out of his belly shall flow rivers of living water." But thus spake he of the Spirit, which they that believe on Him should receive; for the Holy Ghost was not yet given, because that Jesus was not yet glorified. Herein lies the secret of the Christian making the race successful, and not selling out like Esau of old when he gets hungry, for he will then realize that his hope is not of this world, and he will be found to be continually drinking from the "upper springs" in order to stay dead to carnal things and alive to the spiritual. Again the Scriptures tell us the way to keep the blessing is to do like our Lord said, "He that sent me is with me; the Father hath not left me alone: for I do always those things that please Him."

Here is the secret of being kept unspotted from the world, and to be able to stand before the white throne uncondemned. For "Herein is our love made perfect, that we may have boldness in the day of judgment; because as He is, so are we in this world." For Jesus saith unto Thomas: "I am the way, the truth, and the life." "He that hath my commandments and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me; and he that loveth me shall be loved of my Father, and I will love him." And "Because thou hast kept the word of my patience, I also will keep thee from the hour of temptation, which shall come upon all the world, to try them that dwell upon the earth."

It certainly does seem like the hour of temptation, which was to come upon all the world has arrived. But it makes my heart rejoice to know all I have got to do is to keep the word of His (commandments) patience, to stay where I can be kept from the hour of temptations. "There hath no temptation taken you but such as is common to man; but God is faithful, who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able; but will, with the temptation, also make a way to escape, that ye may be able to bear it." While many will go down when they are tried, because they are "drawn away of his own lust, and enticed"; but "Blessed is the man that endureth temptation, for when he is tried he shall receive the crown of life which the Lord hath promised to them that love Him." While the enemies without are many, the worst enemy is within."

As long as the "old man" has place, he will keep Christ from having the pre-eminence, and sooner or later the old serpent will be victor. If the devil can't get at you in any other way, he will come at you through your children. I know a man who had a son that was tried in the courts, convicted and sentenced to the road; but the friends of the father got the judge to let the boy off on good behavior. And the judge said to them: "If the boy gets into any trouble within (I believe it was) two years, he will have to serve his sentence." And he was to bring two good character witnesses to each court to state how the boy was behaving. The boy did fine for a while; then got in more trouble. But when court came on, the character witnesses were on hand to give the boy a good character. One of them was a minister, and the other a good layman. A brother that was at court at the time these witnesses were giving this young man a good character said to the writer: "I can't help from believing that these two men knew that the boy had broken the laws of the country." I said, "Yes, brother, that is bad; but I see a more willful sin than these two character witnesses committed. The one that got them to swear the lie. Here is where the old serpent has gotten many a man, and woman, too. Of course, we parents love our children, and want to do all we can for them. There is such a thing as our children getting where we cannot help them and go with God. Eli, no doubt helped his sons out of trouble when he knew they were guilty, and lost his life. Oh, brother, it will take the "double cure" to keep a man true to God when his own flesh and blood is tried in the courts, to not commit a willful sin.

If you have not gotten rid of that besetting sin that has caused you all the trouble that you ever did have, and the thing that has broken not only God's laws, but the laws of the nation, for Jesus' sake and your own soul's sake, don't delay any longer, but plunge in and be made every whit whole. For we read, "The curse causeless shall not come"; for if there is no cause for a thing it will not happen. In other words, the unchangeable law of cause and effect decrees that back of the curse there must be a cause. Correct the cause and the effect will cease. "We know that whosoever is born of God, sinneth not; but he that is begotten of God keepeth himself, and that wicked one toucheth him not." I know that Satan is powerful, and "as a roaring lion, walketh about, seeking whom he may devour." And yet he is helpless except as we submit to him and his suggestions. We generally hear it put the other way, "Impossible to live without sin." But in this article we declare that it is utterly impossible to fall away if certain conditions are met; for instance, it is impossible to steal until one first thinks and plans along that line. Sin begins in thought; hence, bring into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ. God gives every one

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Secretary.

A PRAYER.

O God, our heart's desire and prayer for the nations is that they might be saved. Saying so, may the Lord's redeemed give their first and best to make it so. We pray, Father, in the Spirit's power, send out Thy Church to succor and save. Why its being, if not to advance! Thou, Father, who givest life and opportunity, reveal unto us Thy holy will and bestir within us the sense of our own high privilege; thus, confidently, loyally, shall we carry forward our Lord's compassionate quest for souls until His judgment fills the earth. In His precious name. Amen.

A BUSY DAY IN PORTO RICO.

My dear Dr. Atkinson:

Sunday, February 1st, was a busy day for me in Porto Rico. You especially will be interested in following my trail on that day, as I visited once again some of the mission stations we visited together nearly ten years ago. I pass this bit from my diary on to you because I believe many of our people will be interested to know of the splendid work I found being done by our small but consecrated force on that hot and unsanitary Caribbean coast in which our field is located. And it surely was hot on that busy Sunday, February 1st—and the mosquitoes! a million (more or less) attacked me when I was doing nothing more harmful than trying to write a letter Saturday night.

On this eventful Sunday, I arose early after a sleepless night under my mosquito net, due (not to mosquitoes this time) to the outlandish noises accompanying the celebration of the anniversary of the Ponce firemen's organization half a block away on the Plaza.

At 8:30 A. M., Mr. Barrett and I started out in that faithful Chevrolet furnished by the women of the Eastern Virginia Conference. (It did another good day's work, I assure you, in spite of the fact that we hit an awful bump that broke its springs and almost broke my neck again. I feel it yet.)

We drove straight east along the shore of the Caribbean through countless cane fields in all stages of harvesting and along that wonderful road lined on both sides with those flamboyant trees. They are not in bloom now, but I enjoyed them just the same in anticipation.

After some twenty-three miles, we drew up in front of our Salinas Church; but only for a moment, for I was bent on another immediate errand. I carried with me two beautiful sprays of roses and ferns from the garden of dear old Dona Delfina Zayas de Rivera, our Bible woman in Ponce. We drove on out from Salinas, winding and bumping along until we reached that little poverty-stricken fishing village, Salinas Playa by the sea, where our beloved Miss Williams so often went. There were the remains of the coconut palms (just beginning to recover from the hurricane of 1928), where Miss Williams so often gathered the children and taught them drawn and beadwork to help them make a living, and taught them, too, out under the palms before the chapel was built, the beautiful stories of Jesus. And there was the little chapel still standing untouched by the hurricane, glistening in its whiteness against the somber of the thatched-roof huts all about, a fitting symbol of the purity of the gospel and the love of this woman of God in whose memory it was built and for whom it stands as a fitting and useful memorial.

And there were the inevitable children, coming from everywhere and nowhere in countless numbers almost ere the car had stopped, some dressed and some in birthday array, but all eager to see and hear.

Into that little chapel we went reverently to place a spray of beautiful cut-roses on the little pulpit and breathe a prayer of gratitude for Olive G. Williams and her life and work. Then back we went to Salinas in time to talk to one hundred and fifty fine men and women and boys and girls in a well-organized and efficient Sunday School. The Salinas Church, well-nigh wrecked by the hurricane, has been splendidly rebuilt—thanks to our good friends everywhere who gave us the hurricane relief and reconstruction funds. But it is still too small, but there is cause for encouragement. The pastor, Roman Romero, seminary-trained and earnest, with his helper, Carmen Perez, have visions of better and still better work. But he must have another room or two to take care of those two classes of bright-faced little folks I saw melting out under the trees. I don't know what they do when it rains.

But we must hurry on. We rush back toward Ponce (Salinas is our farthest point east) to Santa Isabel, where Placido Vasquez and his loyal helpers were busy as bees in a Sunday School numbering one hundred and sixty-seven that Sunday morning—and how they did sing! We laid our other spray of beautiful roses on the pulpit at Santa Isabel and breathed another prayer of gratitude for those great and good friends, Rev. and Mrs. W. H. Martin. Here, too, we heard expressions of joy at the mention of the Martins and Miss Jennie Mishler, and I almost forgot to say that I found at Salinas those who dated their interest in Christianity back in the days when Rev. T. E., White labored so effectively among them.

It was nearly noon now, so we rushed back to Ponce for a hasty dinner at the Barretts'—but our day was really only a third gone. After dinner we picked up Dona Delfina and Inez Correa and took them out to a Ponce suburb, where they spent the afternoon in visiting and in Sunday School work. But we could not wait for that today. We hurried to pick up Mr. Colon, a barber, and his daughter, who are helping in the work at Arus. We took also Miss A. Vasquez and started for Arus, where we left Mr. Colon and took the two girls and a young man from Arus to conduct another afternoon Sunday School at Palyita. But before leaving Arus, let me tell you that that Sunday morning I stopped there to get a picture of the Arus Church and a new Church (Catholic) just across the road. As I did so, the padre, or Catholic priest, rushed into view, symbolizing the determined intention of the Roman Church as expressed in their slogan, "A Catholic Church opposite every Protestant Church on the island." We Protestants must move more rapidly if we really mean to win Porto Rico for Christ.

It was a winding and tortuous road, far off the main highway, back to the little fishing village of Playita. As we approached it, Mr. Barrett said, "There is the most poverty-stricken village in all Porto Rico." I could well believe him. Signs of poverty were everywhere—in the thatched-roof huts set with no thought of order, the occasional razor-back pig and the tiny, under-fed chickens, the old men and women marked forever in their faces with the scars of suffering, suffering, suffering; and the children! children everywhere and already indicating by the hungry looks in their eyes the omen of what lies before them. I asked myself the question, "Why should they suffer so, these children? Why should they have to live like this? What have they done to merit such unkindness?" You know the answer. It comes mighty near lodging in some of our Churches and some of our own selfish hearts.

We left our three young friends to conduct the Sunday School and hurried on to another village in the cane fields, Descalabrado, and once again I was thrilled to see a beautiful little white chapel glistening among the dirty brown huts of the village. Warren, Ind., Church put that chapel there, a witness to their faith in Christ and their desire to share Him with others. Here we found our friend, Placido Vasquez, pastor at Santa Isabel, conducting a Sunday School of twenty-five or thirty boys and girls as happy as could be.

Then back we went to speak to the school at Playita we had left an hour before. They were just closing, and after our greetings, Mr. Barrett asked them to sing their favorite song—forty-nine little bedraggled boys and girls with shining eyes—and how they sang! I did not know Spanish, but no one could fail to know that song. It was, "Brighten the Corner Where You Are."

From here we hurried back to Arus for a few brief words to that school of fifty; then on to Ponce in time to meet Dona Delfina coming from Clausells with a report of forty-four at Sunday School.

A few minutes of rest and a bite to eat and we were ready for the evening service at the Ponce Church. Following our message to an audience of seventy-five or one hundred, Mr. Barrett conducted a Communion service in Spanish, which I could not understand, but I caught the spirit of it reflected in the faces of these earnest and devout Porto Rican people.

After the service it was a joy to meet so many of our workers and to know of their hopes and aspirations. Dona Delfina looks not a day older than she did ten years ago, and is just as active and interested as ever. And the fine young people, including five of the Barrett family, gave one great hopes for the future. Our Porto Rican young people think a lot of Miss Adams and want her to return soon.

I went to my room that night after a walk through the Plaza, crowded with people, conscious of the fact that the only hope for Porto Rico is in just such work as I had seen that day as I visited those half-dozen or more stations which comprise only part of our work. And I felt a thrill of new joy as I realized that from now on we are to work as a part of the new United Evangelical Church of Porto Rico, with still great opportunities for service. It was a busy but a happy Sunday for me in Porto Rico.

MISSIONARY PROGRAM FOR MARCH.

By MRS. W. M. JAY.

Women's Societies.

Service of worship—For the completion of our own conversion.

Map talk on Greece.

Roll call—on Greece.

Frontier Americans.

Prayer.

Please send in your news items, for we are all anxious to hear about your good work. This means all the societies in the Southern Christian Convention. The "World's Day of Prayer" is over, and every society has had a splendid service and quickening of spirit. Tell THE SUN readers about it.

Young People's Societies.

Program of Chapter V, "Islam in India."

I. Business.

II. Study period.

1. Leader remarking that in the last chapter we saw something of the gods and the religious life of the Hindu side of the house of India, and that today we are approaching the Moslem side. The leader may use as much of the introductory section (pages 67-70) as may seem desirable.

2. The great mogul dynasty—Its accomplishments and failure (pages 70-74). A member.

3. A Moslem custom—By a girl member.

4. "There is No God but Allah" (pages 75-78). A member.

5. Leader use the word picture, "Brothers" (pages 79-81), as the transition from study period to worship program, bringing out the fact that the Mohammedans are nearer the Christian ideal in that they recognize only one God, but that their mistake lies in the fact that they have misplaced Mohammed, and that they do not have the light of peace which Messiah brings to the hearts of men. That it is his spirit only which will bring peace and real brotherhood to the people of India.

III. Worship service. Theme: "Christ the Messenger of Peace."

1. Old Hundred.

2. Call to worship—"Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men" (Luke 2:14).

3. Hymn, "Hark! Hark! My Soul!"
4. Scripture—The Beatitudes (Matt. 5:1-12).
5. Prayer—That the peoples of India and the peoples of America "may know Him, and the power of His resurrection and the fellowship of His sufferings." That we may set a higher valuation on our most "priceless possession"—our Christian religion!
6. Offertory—"Follow the Gleam."
7. Hymn: "Speed Away, Speed Away."
8. Benediction.

Willing Workers.

I. Worship period. Topic: "The Treasure Hunt." Theme: "Friendship."

1. Call to worship. A man that hath friends must show himself friendly: And there is a Friend that sticketh closer than a brother" (Prov. 18:24).

2. Song: "Jesus is All the World to Me."

3. Scripture: "Friendship of David and Jonathan (1 Sam. 18:1-3, 20:4; 2 Sam. 1:26). Have this given by three members.

4. Prayer: O God, our Father, help the Churches in Arabia, Persia and Turkey to know about Jesus. Show us how to be friends to them, and may many more of them give their hearts and lives to Jesus. Amen.

5. Have member read following poem:

The Little Trail of Being Friends.

"The little trail to being friends

Is one that never, never ends.

Upon it you may travel far

To where the nicest places are!

It holds for you great vistas fair,

And sunlit fields and fragrant air,

And better views around the bends,

The little trail to being friends."

6. Offertory: Have pianist play softly, "I've Found a Friend."

II. Study period. Chapter VI, "The Treasure Hunt."

1. Leader briefly review the chapters studied leading up to last chapter. At the close a discussion may be held, based on question (page 27), "Suggestion for Leaders," which accompanies "The Treasure Hunt."

2. Song: "I've a Story to Tell to the Nations."

3. Benediction. We have made many new friends. We have tried to prove our friendship by learning all we could about the countries and peoples. Our Father, as we think about these people we want them to have the joy of loving Jesus and following Him. May we do our part to help them. Amen.

NEWS ITEMS

Mrs. W. A. Warner sends in an interesting bit of information about the doings of the Hopewell Christian Church. Their Missionary Societies are all busy at their year's work, with regular meetings and the study of the study books, "A Cloud of Witnesses" and "India on the March." Much interest is being manifested and they are encouraged with the progress. On New Year's Eve the societies gave a public program on stewardship, using Scripture and other readings concerning the four-point spiritual life.

Recently the Young People's Society gave a missionary pageant which was greatly enjoyed and an inspiration to all.

NOTICE.

It has been found necessary to change the time of meeting of the midyear conference that meets with Bethlehem Church to Thursday, March 12th. We hope all of our Churches will send delegates. Don't forget to notify Miss Ella Pickering, Broadway, Va., if you wish dinner prepared for you. The meal will be served at moderate cost.

ADVENTURES IN YOUTH FELLOWSHIP

"Youth at Work in the Church."

JEWEL TRUITT, Editor, Waverly, Virginia.

OPPORTUNITY.

By ROBERT LEE HOUSE.

(The writer of this article is a graduate of Duke University and a minister in the Eastern North Carolina Christian Conference. He is one of the leading young people in the Southeast Convention, and is departmental secretary of publications of the Youth Fellowship and president of the Eastern North Carolina Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention.)

One must qualify for the better things of life. Some are born with opportunity, some have it thrust upon them, others qualify for it. No one would dare hope for an opportunity as a physician unless he had studied medicine. One must qualify in order to enter high school and college. Many years of practice were required to qualify Babe Ruth for an opportunity in the big league. Only a short time ago E. Stanley Jones had an opportunity to become a bishop. Some insignificant preachers doubtless wondered why they were not the lucky person. But opportunity is not so much a matter of luck as it is of pluck and preparation. The world is full of opportunities, like the sound-waves of the radio, which can be enjoyed only under certain conditions. The wind may blow, but we are helpless until our sail has been set.

The rich young ruler might have had a glorious career with Jesus, for Jesus loved him; but he didn't qualify for the opportunity. Those disciples who went to sleep on the watch had an opportunity to enter the holy of holies in communion with Christ, but they did not qualify.

Some people wait for an opportunity to knock at their door; others make bold to knock on the door of opportunity. Are you going to wait for an opportunity to find you, or are you going out to find the opportunity? A dog might sit and wait for a rabbit to come by, but any good dog knows that is not good psychology. If you want a thing, then by all means go where the particular thing is supposed to exist. If you are looking for water, you don't go to a desert. If you are interested in spiritual matters you go to the Church rather than to a dance, to a deacon of the Church rather than a criminal, to a preacher rather than a bootlegger. If it be that opportunity is at the top of the ladder, then begin to climb!

There is a popular misconception that opportunity comes only once. The statement is familiar. "Well, I had my chance and didn't take it." Too often we recognize an opportunity when it has passed, and fondly gaze in the direction where it has disappeared, failing to realize that others will follow. Having lost an opportunity, we fail to recover it or even look around for another. Usually, a mistake is merely a neglected opportunity. But all make mistakes. God gives a man the second chance; yea, the third, and as many as he wants. Where there is life there is hope, and it may be that there is hope beyond life. "Behold, I stand at the door and knock." The divine opportunity knocks at the door of your heart, not only once, but continually.

It is certainly true that the happiest folks that live are the ones who are helping other people. Perhaps their only pay is gratitude, but this gives a joy that money cannot buy. Greater yet is the joy of seeing the hungry fed, the sick get well, the discouraged made hopeful again, and the lonely and the sinful respond to friendly service.

IF HE SHOULD COME.

"If Jesus should tramp the streets tonight,
Storm-beaten and hungry for bread,
Seeking a room and a candle-light
And a clean though humble bed,
Who would welcome the Workman in,
Though He came with panting breath,
His hands all bruised and His garments thin—
This Workman from Nazareth?"

"Would rich folk hurry to bind His bruise
And shelter His stricken form?
Would they take God in with His muddy shoes
Out of the pitiless storm?
Are they not too busy wreathing their flowers
Or heaping their golden store—
Too busy chasing the hubble hours
For the poor man's God at the door?"

"And if He should come where the Churchmen bow,
Forgetting the greater sin,
Would He pause with a light on His wounded brow?
Would He turn and enter in?
And what would He think of their creeds so dim,
Of their weak, uplifted hands,
Of their selfish prayers going up to Him
Out of a thousand lands?"

—Edwin Markham.

During these weeks just preceding Easter, young people's groups will be wanting to discuss their relation to the Church and how they can give their lives in greater service to the Christ who suffered, died and rose again at Easter-time. At this season of the year the Christ has an especial appeal to youth. He appeals to youth because during the last weeks of His life He exhibited dauntless courage. Such a Christ has a challenge for any youth.

To those young people's groups who are interested in living better lives as Christians, the booklet, "What Does it Mean to Be a Christian?" (10 cents) is of especial interest. In it are outlines for discussions on what it means to be a Christian in comradeship, at home, in play, at school, at work, with money, as well as two general discussions.

Other groups will be interested in studying "Acquainting Youth With Christ" (50 cents). The task of winning other youth to Christ is the richest in results and joy of any task a young people's group may undertake. Do not pass up this opportunity during 1931 if there are young people in your community who do not know the fullness of life in Christ Jesus.

Order "What Does it Mean to Be a Christian" from the Christian Publishing Association, 219 S. Ludlow Street, Dayton, Ohio; order "Acquainting Youth With Christ" from the International Society of Christian Endeavor, 41 Mt. Vernon Street, Boston, Mass.

"Facing North," a book recently from the presses of Richard R. Smith, is written by O. G. Herbrecht. It would make an especially nice birthday present for one of the boys of the family, and is a valuable book for group leaders or anyone interested in youth. Written in language that the boy understands, it carries a veritable atmosphere of woods and camp.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

TOPIC: "My Responsibility to the Church."

DAILY READINGS: March 9, "Duty to Attend," Heb. 10:24, 25; March 10, "Duty to Serve," Rom. 12:3-9; March 11, "Duty to Give," Gal. 6:6, 9; March 12, "Duty to Foster Peace," Rom. 14:19; March 13, "Duty to Help Needy," 1 John 3:16-19; March 14, "Duty to Back Up Leader," 1 Pet. 5:5-8; March 15, "My Responsibility to the Church," 1 Pet. 4:7-11.

Three Thoughts on the Topic.

1. "No one would feel complimented at being called a parasite. The dictionary gives this definition for the word parasite, 'A hanger-on . . . a plant or animal living in, on, or with some other living organism . . . at whose expense it obtains its food, shelter, or the like.' One cannot avoid applying the word parasite to the person who is unwilling to assume any responsibility in the Church. We are every one living off of the benefits and products of the Church. A big daily paper in the city of Chicago gave two full pages recently to pictures of some of the marvelous new Church buildings in the city. The daily paper considered that good advertising for the city. A real estate man always considers a Church an asset in selling property. We have no respect for the young person of training and ability who continues to live off his family when he should be sharing in its responsibilities. We cannot respect the citizen who refuses to assume any of the privileges and obligations of citizenship. Can we keep our self-respect if we live like parasites on the blessings and advantages of the Church and make no contribution in return?"

2. Churches do not run themselves. They have to have workers in them. The Church has generally depended upon volunteer help, which is most desirable because it is based upon consecration and the recognition of the stewardship of life. The Church needs the service of each member. There is a task for all, though all cannot do the same things. We cannot excuse ourselves because others can do certain things better than we. In Matthew 25:28-30, Jesus gave His opinion of those who refuse to do their share because others can do what they do better than they can. All cannot be Pauls and Johns, but some can be Mary Jones and John Smiths; and who knows but that their reward will be just as great as if they were a Paul or a John? We have reason to believe that every act of service will be sufficiently rewarded.

3. "The need of the hour is not more factories or materials, nor more railroads or steamships, nor more armies or more navies, but rather more education based on the teachings of Jesus."

"Statistics of every nation indicate that true religion is the power necessary for the development of its resources, and for its successful continuation. The challenge goes out to every man to support his Church, to take an active part in the religious life of his community, to live according to the simple principles upon which this, the greatest country in the world, was founded three hundred years ago."—Roger W. Babson.

A Closing Worship Service.

Hymn: "I Would Be True" (first stanza).

Leader:

"Could'st thou in vision see
Thyself the man God meant,
Thou never more would'st be
The man thou art content."

Hymn: "I Would Be True" (second stanza).

Prayer hymn: "Have Thine Own Way, Lord."
Mizpah benediction.

Sunday School Lesson

BY REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE.

JESUS AMONG FRIENDS AND FOES.

LESSON XI—MARCH 15, 1931.

GOLDEN TEXT: "Ye are my friends if ye do the things which I command you."—John 15:14.

LESSON: Luke 10:38-11:54.

MARTHA AND MARY.

Martha represents the dominant mood of our modern life as well as of our Western world. She put a premium on activity. She felt that the important thing was doing things. Our modern life is under the spell of this philosophy. The tendency all along the line is to speed things up, to get things done, to be busy. And it is not altogether a false emphasis. An individual and an organization ought to produce something. Life is too precious to be wasted. There is too much to be done. But we should not lose sight of the fact that quality as well as quantity is to be considered when thinking of life. The kind of man that does the work has some significance. Jesus therefore rightly said that Mary had chosen the good part, not the only part or even the best part, but the good part. Those who would do most effective service for Jesus must spend time alone with Jesus. There must be an infilling before there can be much outpouring. One had better be still and know God if he desires to do something for God. Worship and service, meditation and activity should be kept in their proper proportions. Our modern life, with all its hustle and bustle and stress and strain, needs the lesson of this simple story.

HUMAN NEEDS AND DIVINE RESOURCES.

Jesus arrived at some of his greatest truths about God by reasoning from man up and out. "If ye, then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more shall your Heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask Him?" How much more—the emphasis is upon these words. God is above and beyond the highest wisdom and the deepest love in man. It is to be noted, too, that Jesus does not say that God will always give us what we ask for. But He does say that God will give us of Himself. The highest motive in prayer is not seeking things from God, but seeking God Himself. He is to be greatly desired above all that He can give.

A STRONG MAN—A STRONGER MAN.

They accused Jesus of casting out evil spirits through the power of the devil. He replied that He cast them out by the finger of God. And that inferred, said Jesus, that God was stronger than the forces of evil. He who sets himself to walk in the way of righteousness will find that He has One who is stronger above all others. He that is in us is greater than he that is in the world.

THE MENACE OF AN EMPTY MIND.

Nature abhors a vacuum. The mind that is not filled with good and clean and constructive thoughts will soon become the breeding-place of bad and unclean and destructive thoughts. It is not enough to be negatively good. It is not enough simply to put bad things out of the life. It is necessary to take good things into the life. As a matter of fact, the easiest and best way to keep evil thought out of the mind is to be busy thinking good thoughts. And the easiest and best way to guard against bad actions is to be busy doing good things. Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good.

OUTSIDE OF CUP AND INSIDE OF LIFE.

The Pharisees were very careful about the details of the washings of cups and vessels which they used, not simply as a matter of sanitation, but as a matter of ceremonial cleanness. Jesus suggested that it was far more important to keep the inner life clean than simply to give attention to the outer forms and ceremonies. Clothes, homes, social position are comparatively trivial as compared with the inner state of the heart. It is from within, out of the heart, that come the things that defile a man. Keep thy heart with all diligence, for out of it are the issues of life.

STRAIGHT, PLAIN TALK.

Jesus spoke so pointedly and directly that the Pharisees knew that He was talking about them. In the verses of this lesson He is trying to emphasize the importance of inner spirit as opposed to the relative importance of forms and ceremonies, and even actions, that do not proceed from the right spirit. It is poor preaching indeed that does not help men to make a personal application of truth to their own lives and reveal to them their needs as well as the divine resources. Ministers and Sunday School teachers are to preach and teach the truth in love.

THE CHURCH IS NOT DYING.

A recent number of the Current History has published an authoritative study on "The Present Position of American Churches," by H. Paul Douglass, formerly secretary of the American Missionary Association, which provides a very good offset to the pessimistic presentation by Charles Stelzle in the same magazine a few months ago. Dr. Douglass says: "There is not a shred of external evidence that the American people are tending to discard the Church. . . . Church establishments today are worth more than three times what they were in 1906. Per capita expenditures for Church work rose from $4.82 in 1916 to $10.22 in 1926. Church membership has increased slightly faster than the population between 1916 and 1926—an increase of thirty-nine per cent for all Churches, with the Catholic Churches lagging behind Protestants in this advance. Though there are two hundred and twelve denominations listed, the few well-established, older faiths still contain over ninety per cent of the nation's Church membership. Not fewer than eighteen denominations actually completed mergers between 1916 and 1926." Dr. Douglass says: "Many thoughtful minds doubt whether the value of the Church is commensurate with its bulk and power. But we should be unwilling to be stampeded in our judgment of the times because ecclesiastics with little perspective and short memories report that Church business is bad."—The Congregationalist.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN

1536 E. Broad Street, - - Richmond, Virginia

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE
One of our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy.

"If thou wilt make the Almighty thy treasure . . . then shalt thou delight thyself in the Almighty . . . and thou shalt make thy prayer unto Him and He will hear thee."—Job 22: 25-27.

MONDAY.

SUBJECTION A CONDITION TO GOOD WORK.

"Be subject to the principalities and powers; . . . be ready for every good work."—Titus 3: 1-7.

These two graces are one. It is remarkable how often the apostles exhort believers to obey civil authorities. Since this is true, it must be a matter of vital importance and consequence in Christian behavior; and there must have been a strong temptation for humans to be disobedient to those in authority over them. At least, we must conclude that this admonition has been given for a good cause.

We all will agree that if we allow free scope to our personal inclinations and appetites we are unfit for anything good, but we slide into vices. We are supposed to do better than this. Paul reminds his people that nothing more than foolish lawlessness is expected of heathen or those who know no law; but, now that we are regenerated and made partakers of God's light and mercy, we have received a loving and meek spirit. Therefore, we must prove our spirit by submission and obedience, and, as Peter puts it, "That with well-doing ye may put to silence the ignorance of the foolish." Therefore, he who does this shows good sense, and does good. He who does not is a worker of iniquity.

Prayer.—Lord, point out to us the royal path of humility and give us strength to follow it. Give us not only the vision, but the courage, to withstand the evil of wilfulness, and save us and the world for Jesus' sake. Amen.

TUESDAY.

NEVER SAY DIE.

"As in Adam all die, so in Christ shall all be made alive."—1 Cor. 15:22.

It is good to realize that "Where sin doth abound, grace doth much more abound." That is to say, "there is more good in the world than there is iniquity." It is certainly true in Christ, for we are able to do all things through Him that strengtheneth us. It is thus that Christ is our resurrection from our death in sin to the life everlasting in Him.

Of a truth, there is much sin of many kinds in this world. It appears that the whole network of humanity is poisoned with it. Super-added to this are the countless transgressions in the life of every human being. When we consider the poison of every sin, who can tell the enormity of it? Yet, the grace of God in Christ is more than all this.

Let us not be deceived by humoring Satanic influences, but obey the Word of God and rejoice in the glory of God.

Prayer.—Dear Lord, we are put to shame in the thought of our waywardness and sin. Help us to surrender to Thy gospel this day, and give us the necessary grace to do so. Help us to lean on Thy free gift of love and salvation and overcome. For Jesus' sake we ask it. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

WAXING OLD.

"When I kept silence, my bones waxed old."—Psa. 32:1-5.

The psalmist meant to say that when he would not confess his sin he was without peace and happiness. We wonder if that is not also true with us! At times we feel somewhat the sting of conscience, but, due to pride, thoughtlessness, worldly-mindedness, etc., we fail to humble ourselves and gradually come to feel all-secure.

In addition to this, is it not also true that we lose our sensitiveness of soul in the lack of soulful exercises. If the body gets no exercise, it stiffens and petrifies—grows old. The lack of religious activity likewise stiffens our spiritual selves into security and uselessness.

Even when this does happen, one is not beyond hope. Forgiveness follows confession. While we are asking, He answers and puts away our sins. Away with the idea which says, "I am no worse than God made me"! Away also with the idea that one cannot accept God's mercy because he does not feel the plan of God's cleansing power. That is the devil's cunning. We can trust God, who has promised to answer while we are calling upon Him.

Prayer.—Merciful God, we confess our transgressions before Thee. Forgive us and let Thy Spirit enlighten us, that we may always fully believe and be saved. Amen.

THURSDAY.

SWITCHING BACK.

"Be careful for nothing; but in everything, by prayer and supplication, . . . let your requests be made known unto God."—Phil. 4:6.

Prayers by the saints, like this before us, God has always caused to be recorded for our sakes. It is a part of his great plan to teach us to come to Him for our wants. When we get off the track, we are not to become discouraged and give up. Turn to Him and get on the right track again. If burdened, we are not to go down beneath the weight, but we are to cast our cares on Him who careth for us. Then instead of keeping sorrow in the heart, rejoice in the Lord forevermore.

However, one thing is needful: seek of the Lord "understanding according to His word (v. 169). We must incline our hearts not according to our own wisdom and inventions, but according to His Word.

Prayer.—Lord, teach us to pray, and quicken us according to Thy Word. Make Thy face to shine upon Thy servants now and forever. Amen.

FRIDAY.

ROMANCE.

"I have this against thee, that thou didst leave thy first love."—Rev. 2:1-7.

The Ephesian Church was full of good works. It was patient, it endured persecution, it rebuked the evil, it condemned heretics; but the glorified Christ missed in it the zeal and joy and wonder of its first love for Him. The romance had gone out of the Church's affection.

How quickly we can tell whether two old married people are lovers still, or have settled down into the boring routine of married life! This leaving of one's first love is perhaps life's commonest tragedy. It is a tragedy born of a thousand little heedlessnesses, perhaps on both sides. And it is absolutely unnecessary.

So when Christians leave their first love for Christ; it is because they are not enough with Christ. They do not do enough for Christ. They forget His benefits. They do not praise Him to others. Their mind does not dwell on His beauties and glories. The Son of God has gone forth to war, but they are not following in His train. No wonder the romance has left their religion.

Prayer.—Jesus, Lover of our souls, we treasure Thy love above all possessions; we prize it above all opportunities; rejoice in it all the day long. We meditate upon Thee, we are proud of Thee, we march in Thy ranks with our heads held high. May the romance never go out of our Christianity, Jesus, Lover of our souls! Amen.

SATURDAY.

MONEY IN THE MOUTH.

"Every man also to whom God hath given riches and wealth, and hath given him power to eat thereof . . . this is the gift of God."—Eccl. 5:10-20.

A boy on Cape Cod received a silver quarter of a dollar to purchase admission to the movies. On his way to the theater he stopped to play football with some boys, putting his quarter into his mouth for safekeeping. In the rough tumbling of the game, he got a jolt which caused him to swallow the coin. That put an end to his plans for the movie.

Money is a good thing, if it is in the right place; in the wrong place, it is a very bad thing. Only when wealth is recognized as the gift of God, only when it is used as God wants it used, does it become food for the soul, ministering to eternal life. There are many rich men who eat and drink, expecting for the morrow nothing but death. There are other rich men who eat and drink as at the Lord's Communion table. Which shall it be with us?

Prayer.—Giver of all things richly to enjoy, we want no wealth unless Thou dost give it, and we want it only in the way Thou dost give it, and to be used with Thee. Direct us, we pray Thee, in all our earning, all our receiving, and all our spending, for the silver and the gold are Thine. Amen.

SUNDAY.

FOOLS TEAR DOWN.

"Judge not, that ye be not judged."—Matt. 7:1-6.

Once for two years a theological student wrote criticisms of the sermons preached by his fellow-students. His criticisms were brilliant, sharp, searching, and even those whose good opinion of themselves suffered were compelled to acknowledge that they were just. The critic all this time had a weakness of the throat which prevented his preaching any sermons that might be criticised in their turn, but at last he was able to preach a trial sermon, and in it the brilliant critic of others broke down completely! He himself admitted it. "I see now," he said, "that any fool can tear down a palace, but it needs skill and wisdom to build a hut."

Tearing down is easy—about the easiest thing in the world. All we have to do is to remove the underpinning and gravity will do the rest. Building up, on the contrary, has gravity against it, all the forces of the natural world, and it is anything but easy. Let not our foolish ability to destroy palaces blind us to our childish inability to build even a hut.

Prayer.—Infinite Architect of the universe, Thou divine Builder, teach us Thy patience, instruct us in Thy charity, enable us to rear worthy structures toward the sky. Help us into the love that thinks no evil, but humbly and gladly believes all good of our fellow-men. In the name of Thy Son. Amen.

REV. JOSEPH W. FIX, Preacher.

TRUST IN THE LORD.

BY REV. J. W. FIX.

"Trust in the Lord with all thine heart, and lean not on thine own understanding."
—Prov. 3:5.

Man is a dependent creature. As a baby, he depends upon his mother for food and care. In maturity, he depends upon those about him for advancement and the development of society. In sickness, he depends upon a physician for treatment. At the close of life, he depends upon the minister and mortician for burial. But, back of all of his dependence upon his fellow-man, he is dependent upon God for life and guidance. At any chosen moment, God may stop the heartbeat or cause physical disaster to destroy him. The goodness of God is evident by His tolerance and goodness toward those who are slow in acknowledging Him.

Many there are who are unhappy today. Their lives are marked by greed, malice, selfishness and worldly attainment. These people do not realize the sublime fact that in all things God is supreme, and from His bountiful hand cometh every good and every perfect gift of life. For such people, the writer of Proverbs has a message in which he seeks to bring mankind into a closer fellowship with God. In the third chapter and fifth verse he stimulates him to have faith in God, saying:

1. Trust in the Lord with all thine heart. Here the wise man of old is saying that the children of God need, above all else, to trust in God and to have faith in the one who created us and who knoweth our frame, and to remembereth that we are as dust is a mark of wisdom.

We turn to the prophet Isaiah and read that God will keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on thee, because he trusteth in thee (Isa. 26:3-4). On this subject the psalmist has much to say. Listen to him admonishing man to "trust in the Lord," with the promise that, "verily he shall be fed."

Faith, such as man needs, is like a coupling which attaches the car to the engine. All the power, speed and momentum of the locomotive then becomes transmitted to the cars.

"With reason's eye we seek out God

And catch occasional glimpses of His face;
But when we cannot see at all, faith comes,
And we trust Him where we cannot trace."

In the text the writer of Proverbs admonishes men to trust the Lord with all thine heart. The value of whole-hearted trust in Him is illustrated by a story of two men, one a poet and the other an artist, who long ago examined a painting by the great Poussin, representing the hearing of the two blind men of Jericho. The artist asked the poet, "What seems to you the most remarkable thing in this painting?" The poet replied, "The grouping is fine and the coloring is excellent. The face of the Master is magnificent, and truly I say that the entire work is superb." "But," said the artist to the poet, "look on yonder steps from whence came these men to be healed, and you will behold a discarded cane. Why," said he, "the blind man sat for days and days on those steps with cane in his hand; but when he heard that Christ was nearby, he left his cane and, in faith, ran to Him. He knew he would no longer need a cane. Faith in his Lord would be sufficient to uphold him all his days."

He was right. Too often we hold on to canes and crutches and other means of self-help, when all we need to do is to "trust in the Lord with all thine heart." In this connection, may the words of Frances R. Havergal ring in our ears as they sing us to a life of true-hearted, whole-hearted surrender to Him.

"True-hearted, whole-hearted, fullest allegiance!
Yielding henceforth to our glorious King.
Valiant endeavor and loving obedience,
Freely and joyfully now would we bring.

"True-hearted, whole-hearted, Saviour all glorious!

Take Thy great power and reign Thou alone.
Over our wills and affections victorious,
Freely surrender and wholly Thine own."

2. Lean not on thine own understanding. "It is better, "sings the psalmist," to trust in the Lord than to put confidence in man." "Some there are who trust in horses and chariots, but, as for us, let us trust in God rather than in man." "He that trusteth in riches shall surely fail, but the righteous shall flourish as a branch" (Psa. 11:28). Indeed, saith the psalmist, "He that trusteth his own heart is a fool."

The prophet Jeremiah writes concerning the sin of Judah. The Lord saith to them, "Cursed be the man that trusteth in man and maketh flesh his arm. He shall be like a heat in a desert and shall inhabit parched places of the desert."

It is unwise to lean on thine own understanding or to trust in the decisions of men. Man's mind is subject to error, for it is finite and limited; but God is infinite and perfect. Many of the outstanding characters who live and move and have their being throughout the pages of sacred literature are men and women who trusted in the Lord with their whole hearts and leaned not on their own understanding. The famous gallery of saints so vividly pictured in the eleventh chapter of Hebrews is composed of men who trusted in God rather than in man. Let us view some of them.

1. It is observable that God has not thought fit to say anything of the faith of our first parents, for He did not enroll them in the list here recorded as individuals of great faith. It would be interesting to know just how He regarded them; but suffice it to observe the faith of one of the sons of Adam and Eve, whose name was Abel. Of all the sons of Adam who lived and who died in faith, Abel stands foremost as an example for the Hebrews to follow.

After the fall of man, God opened a way for a return unto Him. Cain, the brother of Abel, was not willing to trust God or make such an offering; but through faith Abel brought the firstlings of the flock unto God. God had respect for Abel. Indeed, it is pleasing to God to behold such examples of faith as exemplified in the lives of men like Abel, for without faith it is impossible to please God.

2. By faith, Noah, being warned of God of things not seen as yet, moved with fear and prepared an ark to the saving of his house, by which he condemned the world and became heir of the righteousness which is by faith.

God usually warns sinners before He strikes; and where His warnings are slighted, He usually strikes the harder. We know not how God spoke to Noah, but we do know that He chose him to prepare an ark for the saving of those who were obedient unto His voice. Noah leaned not on his own understanding, but through faith in an unseen God prepared the ark that saved all of God's obedient children. Because of his trust, he became an heir of the righteousness of Christ.

The faith of Abraham is here recorded. God said unto him, "Get thee out of thy country, and from thy kindred, and come into the land which I shall show thee." This call, which was answered on the grounds of faith, led Abraham to be converted from idolatry of his father's house. By faith he answered a call from sin to inherit a land of riches and promises. Abraham yielded implicitly to the call of God.

Again the faith of Abraham is portrayed when the word of the Lord said unto him, "Take thy son, thine only son, Isaac, whom thou lovest, and get thee into the land of Moriah and offer him there as a burnt offering upon one of the mountains where I will show thee." Take thy son—not one of the beasts of thy pasture, but thy son, whom God gavest thee through faith of Sarah thy wife. Thus a greater trial was never placed on any human being than that on the father of Isaac. Because of the fact that he acted on faith and leaned not on his own understanding, God showed his mercy and rewarded Abraham by allowing him to keep his son.

EVANGELISM.

There was a meeting of American evangelists held recently at the Moody Bible Institute, Chicago. Over a hundred men and women were in attendance upon that gathering. These same are permanently in the field. They consider themselves among that class of Christian workers which the Bible is pleased to call evangelists. They are having their difficulties. Evangelism is suffering hard sledding. These leaders doubtless have bewailed the situation, as others, who know the day when evangelism brought the most enjoyable periods of the year to the local Churches. They have no solution for the problem of evangelistic depression other than that which is commonly accepted by the traditional element of the present-day Church. Time goes on. Old methods pass away. Old passions burn out. However, let it be remembered that the same urge and the same passion for souls and the same need for salvation continues, no matter how the method may change. If group evangelism passes away, then the Church will lose one of its most useful means in reaching adult life through the preaching of the world and pulpit ministration.

The spiritual clinic may have its place, and will doubtless increase in value, but the work of saving the world can never be accomplished by dealing with men personally and by plucking them one by one as brands from the burning. God help us to see that if evangelism as the Church has known it in the past hundred and fifty years passes away, we shall lose ourselves in the wilderness of ritualism. Clinical methods cannot reach the multitudes. There cannot possibly be a substitute for mass-evangelism which operates under the direction of the Holy Spirit. —Christian Advocate.

BRANCHES OF METHODISM.

The religious census, compiled by the United States Bureau, shows the following different branches of Methodism organized into separate denominations, with the number of members: Methodist Episcopal Church, 4,740,643; Methodist Episcopal Church, South, 2,654,833; Methodist Protestant Church, 191,495; Free Methodist Church, 40,437; Wesleyan Methodist Connection, 21,910; Primitive Methodist Church, 11,990; Congregational Methodist Church, 9,691; New Congregational Church, 1,229; Reformed Methodist Church, 391; Holiness Methodist Church, 459. Colored branches of Methodism—African Methodist Episcopal Church, 650,000; African Methodist Episcopal Zion Church, 456,813; Colored Methodist Episcopal Church, 202,713.—Richmond Christian Advocate.

power to do this. Avail yourself of it. We hope that no one will get the idea that we are teaching that old heresy, "Once in grace, always in grace"; or, in modern language, "eternal security."

"Every branch in me that beareth not fruit he taketh away." Those who teach this fallacy, "eternal security," go to one of two extremes, namely: they set aside man's free moral agency, which leaves him a mere machine, or they go to the other extreme, and make God responsible for the salvation of a man without his co-operation. They presume on the love of God, assuming that He decrees that one shall be eternally saved, irrespective of his behavior.

But what saith the Scriptures? It says, "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father, which is in heaven." What is the will of the Father? He wills not the loss of any, but that all should come to repentance. And again, "This is the will of God, even your sanctification." Did it ever occur to you that our Blessed Lord Himself was not fully equipped to preach until he was baptized with the Holy Ghost. "The spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath anointed me to preach the gospel."

No marvel, then, that our Lord said to the disciples after he had told them that their names were written in heaven to stay in the upper room, "Behold, I send the promise of my Father upon you; but tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem until ye be endued with power from on high." "For John truly baptized with water; but ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost not many days hence." "Ye shall receive power after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you." What was this power to be given them to do—"Be witnesses unto (Jesus) me." This clearly explains why only a few are found to be "earnestly contending for the faith which was once delivered unto the saints."

Isn't it high time that we were bestirring ourselves, and get beyond just singing, "Be of sin the double cure, save from guilt and make us pure," and launch out into the deep and cut all the shore lines, and lift up the flood-gates of your soul, and the King of glory shall come in.

ELON COLLEGE

AN ACCREDITED COLLEGE*of theCONGREGATIONAL CHRISTIAN CHURCHES OF THE SOUTHEAST

ELON was founded to train Christian leaders for the New South.

ELON has done its task well—one graduate in seven being in the Christian ministry. The other six express Christian leadership in the various professions and vocations. Experience teaches that spiritual leadership must be indigenous.

The South is now a New South ready for an inclusive Church, the type of Church for which Elon has stood for forty years and for which she is prepared to produce capable leadership.

With no Church in the community, save the College Auditorium, ELON has practiced Christian Union for faculty, students, and community for four decades.

Its contribution to Christian Education is nationally known and approved.

Its Christian Education Building, providing laboratory facilities for religious leadership training, is unique and is the first college building of its type in the world.

ELON confines itself to undergraduate liberal arts work with that religious emphasis which befits the Christian College.

In ELON the Congregational-Christian Church has an asset of marvelous hopefulness.

The South needs her Yale, her Oberlin, her Carleton, her Pomona for the intellectual leadership of the United Church. Many regard ELON as strategically located and spiritually endowed to become such a center of illumination and leadership training.

McCOLLUM.

Frank Vance McCollum was born May 23, 1903, and died January 30, 1931, age 27 years. He was a member of the New Lebanon Church, where his funeral was conducted by the writer on January 21, and his body laid to rest in the Church cemetery. He was a son of the late Monroe McCollum. He leaves his wife, who before marriage was Miss Ludie Pearson; two small children, Edgar Vance and Geraldine; his mother, Mrs. Monroe McCollum; four sisters and eight brothers, besides a number of other relatives and friends.

"Now we see through a glass darkly." Until we reach the perfect day may our sorrowing friends bow to the will of Him who doeth all things well.

ANDREWS.

Mrs. Elizabeth Catherine Andrews died February 14th, at the age of 79 years, 6 months and 22 days. She was the widow of J. A. Andrews; seven children, three daughters and four sons, three step-children, thirty-two grandchildren and two great-grandchildren survive. Funeral services were conducted from Apple's Chapel Christian Church on the evening of February 16th, in the presence of a large congregation of relatives and friends, and her body was laid to rest in the Church cemetery.

Sister Andrews united with Apple's Chapel Church at an early age and remained throughout her long life a loyal member. She died with a victorious faith in her Lord. Her testimony before going was that she welcomed the summons to be ushered into the land of the blessed. May the fruit of her long Christian life bear an abundant harvest for the kingdom of our Lord.

CHURCH SCHOOLS.—

"If unused schools were opened to the 15,000,000 adults possessing the barest education above an ability to read and write, thousands of unemployed teachers in turn would be given work. Also attention of the public would be nearer." If all the Church schools were used as were the synagogues among the Jews to educate young and adults for a thorough understanding of the Bible, we would have more people prepared for active service in religious activities.

EGYPTOLOGIST DIES.—

Dr. John Baikie, widely known Egyptologist, died at his home in Lasswade, Midlothian, February 6th, at sixty-six years of age. Dr. Baikie was extension lecturer on Egyptology at Oxford University, and had written many books dealing with ancient Egypt as well as the Near East. On a visit to the British Museum, it was my privilege to see the Rossetta stone on which a decree of a king of Egypt was engraved in Arabic, Greek and Egyptian languages, from which scholars first learned to decipher Egyptian hieroglyphics and made possible the work of Egyptologists.

LENTEN SERVICES.—

The Roman Catholic, the Episcopal, and the Lutheran Churches, with their traditions of Lenten observance, are, in our large cities, naturally giving the season most attention, but many of the evangelical Churches are planning and holding special services. Regardless of the source of this custom and practice, it would be a blessing for all the evangelical Churches to emphasize a deeper spiritual life and spiritual preparation for the Easter season. In many instances, it would be well to plan for a series of evangelistic meetings to follow Easter as a time awakening new life.

JAPANESE IN NEW YORK.—

It is stated that not less than 3,000 Japanese travelers, men of means who often have their wives with them, pass through New York City every year. Also some 500 professional, official and business men from Japan are living in the city. Seventy per cent of them are less than thirty years old. The most choice young men are sent here by government agencies, banks, steamship lines and industrial firms. After staying in this country a year or two they go to London or some other European city, and finally return home to become leaders of the affairs of their country.

UNEDUCATED ADULTS.—

"America today has probably 15,000,000 who cannot read well enough to follow directions in manuals issued by their employers," L. R. Alderman, of the Office of Education, stated recently.

The old notion that adults cannot learn has proved fallacious. Hundreds of thousands of unskilled workers have been dropped from the pay-rolls. It is possible for them to be trained in a short time for some useful occupation. Untrained adults in Christian education can be trained in a short time to do skillful service in this field, and every Church should have a training-school or class for Christian service.

CHURCH SECRETARIES.—

During the Pastors' Institute in Minnesota and other contiguous states, an interdenominational conference was held for Church secretaries. A considerable number of young men and women assembled for the meeting to study the problem of correct Church records and statistics, with a view to better preparation for their work. So far as is known, this is the first meeting of its kind ever held. It would be a fine thing if such an institute for Church secretaries should be held in connection with our Chautauqua to train secretaries in service and young people for such service. A course in statistical methods and instruction in making reports would greatly improve the records of our Church and give much-needed statistics.

OVERSUPPLY OF MINISTERS.—

Speaking before the institute held for ministers at Garrett Seminary, President C. F. Eislen predicted that the oversupply of ministers would compel theological seminaries in the near future to strictly limit admissions. The present enrollment at Garrett, he said, was too large for current demands, and this fall admission will be greatly reduced. Two factors are cited by the president as causes of the oversupply of ministers. First, the merging of the smaller Churches in rural districts, and the second, the return of foreign missionaries who seek pastorates at home. He might have added a third, which is the number of short-cut seminary courses and the admission of ministers to fields of service without adequate preparation.

UPPER ROOM.—

Just before Pentecost the one hundred and twenty disciples were assembled for ten days in prayer, expectancy and hope of being endued with power from on high in fulfillment of the promise of the Father, and on the day of Pentecost the Spirit came in great demonstration and power. Three thousand souls were converted and added to the Church. A pastors' upper-room meeting in preparation for the evangelistic campaign would result in great good to the pastors themselves, to the Churches to which they minister, and to the cause of the kingdom. Why cannot each conference devote such attention to the work of the kingdom? It worked in the first century of the Church, and it will work in the twentieth century.

INSTITUTE FOR MINISTERS.—

The Methodists of the Northwest are to hold an institute for pastors this week, under the leadership of the home mission board of that denomination. All pastors are invited to attend. The program will deal mainly with the city Church problem. Such an institute for the ministers of the Christian Church would be helpful to the entire Church through the study of all phases of the missionary problem in the home and foreign fields. This is a day of institutes and conventions for the study of every phase of Church work in the progressive Churches. Duke University has just closed a two days' missionary institute on missions, with speakers from their mission boards and the foreign fields.

HOCKING ON "HUMANISM."—

The Causey conferences at Oberlin College bring outstanding men of liberal attitudes to the campus twice a year. The themes usually discussed are on economics and sociology, but this year (February 12-13) the conference took as its theme a religious topic, "Religion as Resource." The four speakers were W. E. Hocking, Rufus M. Jones, Justin Wroe Nixon, and Kirby Page. Dr. Hocking, speaking on "The Inherent Values of Religion," took issue with humanism's creed exalting mankind. "The worth of human life," he said, "is conditioned on the kind of life it is. That human life is of supreme worth per se is the illusion of humanism. I would almost say that the supreme worth of human life is best represented by man worshiping. 'Religion is our relation, through symbolism, to the highest realities of the universe.'"

INSTITUTE ON FAMILY RELATIONS.—

Plans are being developed for an Institute on Family Relations in New York City. This institute would give information in preparation for marriage and the problems of marriage to young people about to be married. The American Hygiene Association has informally approved the plan, and the Social Welfare Commission of the New York Federation of Churches has had the proposal before them, though no formal action has been taken. It seems more than fitting that the Churches should tackle the problem of divorce from this point rather than devote all its energies to the preservation of unhappy marriages. "An ounce of preventative is worth a pound of cure" applies here as it does in other phases of Christianity. Christ's method emphasized beginning salvation with the child, but made also provision for the salvation of the mature from sin. Insight here should give foresight against the social ills of the marriage state.

NOTES-PERSONALS

Two good women sent the Mission Secretary this week $4.00 ($2.00 each), saying, "Accept this offering for missions and credit the same to our Church. We got the money by selling our Sunday eggs." Such a declaration reminds us very vividly of the act of the woman spoken of so significantly and so beautifully in Matthew 26:6-13 and in Mark 14:3-9.

The First Christian Sunday School, one of the smallest schools of Richmond, loaned its orchestra to the First Baptist Sunday School, possibly the largest, on Washington's Birthday. There were twenty-four members of the orchestra present, and a most attractive program was played. The orchestra gives its regular monthly concert at the First Christian Church on next Sunday evening, March 15th, at 8 o'clock.

Instead of offerings to missions through Conference apportionments, our Convention and Conferences and Churches have agreed to take a free-will offering for missions at Easter, or at the nearest service convenient thereto. To this end, envelopes have been sent out to the secretaries of all the Churches, so that the Churches may prepare for this annual offering through which the Church seeks to share the life and the love of our Lord with others.

Rev. A. P. Hurst, Elon College, N. C., was called to Summerville, N. J., the past week by the death of his eldest daughter, Mrs. Nannie Hurst Fultz. His wife, also his son, Rev. Alfred W. Hurst, brother of the deceased and pastor of Elon College Christian Church, accompanied him, returning to Elon College Friday night, March 6th, after the burial on March 5th. Our sympathies are expressed to these friends and the family in their bereavement.

One of our very faithful and beloved pastors writes: "We are experiencing every opposition the devil can exert, it would seem. Souls are being saved; it has aroused his hatred." That is a thought-provoking sentence. When God's people get busy and in earnest, the devil always becomes aroused and does his best. The statement from our brother's letter reminds one of that sentence from Paul's writings: "A great door is open unto me, and there are adversaries."

Rev. W. T. Scott, pastor United Church, Salisbury, was a visitor at the editorial office, Elon College, the past week. Pastor Scott feels much encouraged, as the Sunday School has more than tripled its membership and the Church attendance is very considerably increased since the beginning of his work in Salisbury. He looks forward to the day when the present plant in the business section of the city can be disposed of and a Church house accessible and adequate can be established.

Rev. G. C. Crutchfield, under date of March 4th, writes: "Last Monday night, February 23rd, we put on what we styled as 'Church Night,' with a fine supper. Rev. G. W. Ports, of the Second M. P. Church, came out and gave us a fine speech. Had a large crowd present and a most enjoyable time. After the supper, we launched a drive to raise the last note and be free of all indebtedness as a congregation, the note being only $1,000. We have not collected all facts as yet, but making satisfactory progress toward our goal. The Lord is blessing and leading, and we are sure He will lead on to success."

From the Missionary Herald, we learn the following about the pastor on the foreign field whom our Suffolk Christian Church is supporting: "Rev. K. Kitano, Jr., pastor of the Sendai, Japan, Christian Church, who has spent several years studying in America, has recently returned home to resume his active pastoral work. While in America, Mr. Kitano met many of our people, and a host of friends on this side will follow his work in the years to come with renewed interest and prayers."

The following very interesting item comes from the Missionary Herald regarding the merging of our forces on the foreign field: "Dr. Fred Field Goodsell, executive vice-president of the American Board, recently asked a number of American Board secretaries and other foreign mission leaders connected with the board to name the ten missionary achievements of the past year which they considered of most news value, and without exception the merger of the foreign work of the Congregational and Christian Churches appeared in every list. This is most significant and should give us new courage as we go forward in this great experiment in Christian union."

Our pastor, deeply interested in the growth of his own congregation and the enlargement of the kingdom of our Lord, writes: "I have distributed about 100 copies of the 'Guest Book,' and from a number of sources I am receiving good reports as to the interest and value of the book. We are having many delightful visits in our own home over these people (the guests of the book coming to us from twenty-eight mission fields), and our whole family is enjoying the experience." If all our pastors cultivate such a spirit and create such an interest in their own homes as this one, we shall witness growth and enlargement as well as a deepening of the spiritual life of our Church membership throughout all our borders.

The Sunday School Times publishes the latest Sunday School statistics: "Number of Sunday Schools in North America, 159,817; number of officers and teachers, 2,179,312; number of pupils, 21,851,027." This is for North America only. Numbers enrolled in other countries are: Central America, 20,930; South America, 170,855; West Indies, 188,694; Europe, 9,317,750; Asia, 1,567,382; Africa, 789,658; Malaysia, 108,624; Oceania, 880,430. There has been an increase in Sunday School enrollment since 1924 of 4,594,213 pupils. Surely the lines of the Sunday School have gone out to all parts and are binding the youth of the world to Him, who said: "Suffer the children to come unto me."

A good friend, writing approvingly of his pastor and missions, says: "Our pastor has preached on missions practically the entire year. Our prayer-meeting has been turned into a study of the mission book about India; our women are meeting every week or so studying missions. Our Church has had publicity on the subject of missions, and if we do not get our full amount for missions in the annual offering, it will not be on account of failure of publicity or preaching on the subject." One could wish that such information would come from every pastor and Church in the Southern Convention, because it is through missionary message and preaching that the spiritual life of the Church is deepened and quickened, souls are born into the kingdom, and the Church membership is increased.

In the passing to the better world of Dr. Job G. Holland, Holland, Va., on February 14th, as noted by Dr. Jay in our obituary column, one of the very best of our Christian type and kind goes from us. Born and reared by a father who was one of the most beloved of our Christian ministers, this son of his lived up to the very best traditions and teachings of a devout parentage, and in his own life reflected that which is best, truest and most abiding in Christian character and conduct. Dr. Holland loved his Church even as his own home and life, and to it and its enterprises he was loyal, faithful and true, in season and out of season. Not only will the Holland Church and people miss his benign presence and influence, but the whole Church, of which he was a part, is the poorer for his going, except as the memory of a most faithful and loyal son shall cast a halo upon the deeds of love and charity and benevolence with which his life was so filled and adorned.

MISSIONARY SOCIETY MEETS.

The Woman's Missionary Society of the Monticello Church met in its regular monthly session February 13th. There were twelve members present. Mrs. W. F. Burton, the president, presided during the business session.

The program for the evening was under the leadership of Mrs. J. E. Cumbie. The subject for the meeting, "Our Missionary Heroes." Mrs. W. R. McKinney discussed the life of Paul; Mrs. D. C. Michael discussed the life of David Livingstone; Miss Maud McKimney, the life of Ansgar; Mrs. M. C. Faucette gave an interesting talk about Boniface, and Miss Myrtle Rudd a talk about St. Patrick, of Ireland; Mrs. Lacy Wagner gave a reading about Roy Elder, and Miss Virginia Ferguson read a poem about Barnabas. Prayer was offered by Mrs. J. L. Neese.

Following the program, a social was enjoyed. Refreshments were served by Mrs. M. C. Faucette and Mrs. J. E. Cumbie. The society was glad to have their pastor, Rev. J. L. Neese, present for this meeting.

STEWARDSHIP AND THE CHURCH.

II.

THE PENTECOSTAL IMPRESS OF STEWARDSHIP.

In the whole account in the Acts, sharing and giving (and that not alone of one's means) constitute the most challenging point of Holy Ghost pressure. Today perhaps the foremost need of and for the Church is to interpret stewardship in Pentecostal terms of service as it relates both to spiritual values and to the Church's material support and expansion. Evangelization and Christian stewardship retroact, so to speak. The soul caliber that produces greatest evangelistic outreach comes through giving of what we have and are, not outward gifts only but inherent, intrinsic virtues and talents, to make possible the taking of the world for Christ. The Holy Spirit was given, that the Church might qualify for world evangelization. There are qualifications which in portance transcend those dependent upon financial gratuity.

The basis upon which we are each to render material aid to the Church is indicated by God's earliest dealings with the human race. Not that then, or now, God would lay upon any an exacting rule or tax simply for the sake of doing so, but He does it as a means of discipline, resulting grace of which becomes in one a sustaining virtue and an ever-enlarging spiritual experience; also a disseminating, circulating holy example—a legacy divine for all who come after. Lack of a faithfully applied stewardship in all the phases of Christian activity, including, as paramount, proper management and support of the Church, is preventing the Church from being what she ought to be, what the world needs and wants her to be, what she must be before Jesus can come to claim and receive her as His holy bride. CONGREGATIONAL NEWS

REV. E. C. GILLETTE, Editor; REV. F. P. ENSMINGER, and REV. M. J. SWEET, Associates.

REV. CHARLES W. SMITH, veteran Alabama Church-builder, cleaned away the debris from his burned Church at Phenix City, rebuilt a section of the brick wall, and now has the structure under a new roof. His faith and energy are inspiring.

SALISBURY, N. C.: The pastor, Rev. Wm. T. Scott, has announced an interesting series of sermon topics for the Lenten season. They are as follows: "What Shall I Do With Jesus?" "Shall I Betray Him?" "Shall I Deny Him?" "Shall I Condemn Him?" "Shall I Compromise Him?" "Shall I Mock Him?" "Shall I Crucify Him?" "Shall I Glorify Him?"

CHICAGO PEOPLE have found the section of South Alabama near the Gulf of Mexico and of Mobile Bay to be a delightful tourist region. At Magnolia Springs, near Foley, Mr. E. Y. Horder, who was president of the board of trustees of First Church, Oak Park, and had the same birth date as his friend, Dr. William E. Barton, is the leading citizen of the village.

JUDGE R. G. BROWN, a member of the First Congregational Church, Memphis, Tenn., who practiced law in Memphis for over fifty years and was the oldest lawyer in the city, recently passed to his reward. He was a trustee of our Seminary Foundation at Nashville. A Southerner of the South, it was Judge Brown's conviction that our Church was admirably adapted to the Southern temperament.

COUNTRY LIFE ACADEMY: Trustees will meet at the academy Saturday, March 21st, at 10 A. M. There are twenty-one trustees, and it is important business to be done. At noon the trustees will take lunch with the faculty and student body in the academy dining-hall. Dr. William R. Kedzie will be present with President Harper, of Elon College, to make a complete survey of the work and plans of the academy.

SOUTHERN PINES, N. C.: One of the recent sermon topics used by Dr. Elmer Willis Serl was "Waiting for the Sun to Rise." A recent bulletin of the Church had several questions under the heading, "Do You Want to Help?" One of them was "If there is any feature of the work of the Church of Wide Fellowship which appeals to you as being of worth and interest and you would like to help, feel free to volunteer your service."

JUPITER, FLA.: Rev. Frederick Held, the pastor, recently organized a stag supper which was very largely attended, and as a result a Men's Club was organized. Meetings will be held monthly. The effect of this was an evident increase in the number of men attending services and the pastor reported that half of the congregation last Sunday evening were men. The congregations in this Church have been steadily increasing.

A NEW HOME: With the help of people from three of the Churches of his circuit, Rev. M. L. Hargraves, pastor of the Haleyville, Ala., Circuit, recently built a good-sized house as a parsonage. There are seven children in the family, one son and six daughters. All were much interested to work for the new home, but just after they moved into it, the loved mother sickened and died and went to a new home of her own. The family has the sympathy of many friends.

STAR GREATER PARISH, please take notice and prepare for the second fifth Sunday fellowship meeting at Country Life Academy, at Star, March 29th. This meeting will be held under the direction of Dr. J. O. Atkinson, and will, by all signs, be far superior to the last meeting held November 30, 1930. The hour for this meeting is set at 2:30 P. M. Every Congregational Church, as well as every Christian Church, should come with large delegations filled with expectant enthusiasm.

MISS MARGUERITE DAVISON spent her vacation partly in visits to her family at Brighton, Mass., and to relatives in Vermont and Quebec. She reported her area by addresses in and around Boston, in Rhode Island, Connecticut and New Jersey, speaking about thirty times in Sunday Schools, young people's groups, business women's clubs, missionary society, and at Church suppers at district meetings. Her hearers were interested to know of the young people's program being carried on in our Southeast, and were grieved to hear of the economic stress suffered by the people in the mills and on the farms.

MIAMI BEACH, FLA.: The Woman's Association of the Church gave a Spanish garden party on March 5th at the estate of Mrs. Harvey S. Firestone. This was one of the outstanding social events of the season and was largely attended. The Christian Endeavor Society sponsored a moonlight boat ride on Biscayne Bay for the purpose of raising money to send delegates to the young people's conference at Camp Immokales in June. Dr. King, the pastor, has announced the following as his Lenten sermon topics: "Jesus the Working Man," "Jesus' Affirmations," "What Made Jesus Great?" "The Need of a Divine Saviour," "The Joyous Christ," and "Daybreak."

SEC. A. W. SPARKS, who is supply for the present quarter in the United Church of Birmingham, spent a week in visiting the pastors and Churches of the Central Association of Alabama. Secretary Sparks, who was the national home mission secretary, is now associated with Dr. Dana in the rural Church department of the United fellowships. The Churches which were much pleased with his friendly spirit and messages were East View and Mountain Springs Churches, Rev. A. Calvin Nelson, pastor; the Mountain Creek Church, Rev. J. Marion Dopson, pastor; Mount Olive Church, Rev. R. A. MacKay, pastor, and East Tallahassee Church, Rev. James I. Barker, pastor.

CITY BOY SCOUTS have a fine time when they get down to business with their work. The First Church of Memphis has three patrols in its troop, which has had the same assistant Scoutmaster for a number of years. Recently the troop "rallied" another troop from a very large and wealthy Church and in the parish house of the other Church. The boys from this Church had been encouraged by many kinds of rewards, and thought of themselves as sure winners. When the score was announced it was rather embarrassing for the friends of the First Church boys, as the tally was 50-10. Inspection, fire lighting, signaling, wig-wagging, and first-aid were among the tests. Scouting brings city boys into the touch with nature that the older generation had in rural environments.

AVON PARK, FLA.: A Sunday evening forum was recently held at this Church under the leadership of the pastor, Dr. Arthur P. Vaughn. The general topic was "Jesus and Human Fellowship, His Behavior as a Man Among Men."

Among the questions discussed were the following: "How widely was Jesus willing to fellowship with other and different men?" "Was any human need, material or spiritual, beyond Jesus' willingness to sympathize and serve?" "Was Jesus' fellowship with sinners and the ungodly sincere?" "In Jesus' teaching, what is God's attitude towards the willfully degenerate?" "Did Jesus preach a universal moral code, to be practiced by all mankind?" "Is its practice possible to all?" "Is its practice possible to those not accepting His kingdom and spiritual empowerment?" "Did Jesus teach non-resistance to those who do you material injury?" "Did He practice this?" "Are there instances of its modern practice by large groups?"

GEORGIA CHURCHES' ORGANIZATION.

This work, at the suggestion of the State Conference, made last October, is slowly moving forward. At one time, all these Churches were strongly organized and working well. As time went on, many minutes of meetings and other important papers were lost, and now these Churches are looking steadily toward better records and stronger organization.

Another point of real interest is the number of these Churches which are adopting the method of raising money for the Church by use of the budget and every-member-canvass system. Among the Trinity, Macedonia, Duncan's Creek, Center (Atlanta), Countyline, and, of course, the stronger Churches in urban districts and larger towns. These other rural Churches are planning this movement for early operation: Walker's Chapel, Pleasant Hill, at Gaillard, Columbus, LaGrange (to complete the canvass started in January), Cochran, probably, and doubtless several others. This movement augers well for all these communities. It is the most effective way recently discovered to finance Churches.

RELIGIOUS PARLEY.

The annual Intercollegiate Religious Parley will be held at Rollins College, Winter Park, March 13-14. The purpose of this parley is given as "an analysis of vital religious values and their application to individual and group living." The faculty and student representatives from colleges in the Southeast are invited, and other interested visitors. Some of the questions that will be discussed are as follows: "Can we standardize religious behavior?" "Is authority in religion possible?" "May one be religious without being good?" "Does vital religion contribute to self-expression?" "Should we group ourselves on the basis of beliefs, or ideals?" "Is religious certainty possible?" "How shall we behave toward people of contrasting convictions?" "What is the ideal use of a college chapel?"

The secretary of the parley, Mr. Everett R. Clinchy, is a member of the staff of the Federal Council of Churches. The presiding officer will be Dr. Samuel McCrae Cavert, general secretary of the Federal Council. Among the number who will serve as leaders at the round-table are Ray Stannard Baker and Irving Bacheller, both well-known writers; Raymond Robins, well-known leader in social work; Claud Nelson, a leader in the World Student Christian Movement; Benson Y. Landis, social scientist; Dr. Henry Stiles Bradley, former pastor of several Congregational Churches in Portland, Maine.

Rollins College recently celebrated its annual "Founder's Week," and among the well-known speakers participating was Dr. S. Parkes Cadman, who preached the annual founder's week sermon and delivered an address. The college conferred upon Dr. Cadman the LL.D. degree. President Hamilton Holt announced that Mrs. Edward Bok had given the college $100,000 for the building of a Little Theater.

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

SOUTHERN CONVENTION ACTION.

A joint report of Executive and Finance Committee to the Convention, which met in Raleigh last May, divided the goals and the calendar year for the Churches as follows (see "Annual" for 1930, page 26):

"Financial goals for the various departments of the Convention were discussed and agreed upon as follows: Missions (home and foreign), $50,000 annually; educational, $45,000; Orphanage, $30,000; Board of Religious Education, $4,500.

"Also the committee recommends that the Church year for educational and financial purposes be divided and allocated as follows: January and February, for schools and colleges; March, April, May and June, for missions (home and foreign); July, August, September, October, November and December, for Christian education (it being understood that the Board of Education is to share this period with the Board of Christian Education).

"These departments of the Convention are to have access to individuals at all times, but are respectfully requested not to overlap each other in their appeals to the Churches."

This committee who discussed and agreed upon the above was composed of Drs. L. E. Smith, I. W. Johnson and W. W. Staley, Col. E. E. Holland, Mr. J. A. Williams, and Mr. K. B. Johnson. The report was unanimously adopted by the Convention.

In the discussion it was mentioned that four months were given to missions, because both home and foreign missions had to be considered and cared for, and if they were divided each would have two months. Since we make no distinction and go upon the basis of dividing half to home and half to foreign, we call upon the Churches for only one offering.

Two things are, therefore, exceedingly important to bear in mind at present:

First: That whatever the offering is in the Churches, unless otherwise designated, one-half will go to home, one-half to foreign missions. This is the only time during the year that the Churches have the opportunity of giving to missions, home or foreign—except the amount for Church extension, which some local Conferences look after through their own Conference apportionment. The sole support for our mission cause, so far as the Churches are concerned, comes in these four months through whatever offering or contribution may be made.

Second: Pastors, Churches and people should certainly turn their mind with singleness of purpose to the one item of missions, since missions is the foundation of Church life, and the one channel through which the Church grows and enlarges its borders and increases its membership. Christ founded the Church, that it might reveal Him to the world, and no Church from the day of its foundation till now has grown and enlarged her borders except through missionary endeavor. Our Christian Church, with its heavenly and holy Principles, has never come into its own, not from lack of proper principles and polity, but because it has not been missionary in spirit, in activity and in giving. The command of our Lord and the declaration were imperative, "After that the Holy Ghost is come upon you, ye shall be witnesses of me, both in Judea and unto the uttermost parts." Only as a people obey that, does the Holy Spirit abide with them, and does the kingdom enlarge itself, and does growth come with power and prestige.

GIFTS OF GOLD, FRANKINCENSE, MYRRH.

The forty-day period through which we are now passing to the crucifixion and resurrection of our Lord calls to mind the wise men of the East, who took their long and mysterious journey to find the Christ-Child, and with them on their journey their gifts of gold, frankincense and myrrh. These gifts, on the one hand, signified sacrifice, and on the other adoration. Wise people always go in this two-fold aspect—self-denial on the one hand, adoration on the other.

We thank God for His unspeakable gift. He made the supreme sacrifice by the offering of His Son on the cruel cross, and thus proved Himself worthy of our highest adoration and devotion.

We shall best prepare ourselves for Easter; we shall best get in tune with the spirit of the resurrection by denying ourselves, that we may carry a gift, even a gift of gold, frankincense and myrrh. The wise men went a long way to honor Christ, and it was out of sheer devotion to Him that they made their long and mysterious journey.

One is reminded of a later period in the life of our Lord when in a house at Bethany a woman came also with a gift. She poured it upon the head of her Lord; made her offering of sacrifice and devotion. She did so without any hope of reward, and only that she might declare her adoration to her Lord. She denied herself and made her gift, that the expression of her adoration and devotion might be made perfect and complete. In reply to this, our Lord paid the highest tribute of praise to that woman that ever fell from His lips while on earth: "Whosoever this gospel shall be preached in the whole world, this, that this woman hath done, shall be told as a memorial of her."

In these weeks, the Churches and people of the Churches are called upon to bring their gold, frankincense and myrrh and make an offering on the altar of their Lord, purely in the name and for the sake of their Lord. This is the spirit of missions. This is the work of missions. It is the most Christ-like and unselfish gift and offering we shall ever make for any cause under heaven. This is done out of sheer love for our Lord, because it is His name that we magnify and glorify through our offering, and it is His message and the might of His love that we are trying to share with others through our missionary giving and activity.

Through self-denial we come to the most devout act of adoration and devotion. Our missionary giving means spiritual enrichment, since it is solely in the name and for the sake of Him who said, "God is a Spirit, and they that worship Him must worship Him in spirit and in truth."

PRAYING FOR A REVIVAL.

One Church paper, going to tens of thousands of subscribers weekly, puts this pertinent question in big, bold type to its readers: "Are you among those who are praying for a revival of spirituality in the Church?" The same paper then declares, "That such a revival is needed, every Christian knows. It's the dearest dream of thousands of praying hearts."

The declaration in the same statement is made, and then this pertinent question is put, which is good for every lover of our Lord to ponder: "But will such a revival come upon people who live in luxury, without ever knowing, from the cradle to the grave, what sacrifice means? Will it come upon the richest people the world ever saw, who yet allow every interest of Christ to languish and fail? Will it come upon those who concentrate 95 per cent of their gifts upon themselves while three-fourths of all the people on earth do not acknowledge His name?"

Jesus said, "If any man would come after me, let him deny himself and take up his cross daily and follow me." We certainly have not learned yet the practice of self-denial. We still want all for self and are willing to forego little for our Lord.

One wonders how many CHRISTIAN SUN readers there are who are willing to deny themselves the price and the cost of three meals, and the earnings of a day, between now and Easter, and give the price and the earnings to the cause of missions, to the cause, in other words, that undertakes to share the life and the love and the cross of our Christ with others.

The poorest and the most needy people on earth are not those who are suffering for bread for their earthly bodies, but those who are dying without a knowledge of the bread of life, the broken body and the shed blood of our Lord. It was through sacrifice and self-denial that He gave Himself, and we make Him known to the world through our spirit of sacrifice and self-denial.

We want a revival. We need a spiritual revival. How many are praying for such a revival? How many are earnestly longing for such a revival, and such spiritual enrichment in this time of material impoverishment? Surely, the opportunity is ours, and the call of God sounds loud in the land, saying, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden. Take my yoke upon you and learn of me, for my yoke is easy and my burden is light."

PASTOR AND PEOPLE.

The relation between pastor and people is a mutual relation, and it is binding on both sides. The pastor must look after the people, and the people must look after the pastor. There is a difference between social and pastoral relations. There is a difference between a social visit of a doctor and a professional visit. Some Church members prefer a social visit of the pastor to a pastoral visit. The doctor looks after the physical condition; the pastor looks after the spiritual condition of his members. The preacher may make social visits, but he is not under obligation to make such visits. Social visits are matters of choice; pastoral visits are matters of obligation. Well and busy people do not need pastoral visits as much as sick and shut-in members.

It is the business of members of the Church to keep the pastor informed of sick people and people in trouble; not only members of the Church, but members of the congregation and even outsiders. It is then his business to visit such people. It is his business to visit the aged, the infirm, the bereaved, the sick, and he cannot know of all these unless the people help him. This mutual relation reaches people who are not members of the Church, as well as members. The whole congregation is under obligation to help the pastor in his visitations. It is a waste of time and energy for the pastor to do much social visiting. Some of this is important because it may win outsiders to Jesus Christ and the Church.

There is no more flimsy complaint than finding fault with a pastor for not visiting a home, when he has not been informed of sickness, accident, or misfortune. The best remedy for seeming neglect on the part of the pastor is to attend Church regularly, and that contact and personal touch prevents feelings of neglect and complaint on the part of members. In fact, if the relation of pastor and people is a mutual relation, both are under obligation to attend Church regularly. Complaints almost always come from irregular attendants. When pastor and people meet together, worship together, and greet each other on Sunday in the house of prayer, there is maintained a feeling of mutual good will and fellowship. Try it.

THINGS NEW AND OLD.

We are living in an age when people like adventure, thrills and new experiences. Many are going into crime, that they may satisfy the longing for something new. In a recent trial, the accused young woman was asked why she committed the crime. Her reply was that she wanted some real thrills and new adventures. Her conception of thrills and adventure is like a large number of people of the present age. But their conception of such is entirely wrong. All sin, crime and anti-social conduct is old, staid, worn-out.

The anti-social conduct is as old as the human race. Crime had its origin with the first-comers. "But the fearful, and unbelieving, and the abominable, and murderers and whoremongers, and sorcerers, and idolators, and all liars, shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone: which is the second death" (Rev. 21: 8). This category practically covers every sin. They were tried out in years gone by. They have been denounced all through God's Word. They are old. The lie had its origin with Adam and Eve. The second generation brought forth murder. Greed and lust accompanied both of them. Unbelief was present in both generations. Fear and worship of idols are of long standing. If we read carefully the Old Testament, almost every sin conceivable is mentioned therein. The only thing now connected with sin in this age, as compared with former years, is the method of committing the sin. Those who engage in a life of sin are not so wise as they might think.

On the other hand, the Christian way is ever presenting a new problem. It is a real thrill to undertake something for God. There are new souls to be won, new programs to be put on in His Church, a new gospel to be preached, for every time we read His precious Book something new presents itself. There are new fields for us to enter to carry the gospel, that we may teach all the world the way of life. When the world wakes up to the possibilities of its real Christian privilege, then will be brought to pass the vision of John as seen in Rev. 21:1, "And I saw a new heaven and a new earth."

OUR CHURCH SCHOOLS.

The Christian Churches of America are in the field of education. They have been so from the very beginning. The Roman Catholic Church has its parochial schools. It takes children from kindergarten and holds them until they graduate from their own universities. The great majority of their young people never have an opportunity to get a Protestant or secular interpretation of life. They even do not have opportunity to learn the prevailing interpretation of American history.

The Protestant Church has a great system of education. Almost every denomination has its own schools. These are supposed to be dominated by a motive of religious education. However, these same schools are not distinctively denominational. A visitor would not know that they belonged to any Church. Indeed, he might not discover that they were under the control of Protestant religion. Some of them have become so secular in their atmosphere that little difference can be seen between them and a State institution. This is not true of all of them. There is a type of Protestant denominational schools that carry strong markings of religious and spiritual and intellectual culture. These are the ones that justify the Protestant system of education. They furnish an atmosphere of idealism and of intellectual culture. They develop a type of American citizenship to be found in all of the communities of the nation. These college graduates go into the professions with their Christian idealism, or at least with their cultural ideas which enable them to stand for the best American ideals. They are not altogether secular, while they may appear to be so. No man can go through a denominational school without carrying into life the point of view of Protestantism, with its special interpretation of citizenship and its cultural values of a high-grade personal life.

One of the most encouraging phenomena for observation today in American life is the cultural contribution being made to the life of the nation through the functioning of the denominational schools.—Exchange.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

What Church is planning to invite the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention of the Eastern Virginia Conference to meet with it on Tuesday following the third Sunday in July? By vote of the Convention, it is to be entertained on the Harvard plan. Please let me hear from you by return mail.

Fifty Thousand Dollars for Missions! A CALL TO SELF-DENIAL

The last session of the Southern Christian Convention voted unanimously in calling upon our people and Churches this year to contribute $50,000 for Missions—$25,000 for Home, $25,000 for Foreign work. Our Year-Book shows there are 32,000 of us. If we of the Southern Convention will give $2.00 per member—$1.00 to help build Churches and support the Gospel at home, in needy places; $1.00 to carry the Gospel to those who are perishing without it—we will easily reach our goal.

Thus far, since September 1st, the Sunday Schools, Women's Missionary Societies, and a few individuals of their own volition have contributed to March 1st $11,052.81. This leaves a balance of $38,947.19. What shall our answer be? How much prayer shall we offer? how much preaching shall we do? how much self-denial shall we practice in order to make this the best year for the ingathering of souls, the output of means, and spiritual enrichment of our Churches and people we of the Convention have thus far had?

Prepare by self-denial for a great Easter offering. Let every one have some part in this great and good undertaking.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

What is the greatest need of the Church in this good year of the Christian era? It is not education. Public schools, private schools, colleges, universities, professional schools, technical schools have been gaining in extension and numbers as the years have passed. From Sunday School to seminary the work has gone forward in the field of religious education; in law and medicine, mechanics and domestic science, music and art, in every line of human endeavor schools open their doors and students go in. Education is within the reach of all in this great country, and men and women are devoting their time and energy to the work of teaching anxious and even indifferent minds. Greece may have produced greater scholars than the United States, but this nation, in her schools, covers a larger range of subjects and reaches a much larger per cent of her people than Greece ever dreamed of in her classic days.

Wealth has increased in proportion to her population and her education. Millions now take the place of thousands in other days; and appropriations by State legislatures and Congress at the present time make similar figures a century ago look like the day of poverty has gone to return no more. Contrasts between conditions make well-to-do families of other days look like paupers now. Poor people spend more for luxuries in this day than rich people did even fifty years ago. Population has increased, it is true, but it has not kept up with the increase of wealth. In some instances, advanced thinkers, so-called, and even ministers, advocate reduction in population by birth control; but no welfare philosopher has suggested decrease in the production of wealth or the multiplication of conveniences and luxuries. What they want is more money and smaller populations. The Bible is not wrong when it says "The love of money is the root of all evil" (1 Tim. 6:10). To increase wealth and decrease population would be a menace to society. The fact is patent that increase of wealth multiplies temptations and increases the means of indulgence. Hard times may be necessary to put the brakes on the present speed produced by education and wealth. Night and sleep are just as necessary as sunshine and work.

What this age needs is a great revival of religion—a new spiritual experience in the heart of the Church, a new emphasis on sin and the necessity for repentance and regeneration on the part of the unsaved, and obedience to the law of God and the law of the land. Prohibition is the friend of man, and the violation of it is the enemy of the race. The Church depends too much on forms, contributions, charity, and education, and not enough upon the Holy Spirit and prayer. The great agent for spiritual experience and revival is the Holy Spirit and the great means for securing His help in prayer. The great revival of Pentecost was preceded by ten days of prayer.

ELON LETTER.

What the objective of life is or should be has always been an interesting consideration on the part of thoughtful people. Last week I wrote about faith and works as satisfying the thoughts and ideals of certain groups of Christians with reference to this project of living.

Among the many other answers given to this project, there is a third—that life consists in what a man knows. It finds incarnation in the public school system of our country, for the education of our people costs us annually more than two billions of dollars. In addition to this, we have constructed a system of higher education in which we invest annually some $500,000,000 more. Universal education has become the passion of the American people, and back of this passion lies a philosophy. This philosophy says that a man's life consists in the abundance of the things he knows. In response to this national educational creed, we have witnessed the constant enrichment of the curriculum of our elementary and secondary schools. More subjects are taught in these schools today than were offered in our best colleges a century ago. A corresponding expansion has been witnessed in our system of higher education until today there is no subject which may not be found adequately taught in the great universities that are the crown and the glory of a great people's devotion to learning and of their confidence in its adequacy.

In order to increase the fund of human knowledge, great scholars bury themselves in research, and rejoice to have lived in the service of truth if they may have been able to add even a small iota to the sum total of the things we know. We do not know it all yet. There are air-pockets, so to speak, in the mental realm as well as in the path of the aviator. There are great oceans and trackless forests of truth that must be explored and charted. The scholars of the world are devoting themselves to the performance of this duty, and to them it is a sacred duty. We are amazed sometimes at the pronouncements that come to us as a result of the discoveries which these patient investigators have made. When the scientists, for example, tell us that there is enough energy in a piece of radium the size of a pin-point to lift a hundred million tons to the top of the highest mountain in the world, we are amazed, and have a right to be. The universe is fearfully and wonderfully and powerfully made. Our scholars are aiding us to understand it.

Our young people are resorting to college as never before in the world's history. There has never been anything comparable to the influx of American youth to our colleges and universities. About 300,000 freshmen will continue to enter our various institutions of higher learning each year. The total enrollment for 1928-'29 in these institutions was beyond three-quarters of a million. Eight times as many attend college in America, as in England. Some people have concluded that too many of our youth are attending college. Ben D. Wood, of Columbia, thinks 15 per cent of our high school graduates is the limit. That will depend upon the purpose which has influenced the individual student in his decision to enter college. We are told again and again that young people go to college because of its social embellishments; because of their interest in the college activities of the literary or athletic type; because it will enable them to make more money; because it will enable them to render larger service to the world.

When Woodrow Wilson was president of Princeton, he said that the side-show in the educational world had become of so much more importance than the main tent that it was hardly worth while any longer to teach. Others have shared his view. Is college to be a crusade or is it to be a circus? The individual student must answer, but, in the answering, the whole purpose of life is involved. The college offers the forward-looking youth of the land the choice opportunity of acquiring knowledge and of amassing information which will be useful to him in making his contribution to the world. College days should be a genuine crusade in the discovery of truth, but the experience may be debauched into a circus to the hurt of the individual and of the institution which he attends.

PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE LETTER.

YOUR OPPORTUNITY.

Your opportunity confronts you. What will you do with it? There never was a day that did not bring its own opportunity for doing good that never could have been done before, and never can be again. Vigilance is watching opportunity; tact and daring is seizing upon opportunity; force and persistence is crowding opportunity to its utmost possible achievement.

Do not wait for extraordinary opportunities; seize common occasions and make them great. Weak men wait for opportunities; strong men make them. Things do not turn up in this world until somebody turns them up. It is the idle man, not the great worker, who is always complaining that he has no time. Some young men will make more out of the odds and ends of opportunities which many carelessly throw away than others will get out of a whole lifetime. Like bees, they extract honey from every flower. Every person they meet, every circumstance of the day, adds something to their store of useful knowledge or personal power.

Many have seized the opportunity for making money, but, fortunately, there is coming a new generation of artists upon the stage of action who will find opportunities, thick as thistles, for doing something nobler than merely amassing riches, for wealth is not an end to strive for, but an opportunity; not a climax of a man's career, but an incident. It is all right to make all we can legitimately, but not to can all we make.

Young men and women, why stand ye here all day idle? Was the land all occupied before you were born? Has the earth ceased to yield its increase? Are the seats all taken? the positions all filled? the chances all gone? Are the resources of your country fully developed? Are the secrets of nature all mastered? Is there no way in which you can utilize these passing moments to improve yourself or benefit yourself or others?

Born in an age and country in which knowledge and opportunity abound as never before, how can you sit with folded hands, asking God's aid in work for which He has given you the necessary faculties and strength? With the world full of work that needs to be done; with human nature so constituted that often a pleasant word or a trifling assistance may stem the tide of disaster for some fellow-man, or clear his path to success; with our own faculties so arranged that in honest, earnest, persistent endeavor we find our highest good; and with countless noble examples to encourage us to dare and to do, each moment brings us to the threshold of some new opportunity.

Some men have three hands—a right hand, a left hand, and a little behindhand. No clock can tick for us the moment gone. Two centuries ago a great sun-dial was reared in All Souls' College, Oxford, England. Over it was written in letters of gold the Latin words, "Horae preunt et imputantur"—hours pass and are set down to our account. Opportunities come to all, but the trouble with too many is that they do not make anything out of them. Some persons go through life sighing for opportunities, while others, with like means, chances, circumstances, privileges, achieve results, do heroic things, win for themselves honor or renown. The secret is not in them or their environment.

The financial needs of Piedmont College have been set forth in THE CHRISTIAN SUN and letters sent to the Churches in the Southern Christian Convention for the past few months, and to date but few have responded to this urgent call. Most every member of the Christian Church in the whole Southland should give something to Piedmont Junior College, and give it now. If they do not respond they may regret it later. Opportunity is like the doctrine of election—you can tell nothing about it from the front, but may see millions in it from the other side. There never was an angel of God, however bright, terrible or strong, that was able to roll away the stone from the grave of a dead opportunity. Have you prayed over one of the big problems confronting our Southern constituency? Have you lost any sleep over our situation here at Wadley? Are you withholding money that God is telling you to give to Piedmont Junior College? Here is your opportunity. What will you do with it?

S. L. BEOUGHNER.

HOW HE TABULATED HER RELIGION.

A minister was holding a series of meetings with Grand Avenue Church, and one evening when the topic had been "The New Birth" Mrs. Fessenden said to her husband as they walked briskly down the lightest street: "I wish you had decided for Christ tonight, dear; I thought you would, the speaker made it so plain and so many responded to the invitation."

"Would my rising to my feet there have made any difference with me in any way?"

"It would have put you and your influence on the side of the right."

"But is not my influence already on the right side?" he interrupted. "What do I do that you do not do? You are a professing Christian, and I am not."

"You remember the illustration that he gave," she interrupted now. "The moralist and the Christian are on the same street, but one is headed toward the kingdom of God and the other goes in an opposite direction."

"Yes, but I am not able to see that you and I are not headed the same way. I will try to state the matter more clearly to you later. Here we are now at home."

Presently as they sat down together with a bit of hot supper on the round-table between them, he recurred to the matter as she poured the chocolate and laughed a little as she began reading the somewhat lengthy statement that he submitted for her inspection.

"How fearfully business-like it looks!" she said.

"I do not use tobacco in any way. You do not."

"I do not use profane language. Neither do you."

"I am a teetotaler. So are you."

"I go to the theater. You go to the theater."

"I play cards. You play cards."

"I attend Church irregularly. You do the same."

"I pay something for religious purposes. So do you."

"I dance. You dance."

"I associate with unbelievers. You do the same."

"I read trashy novels. You read trashy novels."

"I do not attend devotional meetings. You do not."

"I do not read the Bible. Do you read the Bible?"

"I do not pray. Do you pray?"

"Now, what does your Church membership add to your manner of living? Why are our ways different?"

The young woman began reading the list with a laugh, but ended in tears.

"Oh, my dear," he cried; "I had no intention of paining you! I am sorry."

"I am not sorry; I thank you. You make me see how far wrong I have gone in my endeavor to show you that religion need not make one stupid and poky. It is not strange that you hesitate to take your stand as a Christian when you see how inconsistent I am to my profession of having been born to newness of life."

Again their lives flowed onward side by side. She was not less bright, sweet, or companionable, but when the card clubs and the dancing clubs organized she did not join. She did join the mission workers' band, and was faithful in attendance. She no longer went to the theater, and every time she declined her husband put the expense for both, saved, into her mission box. She no longer read her Bible in secret. She took up work in the Sunday School. Her time was no more taken than before, but she was differently employed.

Soon the gay, thoughtless people with whom she had associated were no longer in sympathy. "What has become of Mrs. Fessenden?" was asked, and the reply came scornfully: "Oh, she's running her Church now! Can't imagine what has come over her. She has always been a Church member, but she was real decent about it—did everything the rest of us did, and she didn't preach. She is really a bright, sweet woman, but now she has always some Church engagement to attend to when we need her to make up our parties, and she does not hesitate to say, 'I have too long been regardless of the admonition, "Seek first the kingdom of God."'"

"And her husband?"

"Oh, he is loyal to her! He is a real lover. He goes wherever she goes; but the poor man must be having a dull time of it."

Mr. Fessenden meantime did not consider himself an object for commiseration. If his wife's departure was an experiment, he found it an interesting one. He found his new environment more refined, more intellectual, congenial than the old, for earnestness took the place of frivolity, and he found himself awakening to a knowledge of a spiritual life.

When at length he made his decision, he said: "I have at last, through the influence of my wife, found that the true meaning and purpose of life is to follow Christ and to do the work in the world which He left for His followers."

"And the happy wife often says: 'How near I came to making a fatal mistake! I tell my experience, that it may be a warning and a blessing for others. Do not sink to the level of the world; bring the world up to a knowledge of Christ.'—Selected.

A PRAYER.

O God, our heart's desire and prayer for the nations is that they might be saved. Saying so, may the Lord's redeemed give their first and best to make it so. We pray, Father, in the Spirit's power, send out Thy Church to succor and save. Why its being, if not to advance! Thou, Father, who givest life and opportunity, reveal unto us Thy holy will and bestir within us the sense of our own high privilege; thus, confidently, loyally, shall we carry forward our Lord's compassionate quest for souls until His judgment fills the earth. In His precious name. Amen.

FROM THE PHILIPPINES.

January 6, 1931.

Dear Friends Back Home:

I realize that when you get this you will no longer be interested in Christmas, so I will try to tell all that has happened since. Though we did have the best Christmas ever, with an American turkey dinner and all that goes with it, including two kinds of fruit cake sent by the good ladies of the Baptist Church and my sister-in-law, and so many useful gifts and lovely cards and messages. We wish to thank all of you who sent cards. These all help to keep our courage high and hearts content. It is good to know we have a place in your thoughts and prayers.

Two days after Christmas, Dr. White had to leave for Manila, and has not returned yet. He took a patient with him, but his main purpose in going was to get a new doctor for the hospital. It has seemed ages since he left, although the days have been exceedingly busy. I lived at the dormitory for more than a week after he left, as I had promised Miss Towne to look after the girls while she attended a conference in Cebu. The girls living at the dormitory are high-school students, coming from all parts of the province, and most of them had gone home for the holidays. I like to stay there, except I really don't enjoy having to arise at 5 A. M. and eat rice, fish and onions every day.

Two young lady missionaries from the mountain station, a half-day's journey from here, visited us in the dormitory and taught our girls some new songs, and they have been singing themselves hoarse since. I was glad of this, for they will replace, at least for a time, some of the silly love songs they get from the talkies and learn so quickly and sing eternally. We had prayers and Bible reading each morning and night. The girls conducted the evening prayers. They are all required to attend Church, though many of them are from Catholic homes.

We took the girls to see the Rizal day parade on the 30th. We have different ways of honoring our heroes here than you do at home. Some of the business houses and public buildings were draped in black bunting. Always there is a big parade, with dozens of floats and a beauty queen crowned for the main float. After the parade, the prominent ones seated themselves in the bandstand at the Plaza, and then followed speeches, singing, etc. I saw one of the "treasure chests" for the first time. It was placed high on the platform where every one could get a good look. They are certainly interesting looking. The superintendent of schools here spoke about these friendship chests that the boys and girls in the States had sent. He explained that the gifts would be given those pupils of highest standing in their classes. The classes here are much larger than at home, so there are not enough gifts for every one. I am sure they will be joyfully received.

The hospital is beginning this year free of debt, and if this new doctor is all we hope for, we are going to move forward this year. We need your prayers to make Christ known to these people.

Sincerely,

Mission Hospital, MRS. M. J. W. WHITE.

J. O. ATKINSON, Sec'y.

DR. MINTON VISITS PORTO RICO.

On board S. S. Coamo, Feb. 7, 1931.

Dear Dr. Atkinson:

We are out on the wide Atlantic, homeward bound after ten strenuous but delightful days in beautiful Porto Rico. I wish you might have been along to have renewed your own impressions since our trip together of ten years ago.

Considerable progress, no doubt, has been made in the past ten years, but I must register my disappointment that it has not been more marked. One sees the new buildings here and there about San Juan and Ponce, and one or two other large towns, and here and there are to be found new and better school buildings than previously seen, but we are told that still only about fifty per cent of the children of school age can be accommodated in the present buildings, and that is a gain of hardly ten per cent in ten years. I suppose it would be impossible to place the blame for the slowness of progress—the hurricane of 1928 set everything back. It takes years to restore coffee and coconuts to production, and these have not yet recovered. But nature works fast, and when one contrasts her quick recovery with the fact that thousands of these people are as bad or worse off than ten years ago, and that just outside the modern city of San Juan there is that same old slum in the mosquito swamp, one wonders if our government could not, if it would, keep a bit better step with nature in the process of restoration.

This season of the year is more delightful for a trip to Porto Rico than October, which was the month we came down in. One steps out of New York harbor shivering in a wintry blast a few degrees above zero, and in less than three days dons the Dixie weave or Palm Beach suit, sailing in the balmy waters of the tropics. On the island itself one lives in the delights of late spring or early summer. The brilliant poinsettia and beautiful Congeon villa are showing off to best advantage; the famous flamboyant is not in bloom yet, but still lines the highways as a sure token of what is to come. Mountains and valleys, rivers and rills, green cane fields and stately palms bring all that can be desired for the eyes to see—except the people. And this is the thing, after all, in which we are most interested—the helping of the people.

As you know, I came down here with representatives of the American Missionary Association of the Congregational Home Boards and the United Brethren Foreign Board to assist in effecting the merger of these three Churches into "The Evangelical Church of Porto Rico." Dr. W. H. Widdoes represented the U. B. Board, and there were also in the party Rev. Fred L. Brownlee, secretary, and Mr. Wm. T. Boulton, treasurer, of the American Missionary Association, New York, and Rev. Judson L. Cross, New England, regional secretary for the Association and the Commission on Missions working out of Boston.

One of the five things of the trip has been our ability to learn to know each other better, and so far as this party of Congregationalists and Christians is concerned, we are agreed that we are united. The first meeting of the Evangelical Church of Porto Rico consisting of representatives from the three Churches mentioned above was held from January 27th to 30th in the Congregational Church at Fajardo. On the evening of the 28th, the ceremony actually uniting the three took place. The Church was filled to capacity. A constitution had been adopted and working-plans agreed upon. An administrative board, composed of board members, will function in the States, and an executive council composed of fourteen representatives, both missionary and national, will function in the field, these being elected by the annual assembly.

The new president, Prof. F. Siez, of the United Evangelical Seminary, presided, and a number of messages were brought by board representatives, Porto Rican leaders and fraternal delegates from the other Protestant missions on the island which we hope will later come into the union.

This union of three missions brings together some 36 Churches, 39 pastors, 3,518 members, 6,292 Sunday School pupils, 1,587 Christian Endeavor workers, and property valued at $457,300. Each mission will carry its share of the united budget and loan its property to the new Church until such a time as it becomes sufficiently self-supporting to make another step possible.

The union starts off with great promise. There are, of course, many problems, but when there is a real desire to serve, we believe it will open up the way to much larger things in Porto Rico. The Christian and United Brethren Mission territory center in Ponce, on the southern side of the island, the Christian field to the east and the United Brethren to the west. The Congregational field is on the northeast side of the island, centering at Humacao. A regional committee has been found for each of these two districts and will begin to operate at once. Before many months the good effects of the union will begin to show.

Before closing, I must say a word about two institutions in which we of the Christian branch of our United Church will be increasingly interested, as both are directed by the American Missionary Association. One is the Blanche Kellogg Institute for girls at Santence, just outside San Juan. Under the principalship of Miss Martha Lindsey and a corps of excellent teachers, both native and American, this school is training some sixty or seventy bright-eyed girls in all that makes for fine Christian character. The other is the Ryder Memorial Hospital, of Humacao, where Dr. James Watson and his assistant, Dr. Fred Murdock, with head nurse, Miss Spence, and some thirty nurses, are doing as fine a piece of genuine Christian service as one could wish to see. You will hear more about these institutions later. As never before, we ought to back our Porto Rican work. It is full of tremendous possibilities.

W. P. MINTON.

STAFFORD ON MISSIONS.

"If we were awake we should know that this is not a time to cut down, but rather to build up," declared Russell Henry Stafford, D. D., minister of the Old South Church, Boston, in a recent sermon, entitled "The Judge of the Nations." If there is a falling off of support for foreign missions, Stafford says it is because "we Christians are asleep." The only means of security for the world is through healthy criticism within every nation, Dr. Stafford points out. Jesus, the Judge of the nations, brings in shame of old faults the desire to seek justice and mercy. The only way of giving Jesus to all nations as a focus of interest and practical hope is by supporting the gospel far and wide through the ministries of the Church and its branches.

"Are we alive to this imperative demand? Does the welfare of human-kind mean enough to us to prefer it to our own ease and contribute toward it accordingly? To ask these questions is to bring the Man before us as our Judge. . . . If you do not care what happens to other people, including your own children, provided you may be comfortable today, then do not give to missions. But do not call yourself a Christian, either. . . . We have some measure of the spirit of the Man who lived for others if we believe that the kingdom of God takes precedence over all other considerations. And the proportion of our actual to our potential giving in response to this appeal will show what measure of that spirit is ours."

Program of Chapter V, "Islam in India."

- I. Business.
- II. Study period.

1. Leader remarking that in the last chapter we saw something of the gods and the religious life of the Hindu side of the house of India, and that today we are approaching the Moslem side. The leader may use as much of the introductory section (pages 67-70) as may seem desirable.

2. The great mogul dynasty—Its accomplishments and failure (pages 70-74). A member.

- 3. A Moslem custom—By a girl member.

4. "There is No God but Allah" (pages 75-78). A member.

5. Leader use the word picture, "Brothers" (pages 79-81), as the transition from study period to worship program, bringing out the fact that the Mohammedans are nearer the Christian ideal in that they recognize only one God, but that their mistake lies in the fact that they have misplaced Mohammed, and that they do not have the light of peace which Messiah brings to the hearts of men. That it is his spirit only which will bring peace and real brotherhood to the people of India.

III. Worship service. Theme: "Christ the Messenger of Peace."

1. Old Hundred.
2. Call to worship—"Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men" (Luke 2:14).
3. Hymn, "Hark! Hark! My Soul!"
4. Scripture—The Beatitudes (Matt. 5:1-12).
5. Prayer—That the peoples of India and the peoples of America "may know Him, and the power of His resurrection and the fellowship of His sufferings." That we may set a higher valuation on our most "priceless possession"—our Christian religion!
6. Offertory—"Follow the Gleam."
7. Hymn: "Speed Away, Speed Away."
8. Benediction.

Willing Workers.

I. Worship period. Topic: "The Treasure Hunt." Theme: "Friendship."

1. Call to worship. A man that hath friends must show himself friendly: And there is a Friend that sticketh closer than a brother" (Prov. 18:24).

2. Song: "Jesus is All the World to Me."

3. Scripture: "Friendship of David and Jonathan (1 Sam. 18:1-3, 20:4; 2 Sam. 1:26). Have this given by three members.

4. Prayer: O God, our Father, help the Churches in Arabia, Persia and Turkey to know about Jesus. Show us how to be friends to them, and may many more of them give their hearts and lives to Jesus. Amen.

5. Have member read following poem:

The Little Trail of Being Friends.

"The little trail to being friends
Is one that never, never ends.
Upon it you may travel far
To where the nicest places are!
It holds for you great vistas fair,
And sunlit fields and fragrant air,
And better views around the bends,
The little trail to being friends."

6. Offertory: Have pianist play softly, "I've Found a Friend."

II. Study period. Chapter VI, "The Treasure Hunt."

1. Leader briefly review the chapters studied leading up to last chapter. At the close a discussion may be held, based on question (page 27), "Suggestion for Leaders," which accompanies "The Treasure Hunt."

2. Song: "I've a Story to Tell to the Nations."

3. Benediction. We have made many new friends. We have tried to prove our friendship by learning all we could about the countries and peoples. Our Father, as we think about these people we want them to have the joy of loving Jesus and following Him. May we do our part to help them. Amen.

"Thank God every morning that you have something to do that day, whether you like it or not; being forced to work, and forced to do your best, will breed in you temperance and self-control, diligence and strength of will, cheerfulness and contentment and a hundred other virtues which the idle never know."—Charles Kingsley.

ADVENTURES IN YOUTH FELLOWSHIP

"Youth at Work in the Church."

JEWEL TRUITT, Editor, Waverly, Virginia.

A VISIT TO A NEGRO SCHOOL.

My dear Jewel:

Our visit to the negro school at Sedalia, N. C., on February 22nd was a decided success. I am writing you about it, first, because you made me promise that I'd let you know how it turned out; and, second, because those of us who went feel that if we could make more such contacts with the negroes that this thing we call "the negro problem" could soon be solved.

To begin at the beginning, it all started when Virginia Walker, chairman of our program committee in our intermediate society, decided that our Sunday evening programs were not as interesting as they should be. So she worked out a program on the negro, using negro poems, spirituals, and talks on the contribution of the negro to civilization.

It was the next Sunday evening that the group decided to visit the negro school at Sedalia, which is between Burlington and Greensboro. We invited the Senior Christian Endeavor Society to go with us, and also the Christian Endeavorers from the Greensboro Christian Church. There were about twenty-five of us in all. I was disappointed that we had so few, but we were compensated because Mrs. Charlotte Hawkins Brown, who is principal of the school, took us through her own home (which she could not have well done if the group had been larger). And speaking of her home, I wish you could have seen it. It is lovely. And what caught my eye most were the lovely pictures. She has reproductions of some of the world's most famous pictures, both of Europe and America. After going through her home, we went through all the other buildings on the campus—dormitories, dining-room, kitchen, and class rooms. We were all impressed with the politeness and friendliness of the students and the cleanliness of the buildings. After we had been through all the buildings, we went to the chapel where the students had gathered by this time. The students gave a program in our honor. You would have loved it, for I know that negro spirituals mean as much to you as they do to me. But it wasn't the wonderful music that impressed me most; it was the spirit of those young negro school boys and girls. They are so eager to make something of themselves, so eager to co-operate with the white young people, and so eager to uplift their race. I am sure that we Christian Endeavorers caught something of their spirit, and that because of this little insight into the lives of these negroes, we are going to try to co-operate more than ever before.

Sincerely,

BETTY BROWN.

The Lanett Christian Church, of Lanett, Ala., has worked out a plan whereby six of its young people can earn scholarships in some college or institution of higher learning. The plan also provides for the raising of money to pay off the indebtedness on their new Sunday School rooms.

The Japanese have a proverb: With the first signs of victory, tighten the helmet strings. In the South Sea Islands they say: Though the wind blows your boat along, don't throw away the paddle.

"Through the harsh noises of our day,
A low, sweet prelude finds its way;
Through clouds of doubt, and creeds of fear,
A light is breaking, calm and clear."

—John Greenleaf Whittier.

THE LIL' BRACK SHEEP.

BY PAUL LAWRENCE DUNBAR.

(Southern negro.)

Po' lil' brack sheep dat strayed away,
Don lcs' in de win' an' de rain—
An' de Shepherd he say, "O hirelin', Go fin' my sheep again."
An' de hirelin' say, "O Shepherd,
Dat sheep am brack and bad."
But de Shepherd he smile, like dat lil' brack sheep
Wuz the onliest lamb he had.
An' he say, "O hirelin', hasten,
For de win' and de rain am col',
An' dat lil' brack sheep am lonesome
Out dere, so far f'um de fol'."
But de hirelin' frown: "O Shepherd,
Dat sheep am ol' an' gray!"
But de Shepherd he smile, like dat lil' brack sheep
Wuz fair as de break ob day.
An' he say, "O hirelin', hasten,
Lo! here is de ninety an' nine,
But dere, way off f'um the sheepfol',
Is dat lil' brack sheep of mine!"
An' de hirelin' frown: "O Shepherd,
De res' ob de sheep am here!"
But de Shepherd he smile, like dat lil' brack sheep
He hol' it do mostes' dear.
And de Shepherd go out in de darkness,
Where de night wuz col' an' bleak,
An' dat lil' brack sheep, he fin'd it,
An' lay it against his cheek.
An' de hirelin' frown: "O Shepherd,
Don' bring dat sheep to me!"
But de Shepherd he smile, an' he hol' it close,
An'—dat lil' brack sheep—wuz—me!"

The young people of the Mt. Olivet (G) Christian Church, in the Valley of Virginia Central Conference, have gone to work in their Church in earnest. Norman Morris heads up their work.

Thelma Boone, vice-president of Eastern Virginia's Young People's Congress and president of the Young People's Missionary Society of the Bethlehem Christian Church, writes that the young people of their Church are already scoring near the 100 per cent mark on the Christian quest chart which the congress is using this year. They plan to have gold seals on every score-line by the time the congress meets in annual session in August.

GOOD NEWS FOR THE BLIND.

The American Bible Society is happy to announce that embossed volumes of the Bible for the blind may now be had in all systems at the special price of 25 cents a volume instead of at the former price of 50 cents. Thus, the whole Bible in revised Braille, consisting of twenty volumes, may now be secured for $5.00 (the manufacturing cost is $47.00). The fifty-eight volumes of the Bible in Moon, the system used by older persons whose finger-tips are losing their sensitiveness, can be purchased for $14.50 (the manufacturing cost is about $225.00). The new price of 25 cents a volume applies only where the purchase is made by or for a blind individual.

The difference between the selling price and the substantially greater cost price is met by designated gifts contributed to the American Bible Society. Such offerings enabled the American Bible Society last year to place in the hands of the blind over 4,000 volumes in Braille and other suitable systems.

TOPIC: "Important Ideas in John 3:15."

Opening hymns.

Scripture (in unison): John 3:16.

Prayer.

Hymn: "There's a Wideness in God's Mercy."
(Tune, "What a Friend." Sing two stanzas to the music of "What a Friend.")

"There's a wideness in God's mercy,
Like the wideness of the sea;
There's a kindness in His justice,
Which is more than liberty.

"There is welcome for the sinner,
And more graces for the good;
There is mercy with the Saviour,
There is healing in His blood.

"For the love of God is broader
Than the measure of man's mind,
And the heart of the Eternal
Is most wonderfully kind.

"If our love were but more simple,
We should take Him at His word,
And our lives would be all sunshine
In the sweetness of our Lord."

Presentation of the topic by the leader.
Discussion of the topic.

God Loved.

God is love. He is the Source and Fountain of all love. He bestowed His love upon us. And God loved first. It would have taken the world a long time to have come to the place where it would have loved God. This "first" also implies that God had loved man from the beginning. Man had not discovered God's love, had not realized it. But God had been revealing Himself to the world as a God of love, though man had considered Him a God of hate and anger.

God Loved the World.

God's love has cared for mankind from the beginning of time to the present time, even when man was not worthy of such love. God did not get so interested in other things that He forgot those whom He loved.

God Loved the World So (Much) that He Gave His Son.

"He spared not His own Son" (Rom. 8:32).

Man had come to such a state that he could not redeem himself. God gave His only Son to live and die for men's salvation. He was willing to do that because of the great love He had for mankind. God might have destroyed the world, but He chose the way of love. This manifestation of love on the Father's part meant that Christ must go the way of self-sacrifice and humiliation.

Whosoever Believes Has Eternal Life.

He gave His Son, not that He might judge the world, but that the world, through Him, might be saved.

Whosoever means any one who will. The plan of God that any one could be saved who would believe showed that He regards one man as highly as another. The lowest human, the vilest sinner may believe and be saved. God's heart is always ready to receive those who come.

Leader's summary: "The Gift of God to Man."

"The Living Christ" and "The Light of Life," by Grace Sloan Overton, are two fine Easter pageants. Both are simple in production, yet beautiful for the Easter season. Those wishing copies of these pageants should write the editor of this page immediately.

True goodness is like the glow-worm in this, that it shines most when no eyes except those of heaven are upon it.—Hare,

Sunday School Lesson

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE.

THE USE AND ABUSE OF GOD'S GIFTS.

LESSON XII—MARCH 22, 1931.

(Temperance Lesson.)

GOLDEN TEXT: "Be not drunken with wine, wherein is excess, but be filled with the Spirit."
—Eph. 5:18.

LESSON: Luke ch. 12.

SINCERITY.

"Beware of the leaven of the Pharisees, which is hypocrisy." They were "actors," "make-believers"; they wanted to appear outwardly what they were not willing to be inwardly—they were hypocrites. Life should be open and above board. It should be real. It should be lived as if its secrets were to be proclaimed from the house-tops, and as if its plans and purposes were to be seen by all. Sincerity is one of the most difficult, and yet one of the most fundamental virtues.

COURAGE.

The follower of Christ is not to be ashamed to confess that he is a follower of Christ. In public and at the risk of being ridiculed and even persecuted, Christ's followers are to stand by their ideals. God will in turn confess those who confess Him.

And if, perchance, in witnessing for Christ, one is to be brought before rulers and judges, he is not to be unduly concerned or worried about what he is going to say in defense. The Spirit of God will guide those who are on trial for God. The important thing is that they shall bear witness for Him.

COVETOUSNESS.

"Beware of covetousness"—it is the unnamed sin, the sin we are so often afraid to mention. It is so subtle that all of us need to be on our guard lest we be blinded and bound by it. The unlawful desire for things, the spirit of greed, the spirit of avarice, are sometimes clothed in supposedly respectable garb, but they are none the less deadly to the spiritual life. Jesus tells the story of a man whose lands brought forth abundantly until he had not where to store all his goods. He proposes to build larger barns, and then in smug, self-satisfaction tells his soul to take its ease, assuring it that it has much goods laid up for many years. He who might be called prosperous and thrifty by men is labeled as a fool by God. He thought all that he had was his, overlooking the fact that he was but a steward of what he possessed; he thought his soul could be satisfied with things, overlooking the fact that man cannot live by things; he thought the measure of a man's life consisted in the abundance of the things he possessed, overlooking the fact that the true measure of life was quality of mind and heart, and not quantity of things.

FREEDOM FROM WORRY.

"Your Father knoweth that ye have need of these things"—the necessities of life. We are not to spend our time and our energy in anxiety or worry, and thus to unfit ourselves for doing what we ought and must do. We are to set ourselves to seek first the kingdom of God and its righteousness. We have the promise that these other things shall be added unto us. How our modern life needs to learn this lesson! How much false emphasis is placed upon what we eat and what we drink and what we shall wear!

SELL AND GIVE.

Sell and buy—that is the philosophy of many a modern business man who has as his goal the amassing of a fortune. Sell and save—that is the philosophy of the miser. Sell and spend—that is the philosophy of the one who wants to indulge himself in ease and luxury and extravagance. But Jesus said, "Sell and give"—convert your holdings into usings. Make even business life a means to an end, not an end in itself. Use what we have and what one gets in service for others. One wonders if there is not something wrong with our modern methods when so much of the world's wealth is in the hands or control of so few of the world's people.

STEWARDSHIP.

God owns, man simply possesses. Life and all that it implies is to be held in stewardship. Men are to be held responsible for the use they make of the gifts and capacities and the things committed to their care. He that has much, of him will much be required; he that has little, of him will little be required. God does not expect the impossible, but He does expect the reasonable. Life is a trust to be administered sacredly. It is a measure to be filled. "Blessed are those servants whom the Lord when He cometh shall find watching."

THE PRINCE OF PEACE AND OF DIVISION.

Jesus is the Prince of Peace, but He is also the world's greatest Divider. He came to wage an uncompromising warfare against sin. Enlistment in His cause often divides people who are otherwise in the most intimate relationships. Jesus would have His followers make no peace with evil in their own lives, or evil in any of its organized forms in society. No follower of Christ should hesitate to disagree with any one on any issue in which the ideals and spirit of Jesus are at stake. Christians are true to their Lord when they fight against the liquor traffic, against industrial oppression, against organized crime, against legalized prostitution, against corruption in politics, against war, or against any other evil of our day. We need people who are willing to make enemies in the cause of righteousness.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE

One of our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy.

"If thou wilt make the Almighty thy treasure . . . then shalt thou delight thyself in the Almighty . . . and thou shalt make thy prayer unto Him and He will hear thee."—Job 22: 25-27.

MONDAY.

MY WORK.

"Six days shalt thou labor, and do all thy work."—Ex. 20:9.

Today we must be about our work. We may return to it eagerly because we love it, but whether we love it or not, we must work. We are all agreed that work is a blessing, as well as a duty. The blessing of work is inherent in the quality of life. It is what we are here for. And its rewards, whatever form they may take, are the witness of achievement, the assurance that we have attained to some of life's values. So we will go cheerfully to our work, expecting that there we shall find the service for which we were made, and so the way to happiness and enduring rewards.

Prayer.—Creator and Governor of the world, whose unfinished work goes on forever, give us to see in our humble tasks a service rendered to Thee. Exalt and rejoice us with the sense that in diligence and faithfulness we are become co-workers with Thee. Amen.

TUESDAY.

MY PURPOSE.

"I must work the works of Him that sent me, while it is day; the night cometh, when no man can work."—John 9:4.

These are solemn words. Let us take them to heart today. What have we accomplished to justify the life and the abilities with which God has endowed us? And what are we doing now? The sigh of Cecil Rhodes may have an echo in every mind—"so much to do, and so little time." Life is much too short to spare any time for futilities. We may not stop to resent or retaliate an injury; nor can we afford to waste time on vain regrets. Let us remember, not with anxious fear, but as a cheerful incentive to diligence, that the night cometh.

Prayer.—My God and Father, who knowest both our abilities and our limitations, we pray that Thou wilt make us both eager and humble. Beyond all our striving, give us simple trust in Thee, who art able to over-rule our failures. Make us diligent without anxiety or discouragement. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

I MUST FINISH IT.

"I have finished the work which Thou gavest me to do."—John 17:4.

These are surprising words. In that brief life, what has been accomplished? The sower had cast his seed into the ground, leaving the earth to bring forth fruit of itself. As for us, perhaps we overestimate ourselves. It may be our vanity or our ambition that reproaches us. God may not expect so much of us as we think. And we are impatient of results. I would be sower and reaper too, which may not be. If we have reaped that whereon we spent no labor, shall we not sow for harvests that we will never see?

Prayer.—O God, who art Lord of the seed-time and of the harvest, and who alone dost bring fruitfulness unto the labors of men, accept of our unfinished tasks. Let no sense of failure dampen our ardor or embitter our hearts. Comfort us with the assurance that nothing put into the life of men is ever lost, that no labor spent for Thee is in vain. Amen.

THURSDAY.

REWARD FOR ME HERE.

"Verily, I say unto you, They have their reward (already)."—Matt. 6:16.

The principle of reward is a sound one. We must work for something, not merely to be occupied. What are we working for? Is it money, to lay up treasure on earth? Is it some little or great honor among men? Are we working for the means to gratify ourselves in pleasure? Or are we just working for a living? Whatever it is, we will work while there is expectation; after that there is only dreariness. The plight of the hypocrites was pathetic, because they had their reward already. There was nothing coming to them. Now we want to be a creditor with life, we want an eternal hope to sustain us. So we must work for something that cannot be paid off today or tomorrow; something that will satisfy, and yet be forever incomplete.

Prayer.—O God, who art the rewarder of them that diligently seek Thee, let us know and find life's true values, that we spend not ourselves in vain pursuits. Reveal to us the heavenly treasures, which time cannot exhaust nor enjoyment consume. Amen.

FRIDAY.

CAN I?

"For whatsoever is born of God overcometh the world."—1 John 5:4.

It is a time for us to be asking ourselves whether or not the world has been too much with us, laying waste our powers, and alienating us from the life of the Spirit. Do we find ourselves more at home in the world than in the fellowship of Christ? Are secular affairs more interesting to us than the things of the Spirit? We must be on our guard. For we know full well that the world may afford only temporary satisfactions. Its very successes may corrupt the heart. Its rewards may be only Dead Sea fruit, turning to ashes on the lips. I must master it or it will destroy my life.

Prayer.—O Lord my God, who art from everlasting to everlasting, and hast made us in the image of Thine own eternity, deliver us from the bondage of things; let them not have dominion over us. Give us an understanding heart, that we may choose for ourselves those things which make life sweet, and which shall not pass away. Amen.

SATURDAY.

WHAT MATTERS?

"And ye shall be sorrowful, but your sorrow shall be turned into joy."—John 16:20.

Our sorrow is ever with us. It is best to be so. To forget would be a shameful disloyalty. There is a strange comfort in remembering and grieving. It assures us that love is triumphant over death. Sorrow is not a mere passing episode; it is an initiation into a new and higher order of life, whose mysteries were hid till sorrow came and opened our eyes.

"Tis sorrow builds the shining ladder up,
Whose golden rounds are our calamities, whereon
Our feet firm planting, nearer God the Spirit climbs,

And has its eyes unsealed."

Prayer.—O Lord, support us all the day long of this troublous life, until the shadows lengthen, and the evening comes, and the busy world is hushed, and the fever of life is over, and our work is done. Then of Thy great mercy, grant us a safe lodging and a holy rest, and peace at the last; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

SUNDAY.

MY HOME.

"For whosoever shall do the will of God, the same is my brother, and my sister, and mother."—Mark 3:35.

So Jesus adapts Himself into every Christian family and makes our homes His own. The privacy of our homes is the more sacred because it includes Him. The home in Bethany was a favored retreat of our Lord. He was more than an honored Guest there, He was one of the family. Apparently it was there He elected to spend His last Sabbath on earth. This is for us a very precious day, because we can spend it at home with our own dear ones, in the most delightful intimacy. Here love reigns supreme. Here faith has its perfect fruition, for we can trust each other completely. Here we reveal ourselves as we never do elsewhere. There is no pretending here—it would be useless as well as disloyal. We know each other as we know nobody else. We know each other's faults, but behind them we perceive an inexpressible loveliness. In this comforting seclusion we are at rest. Here, if anywhere in this troubled world, there is peace. Let us make the most of this day of sacred privilege in the sweetest companionship life affords. There are the empty chairs, too—let them be occupied by the vanished ones, who live forever in my heart, though we see them in the flesh no more. We will speak of them today as though they were but temporarily absent—which in very truth they are. In spirit they are here, as in spirit the Master also is here, making the circle complete.

Prayer.—Our God and Father, who hast appointed to us our place and work in the world, and hast also given me a secure refuge from the storm in this home of ours, we thank Thee for this Lord's Day which closes the door behind us and the hopes which sustain us. And we pray that Thou wilt give us grace to improve the day, both for ourselves and for our dear ones; that no unkind or careless word of ours bring a pain to these loving hearts. And may the mention and the memory of those who sleep in Jesus bring heaven nearer, where is our eternal home. Amen.

O Love that wilt not let me go,
I rest my weary soul in Thee;
I give Thee back the life I owe,
That in Thine ocean depths its flow
May richer, fuller be.

LEST WE FORGET.

A visitor in the home of a wealthy friend was surprised to discover hanging upon the wall of his host's bedroom a somewhat faded, water-discolored life-preserver. He asked for an explanation. "That isn't an ordinary life-preserver to me," explained the host. "It kept me afloat ten hours after the steamer on which I had embarked had been sent to the bottom of the ocean by a submarine. I keep it where I can see it the last thing at night and the first thing in the morning. It helps to keep me thankful and appreciative." If Christians kept Christ before them more consistently, they would not only be far better Christians, but far more grateful Christians.—Moody Bible Institute Monthly.

"If there be no God and no future state, yet even then, it is better to be generous than selfish, better to be true than false, better to be brave than to be a coward."—F. W. Robertson.

HANDLING HANDICAPS.

By A. W. HURST.

Let us turn our attention this morning to a subject of vital interest and importance to every one—handling handicaps. We all have handicaps of one kind or another; they are common property. Some have physical handicaps, some have intellectual handicaps, others have social handicaps or handicaps inflicted by their environment and by their fellow-men, and still others have moral and spiritual handicaps. These handicaps may be the result of accident or a person may have been born with them. They may be due to impaired health or lack of normal strength. They may be the result of poor family or poor community advantages and influences. Again they may be due to the attitudes of one's fellows. But to whatever they may be due, none of us escape in one way or another.

But this is not to be regretted necessarily. Handicaps are not to be suffered, but are to be handled; and, if handled in the right way, may even be turned to good account. We gain strength by having to pull against the tide. Indeed, without them there could be no real strength of character produced. Character is not something ready-made which we accept, but is something priceless to be made by ceaseless and sincere effort. As Booker T. Washington said finely: "Character is the sum of all we struggle against." And as Halford E. Luccock says: "Lines of least resistance are lines leading away from character." Handicaps rightly handled make for strength of character.

Of course, some handicaps are not always recognized as such even by the majority of us. For example, the majority of people regard money and property and the luxuries which money and property afford as something greatly to be desired. Few think of wealth as being a handicap. But when you think how often it has prevented people becoming what it was in them to become, you begin to believe that wealth is more often a handicap than not. Not so often for the person who made the wealth, but for those who inherit it. Greater danger threatens on the rungs of the social ladder from above where wealth and luxury reign supreme than from below. With Richard Hovey, we can—

"Thank God for poverty
That makes and keeps us free,
And lets us go our unobtrusive way,
Glad of the sun and rain,
Upright, serene, humane,
Contented with the fortune of a day."

Now, there are two attitudes we may cultivate toward our handicaps. On the one hand we may make them an excuse for failure and for doing nothing. There are many examples of this attitude with which you are well acquainted. There are many examples of it in the New Testament. Jesus told of some people with this attitude. Said He, "A certain man made a great supper and bade many; and sent His servant at supper-time to say to them that were bidden, 'Come, for all things are now ready.' And they all, with one consent began to make excuse. The first said, 'I have bought a piece of ground, and I must needs go and see it; I pray thee have me excused.' And another said, 'I have bought five yoke of oxen, and I go to prove them; I pray thee have me excused.'" Most certainly property and possessions were a real handicap in these two instances. It is true even today with individuals, and it is true with larger social groups. It is true of America.

We are strong and we are wealthy. If that strength and wealth result in a policy of isolation, they are a national handicap. America has no mean task in handling her handicap of wealth and strength and influence among the nations of the earth.

Then, continued Jesus, "Another said, 'I have married a wife, and therefore I cannot come.'" There are many times handicaps within the home, and they may become occasion for excuse. In all these cases, their handicaps became occasion for excuse. And the regrettable part about it is that they missed the supper, for the Lord said: "None of these men which were bidden shall taste of my supper." Making an excuse of one's handicaps causes one to miss the really worth-while things. The rich young ruler made an excuse of his possessions and turned away sorrowful, when if he had handled his handicap rightly he might have been one of Christ's most helpful and influential disciples. But he made of his handicaps an excuse and missed the kingdom.

But many, instead of making their handicaps excuses, have made of them challenges and priceless privileges. Likely you have read or heard, as I heard this summer, the thrilling account of the American tennis champion who had to have his right arm amputated. That right arm had made him champion, but now it was gone. A real handicap, that! What did he do about it? Well, he didn't make it an excuse for giving up. He trained his left arm until he was able to handle the tennis racket as efficiently and accurately with his left arm as he had with his right. He made his handicap—the loss of his championship arm—a challenge to greater effort, and he succeeded.

We all admire Robert Louis Stevenson. He lived in a body which, as some one has said, "Nature, unkind from the beginning, seemed to delight in visiting with more unkindness—a 'soul's dark cottage, battered and decayed' almost from birth. Almost the whole of Stevenson's life was a voyage in the very penumbra of death." And yet he lived and worked with a fervor and a cheer which he kept ardent until his dying day. Listen to him as he writes, "It is not altogether ill with the invalid, after all. What sorry and pitiful quibbling all this is! It is better to live and be done with it, than to die daily in the sick-room. By all means, begin your folio, even if the doctor does not give you a year, even if he hesitates over a month, make one brave push and see what can be accomplished in a week." Far from making of his handicap an excuse, he made of it a challenge. He achieved a depth of insight and beauty of expression which inspired all other literary men to write their best. "While he lived," one man writes, "he moved men to put their utmost even into writings that quite certainly would never meet his eye. For five years the needle of literary endeavor in Great Britain quivered towards a little island in the South Pacific, as to its magnetic pole." And here is an illustration of why:

"Under the wide and starry sky
Dig the grave and let me lie;
Glad did I live and gladly die,
And I laid me down with a will.

"This be the verse you grave for me:
Here he lies where he longed to be;
Home is the sailor, home from sea,
And the hunter home from the hill."

A man of feeble vitality becoming the magnetic pole of the literary world and an inspiration to others to do their best—making of his handicap a challenge—who can fail to admire that? He made not only one brave push, but many, and he accomplished much.

That which is true of individuals is just as true of institutions and larger groups. Our own college here is an amazing example of what I mean. January 18, 1923, the administration building burned. That disaster could have been made an excuse for quitting and closing the doors of the institution. But hope did not go down with the building. Instead, that handicap became a challenge to greater plans and greater achievement until—who is not thrilled at the story of how Elon came back to be a greater and more influential Elon?

Or again, when this Church makes the illness of its pastor a challenge and carries on efficiently and nobly so that instead of suffering as a result, an increase of spiritual life and fervency is perceptible; that is enough to cheer any pastor.

As I read the story of the great Christian apostle, Paul, I am convinced that there is no greater example, unless it be the Christ Himself, of man who made of innumerable handicaps challenges to greater faith and effort and privileges for larger service. Listen to him: "Of the Jews, five times received I forty stripes save one. Thrice was I beaten with rods, once was I stoned, thrice I suffered shipwreck, a night and a day have I

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

For a long time our children have wanted a radio, but we had never seen the time when we thought we were able to buy one. In work of this kind, with more than a hundred children to care for, we use no funds for luxuries and things we can do without. Then, too, we have three buildings, and one will not do for all the buildings; but we decided if some generous persons would feel deep down in their heart that they wanted to donate one for one of the buildings, that we would accept it, trusting that some other generous hearts would contribute a radio for the other buildings.

Our good friend, Dr. J. W. Manning, of Norfolk, Va., got in touch with D. P. Pool Co., of Norfolk, Va., and they very generously donated a good second-hand radio in excellent condition and we installed it this week. When the young man was installing it, if the donor could have been present and seen the anxious hearts gathered around it waiting for the current to be turned on so they could catch the first words from the loud speaker, and witness the happy expressions on their little faces as it began to talk to them and sing beautiful songs, they would have been amply repaid for the sacrifice they made in donating it. Who will donate a new one or a second-hand one for the other buildings? I feel they would be a real blessing to the children in many ways. We are very grateful to D. P. Pool Co., of Norfolk, Va., for their happy donation.

A Question Answered.

We had a lady to ask us some weeks ago why it took twenty dollars per month to support a child, when we have our own milk, butter, wheat, meat, etc., with much of the clothing given us? In the first place, our friend must take into consideration that it costs us money to produce the things mentioned above, just like it costs any other farmer. It is not all profit by any means.

Let us consider for a moment what goes into the cost per child: We charge in that cost of $20.00 per month the salaries of superintendent, matrons, farmer, dairyman, all other expenses, such as office supplies, telephone, telegraph, insurance on buildings, printing, postage, etc., all food purchased, value of food donated, clothing purchased, clothing donated, laundry, household supplies, all transportation, all medical fees, hospital bills, etc. (which amounted to nearly one thousand dollars in 1930), teachers' salaries, books, etc. (more than a thousand dollars in 1930), water, light, power and coal for the entire orphanage plant, repairs on all buildings, painting, etc., all farm expenses—fertilizers, feeds, machinery, repairs, salaries for farmer, dairyman, all extra help used in filling silo, threshing wheat, etc. All these items go into that cost of $20.00 per month per child.

Every item of expense is accounted for, even if it is a spool of thread or a paper of pins. These bills are all charged on our expense account and filed, so the auditors can check the books at the end of the year and see where every penny of the money goes to during the year. In fact, every item of expense is charged in the $20.00 per month per child, except new buildings, new land purchased, new machinery, which does not replace old machinery; these items are charged in the capital account, as it is a permanent improvement.

We answer this question, as others might not know just what expense goes in the support of a child to make the $20.00 per month. You see, the food and clothes are not the only items that go into the expense of the child.

DECATUR, ALA.

Dear Editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN:

I wish to state we are delighted to note a real growth in our paper in the few months we have been receiving it. It comes regularly and on time. We usually read it at one sitting, though often reread it several times, especially some of the rich articles of Drs. J. O. A. and Staley. We preachers surely need preaching to often. We are carrying on in our part of Alabama what we call a Sunday School institute, meeting at least four times a year, inviting all schools in reasonable reach to send representatives to take part in planning for better Sunday Schools for all. We are looking forward to a county meeting soon, and possibly a county organization. We hope some time right soon to send in some new subscribers to THE SUN. Scarcity of cash is our handicap.

Your fellow-worker,

M. D. MORGAN.

METHODS CORNER

By REV. ELISHA A. KING, D. D.
Miami Beach, Fla.

Easter comes April 5th. There is a great difference of opinion among free Churches about whether to celebrate it or how to celebrate it. We have found by actual experience that it is in every way worth observing. We do not follow the "Church year" consistently, though we do observe Christmas, New Years and some other "days." We generally make note of "Lent" and plan a series of Lenten sermons. Many people do try to make Lent a period of soul culture. By taking advantage of the mental and spiritual attitude of the world at this season of the year, the Church can render a rare service to many people.

Passion Week begins with Palm Sunday, March 29th. There are many ways of using it. In case you have never done it, why not arrange for the Communion service to be held Thursday evening on the historical anniversary of the First Communion. Have a complete Church service that evening, and if possible receive new members into membership. Have a sermon and the Communion, appropriate music and congregational singing. Some Churches have nothing else during the week. If there is a regular Church prayer meeting, change the evening of that to Thursday. Easter will mean much more to everybody if a historical sequence is followed. If the Thursday Communion can be followed on Friday evening by a Good Friday service, so much the better. Then Easter morning will be ushered in with spiritual joy. The whole Easter Day may then be given to rejoicing.

At various times we have set aside Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday for special services, reading each night the story of the events of each day from the New Testament in chronological order. The hymns were selected with the same idea in view. The talks given by the minister dealt with the events of each day in order. Occasionally we arranged for union Passion Week services and had the other ministers speak on different themes growing out of the historical events. Opportunity was given for prayer and testimony from the people. These meetings often result in conversions.

There is a small book entitled, "With Christ Through Lent," by Rev. John M. G. Darms, D. D., published by Central Publishing House, Cleveland, Ohio, that might be suggestive to any one who wishes to put some of these ideas into practice. There is a small pamphlet called "His Last Week," which gives the events of Passion Week, published by Hope Publishing Company, Chicago. Easter sunrise prayer meetings are very helpful to follow all these pre-Easter meetings. Try some of these things.

been in the deep; in journeyings often, in perils of waters, in perils of robbers, in perils of mine own countrymen, in perils by the heathen, in perils in the city, in perils in the wilderness, in perils in the sea, in perils among false brethren, in weariness and painfulness, in watchings often, in hunger and thirst, in fastings often, in cold and nakedness."

Did he make them excuses for quitting and saying, "Oh, what's the use!" No. He pressed on towards the things that were before, with Jesus Christ as his Leader. When he could, he visited the Churches; but finally he got to Rome, where they fastened him in chains. How he yearned to visit these Churches again! But Paul was the kind of fellow that, when he couldn't do what he wanted to, he did what he could. So he began writing letters to those Churches. He made his prison the headquarters for missionary and evangelistic effort and pastoral work. He reached Onesimus, the run-away slave, and induced him to return to his master. Then when Onesimus was gone there was still the soldier at the other end of the chain that he might reach with the message of Christ. He could have made of that chain an excuse, but instead he made it a glorious challenge and privilege, and the streams of his influence have run down the centuries and through our modern life with tremendous life-giving power.

But what can we say more than to call attention to our Lord and Master who made of His every handicap a challenge and a matchless privilege, and who at the last made his cross an altar to which the millions of earth since that time should come, fall down and worship and adore? In trying to handle our handicaps, let us come to Him, for He can teach us how to make them challenges to greater effort and more faithful service, through the power of a vital religious faith.

ELON COLLEGE

AN ACCREDITED COLLEGE

of the

CONGREGATIONAL CHRISTIAN CHURCHES OF THE SOUTHEAST

ELON was founded to train Christian leaders for the New South.

ELON has done its task well—one graduate in seven being in the Christian ministry. The other six express Christian leadership in the various professions and vocations. Experience teaches that spiritual leadership must be indigenous.

The South is now a New South ready for an inclusive Church, the type of Church for which Elon has stood for forty years and for which she is prepared to produce capable leadership.

With no Church in the community, save the College Auditorium, ELON has practiced Christian Union for faculty, students, and community for four decades.

Its contribution to Christian Education is nationally known and approved.

Its Christian Education Building, providing laboratory facilities for religious leadership training, is unique and is the first college building of its type in the world.

ELON confines itself to undergraduate liberal arts work with that religious emphasis which befits the Christian College.

In ELON the Congregational-Christian Church has an asset of marvelous hopefulness.

The South needs her Yale, her Oberlin, her Carleton, her Pomona for the intellectual leadership of the United Church. Many regard ELON as strategically located and spiritually endowed to become such a center of illumination and leadership training.

OBITUARIES.

HOLLAND.

Dr. Job G. Holland, one of the leading physicians of this section and a resident of Holland, Va., from its earliest history, died at his home February 14, 1931, aged 69 years, 9 months and 7 days. He was the son of Rev. Robert and Margaret Holland, his father being a prominent minister of the Christian Church and for many years the pastor of Holland Christian Church.

He was graduated from the old Medical College in Richmond in 1884, and returned to his rural home one mile from Holland, where he practiced medicine for about eight years. In 1892 he was united in marriage to Miss Nanny Rawles Jones, daughter of James Rawles and Mary Leach Jones. Soon after their marriage they moved to Holland, which at this time was a beginning settlement of a few houses, and ever since that time Dr. Holland has been actively associated with the town's interests and growth. He was a member of the town council at the time of his death.

He was a faithful and loyal member of the Holland Christian Church, regular in his attendance and generous in his support. The last service of his Church which he was privileged to attend before he became too ill to attend services was that of his own ordination as a deacon. The Church and the community suffers a great loss in the demise of Dr. Holland.

He is survived by his widow and three sons—Dr. Gilmer Holland, who has been associated with his father in the practice of medicine; Ayler J. Holland, of the Holland-Jones Company, and Gordon L. Holland, engaged in the insurance business, all living in Holland. He is also survived by one sister, Mrs. I. A. Luke, of Holland, Va., and a host of relatives.

His body was interred in the Holland Cemetery. Funeral services were conducted by his pastor, assisted by Drs. W. W. Staley, N. G. Newman, I. W. Johnson, Rev. H. J. Davis and Rev. H. S. Hardeastle. W. M. JAY.

ROACH.

Killis Roach was born in Rockingham County, Va., June 20, 1869, and was called to the spirit world Friday, February 6, 1931. He was a member of the Christian Church for forty-five years. At one time he was a minister in the Valley Conference. He organized the High Point Church. He died of pneumonia at his home in Beaver Dam, near Earlsyville,

VOLUME LXXXIII

RICHMOND, VA., THURSDAY, MARCH 19, 1931

NUMBER 12

.. THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY ..

By Dr. W. C. WICKER.

CONGREGATIONAL APPOINTMENT.—

Rev. M. W. Van Tassell, a member of the Congregational Church and pioneer in community Church work of the United States, has begun work as the new leader of Oak Grove Avenue Community Church, Buffalo, N. Y. Dr. Van Tassell was first ordained as a minister by the Society of Friends and later by the Congregational Church.

PORTO RICO.—

After years of conference, with bright hours and dark hours, the Evangelical Church of Porto Rico is today a reality, and to all practical purposes three Churches have united, viz: the Christian, the Congregational, and the United Brethren, have ceased to exist. The marriage ceremony was performed on January 28th before a great assembly, composed of representatives from the Churches of the three missions. Dr. Fred Brownlee, general secretary of the American Missionary Association, was master of ceremonies. For those immediately concerned, this is the realization of many years.

IMPORTANT APPOINTMENT.—

Rev. Hugh V. White, of the First Congregational Church, Stockton, Calif., has accepted the invitation of the Prudential Committee of the American Board to serve as secretary, with special responsibility in the field of missionary education. Dr. White was for several years minister of the Congregation Church in Honolulu. The missionary work of any Church is its chief work; from Jerusalem to the utmost parts of the earth is its field. We should be witnesses unto Him in helping to carry out the great commission. All other Church organizations and institutions are means to this one end of evangelizing the earth.

BIBLE IN SCHOOLS.—

Sponsored by the Moral Welfare League of Arkansas, provision has been made for the compulsory reading of a Bible passage daily in the schools of the State. The new law provides that school teachers read Bible passages reverently, "without comment." It would be an advantage to require teachers to assign passages from the Scriptures for pupils to read during the grades as parallel readings from English studies, so as to familiarize children with the Bible as great literature. Nothing else has contributed so much to our American language as the study and reading of the Authorized Version of the Scriptures.

NATIVE MISSIONARY LEADERSHIP.—

Because of its well-prepared native leadership and the wisdom and vision of its missionary direction, Porto Rico is blazing some trails of strategic importance in missionary administration. Four years ago the general direction of the Presbyterian work was placed in the hands of a Porto Rican. These four years have been four of the best years in the history of the mission. One year ago the Disciples of Christ abolished the old missionary organization which was composed of all the continental American missionaries, together with two Porto Ricans, and set up a new organization of eleven members elected in the annual convention of the Churches.

BIBLICAL BATTLEFIELD.—

Armageddon, the famous battlefield of Palestine, has been purchased from the owner, an English-woman, and the Oriental Institute of the University of Chicago, under the leadership of Dr. J. H. Breasted, will explore these thirteen acres, which, it is believed, will prove to be a treasury of records of the ancient past. The purchase price was $3,500. Archeologists of the University of Chicago have been at work on this site for several years, under the direction of Dr. P. L. O. Guy. A large system of stables, built under the rule of Solomon, was discovered several months ago. The pick and shovel have revealed many treasures in the Orient in recent years.

UNEMPLOYED RELIEVED.—

The grave unemployment situation in Germany has created an unusual opportunity for the practical theologians of the German Church to demonstrate the efficiency of their theories concerning social action. Some Churches have installed workshops, where unemployed young men may work and earn the necessities of life instead of undergoing the humiliation of accepting charity. Others maintain reading-rooms for the unemployed or offer complete popular college courses to those who desire to complete their education. Many of the Churches in the larger cities distribute free lunches through their social agencies. To help a man to help himself is far more helpful than to make him an object of charity.

FEDERAL PRISONS.—

In a hearing of the House Committee on Appropriations, Attorney General William D. Mitchell gave the following testimony: "During the last twenty years there have been four statutes passed that bring about the incarceration of more prisoners than any other laws we have—the original prohibition act, the Harrison narcotic act, the Mann act, and the Dyer act, relating to transportation of automobiles in interstate commerce. I analyzed the other day our prison population in accordance with the statutes under which they had been incarcerated, and the greatest number of prisoners was under the Harrison act—2,700. Under the prohibition act, the number was about 1,800. The Dyer act was third—transportation of automobiles in interstate commerce. Postal offenses were fourth. That is an old-time statute. The Mann act was fifth."

MINISTERS RETURN TO SCHOOL.—

Forty per cent of the ordained Protestant ministers in Porto Rico have returned to school. At the beginning of the present school year the department of religious education of the Evangelical Seminary offered special graduate courses for the benefit of active ministers of the island. One group meets in the seminary every Thursday morning for three hours. In this group are ministers who come from more than half the length of the island. Some belong to the older group who graduated before much stress was placed upon religious education; others are recent graduates of the seminary, but all are entering with enthusiasm upon the formulating of the underlying principles of ingenious programs of religious education. Ministers never get too old to need study and improvement. They should continuously prepare themselves for leadership.

EMMANUEL MOVEMENT.—

"An incisive discussion of Jesus' miracles of healing, in the light of our modern knowledge of psychology, is a valuable contribution to the study of the gospels. The conclusion is that New Testament scholarship and modern psychological medicine join hands in putting the healing ministry of Jesus beyond all reasonable doubt." It is evident that Jesus doubtless took advantage of psychic laws that are only in our time beginning to gain recognition by scientific authorities.

The central emphasis of a new book recently issued by the Emmanuel Episcopal Church says: "The central emphasis is upon the marked physical improvement which follows the release of the soul from anxiety, fear, a sense of inferiority, or other forms of mental conflict, and the attainment of a more serene inner spirit." This may explain many of the miracles which Christ performed in driving out wicked spirits from the afflicted.

THE BIBLE UNTIL.—

Until the day star arises in your hearts (2 Pet. 1:19). "I accept this 'word of prophecy' as reliable, the certain and definite record of the experience of men and women, in and through whom God has been revealing His purpose down the ages. Men who could say, 'We have not followed cunningly devised fables.' The people of Samaria testified, 'We no longer believe because of what you said. We have heard for ourselves.' The Bible is the sure word of prophecy, and you can find no better assurance 'Until the day star arises in your hearts.' Those who have any doubt as to their Christian assurance should continue to read the Bible for such assurance 'until' a more sure word of prophecy comes by the day star of Christ's redeeming power is realized in Christian experience. Then we shall treasure the book more because it reveals to us the experience of others who have tried this sure word of prophecy."

NOTES-PERSONALS

The quality of determination, if hitched to the habit of worth-while work, is one of the greatest forces any human being can have.

"Does reckoning with the future world make any difference in our lives here and now?" A pastor used that as his text in a recent Sunday sermon, and members who heard the sermon say it will not soon be forgotten.

Miss Linda A. Eastman, who heads the third largest library in the United States and has the distinction of handling more books than any other woman in the world, finds that people read more books in times of depression than in times of prosperity. This, then, may be put down as another asset and blessing of depression.

The Congregation Conference of the Carolinas is to convene in annual session with our Greensboro (First) Church on May 5, 6, 7. Rev. John Brittan Clark, Tryon, N. C., is moderator. Our Eastern North Carolina Conference and our North Carolina and Virginia Conference have each named ten lay and ten ministerial delegates to attend the Conference.

Our Ocean View pastor, Rev. J. H. Warren, received five new members into the Church in February, with an average Church attendance at the evening service of eighty-one, and an average Sunday School attendance of 128; with an average offering in the Sunday School of $5.95. This compares well with, and even surpasses, some of our older Churches and schools.

Our deep and heartfelt sympathy is extended to our neighbor and brother-minister, Rev. L. L. Wyrick, Elon College, N. C., in the loss by accidental death recently of his father. Our obituary column carries an account of the passing of this good man, and we join with the loved ones who mourn over the tragedy that carried away, in the vigor of manhood, one who was consecrated to his Church and his Lord.

Rev. Alfred W. Hurst, pastor of Elon Community Church, recently sent each of his members a copy of the thirty-two-page booklet gotten out by the Federal Council of Churches, entitled "The Fellowship of Prayer." It contains a text from Luke, a brief exposition of the same, and a prayer for each day of the Lenten season, from February 18th to and including Easter, April 5th. This was a most gracious and considerate act on the part of this beloved pastor.

"You can tell the character of a workman by the kind of a workshop he keeps, and a preacher by the sort of library he has." By that proverb, one easily discovers the sort of workman and preacher Rev. A. W. Andes, Harrisonburg, Va., is. No wonder he is one of our most solid and substantial and alert pastors. His library would do credit to an institution, much less a pastor's study. Bro. Andes has a passion for good books and knows them when he sees and needs them.

If every Church and every member in every Church does not make an Easter or annual offering for missions, it will not be from lack of individual envelopes now in possession of Church secretaries and pastors. Envelopes for the offering have been sent, at some expense and cost, to every Church, and these will be a waste and a loss only if they are not properly distributed. Every member of every Christian congregation should have the invitation and the opportunity to have some part in our annual missionary offering.

One of the strong men of the ministry in the Virginia Valley Conference, and one of the very active pastors, is Rev. W. L. Weekley, Harrisonburg, Va., coming to the Conference and his present pastorate of five Churches from our Congregational constituency last fall. Rev. Joe French having resigned his pastorate to further pursue studies in a theological seminary, Dr. Weekley was called and is already held in high esteem both in the Churches he is serving so ably and in the Conference to which he is regarded as a valuable accession.

Elm Avenue, Portsmouth, Va., Rev. T. N. Lowe, pastor, is one of our loyal, progressive and growing Churches. The Sunday School had overflowed all available space in the building as it was, and even in this time of depression the beloved pastor and people of vision with him determined the Lord's work should not suffer from lack of suitable and adequate quarters for the young people of the growing Sunday School. So four class-rooms and a "kitchen" have been added, and last week were thrown open for service. Congratulations to pastor and people.

The Valley of Virginia Conference met in mid-winter session at Bethlehem Church, near Harrisonburg, Thursday, March 12th. The session was well attended, delegates coming from most of the Churches to take counsel together about Church plans and problems. Rev. R. L. Williamson, Winchester, presided, and Rev. A. W. Andes, Harrisonburg, was secretary. While no matters of an official nature were adopted, real problems were discussed, and the day was one of inspiration and good fellowship. The conference voted to have a similar session next winter. This is a procedure that other conferences may follow to advantage.

"Dr. L. E. Smith has been invited to meet with a council of the world's Christian leaders in London the last of March. Should Dr. Smith accept, he will sail within the next few days, he said last night. For many years Dr. Smith has been President of the Southern Christian Convention, and is intimately connected with the work of the entire Congregational-Christian denomination of America." The above, from the Norfolk Virginian-Pilot, will be of interest to the many friends of Dr. Smith. Though he feels, because of the press of duties at this time, he cannot accept, he greatly appreciates the honor, and covets the rare privilege of sitting in council with this august body of world-renowned Christian leaders.

The Woman's Missionary Rallies for the North Carolina Woman's Conference, according to a statement from Mrs. C. H. Rowland, president, are as follows: Palm Street Church, April 14th, Rev. J. L. Neese, pastor; Mebane, April 15th, Rev. R. A. Whitten, pastor; Durham, April 17th, Rev. Stanley C. Harrell, pastor; Shallow Well, April 21, Rev. T. Fred Wright, pastor; Parks Cross Aoads, April 22, Rev. J. C. Cummings, pastor; Henderson, April 24, Rev. H. E. Crutchfield, pastor; Liberty (Halifax, Va., district), Nathalie, Va., April 28th, Rev. C. E. Newman, pastor. Mrs. Rowland is exceedingly anxious that announcements be made of these meetings and that a large delegation attend each rally.

REVIVAL MEETINGS.

The First Christian Church, Portsmouth, Va., began its spring revival March 16th, with the Rev. Dr. McKendree Robbins Long, of Statesville,

N. C., leading same, to continue through March 29th. Dr. Long has been peculiarly prepared for the ministry, educated both in America and abroad, and is a converted artist of great reputation, possessing unusual ability. He is a nephew of our beloved Dr. Daniel A. Long, and a son of the former Judge B. F. Long, recognized as the leading jurist of North Carolina.

Dr. Long has none of the cheap showmanship of the professional evangelist, but is endowed of God with wisdom and grace. He is simply a man sent from God to bear God's message from God's word in the power of God's Holy Spirit.

The people of the Church invite all who can to take advantage of these services, which have every assurance of being the greatest, under God, since the organization of the Church. Services will be conducted each evening throughout the week at 7:30, and at regular hours on Sabbath, and at 2:30 P. M. in addition.

The pastor, H. C. Caviness, and the people earnestly ask the prayers of God's people, that the meeting be one directed entirely by the Holy Spirit for the glory of God. (Romans 15:30.)

H. C. CAVINESS, Pastor.

METHODS CORNER

By REV. ELISHA A. KING, D. D.

Miami Beach, Fla.

One of the difficult tasks most Churches have to face is the raising of the benevolence apportionment. The greatest danger is that we do not begin early enough in the year. There is a tendency to put it off until fall. Churches that have a benevolent budget separate from their current expense budget, and that have an annual every-member canvass, get on very well, or should get on well. But all our attempts, be they successful or only partially so, may be helped by supplemental endeavor.

From a considerable experience in the East, Middle West and the Pacific Coast, and nine years here, I am prepared to say that I think the secret of raising a benevolence budget is tied up with missionary information. In other words, if the Church desires large missionary gifts, it may have them by educating everybody within the circle of Church life in missionary endeavor.

There are many ways of doing this. I believe the best way yet devised for the Sunday School is the World Service method. In brief, this means to secure a World Service chart, decide on a reasonable goal for the year, and begin at once giving monthly missionary programs along the line suggested by the denominational projects. We have found that the young people enjoy "taking part," and they also plan their gifts to be larger on "Missionary Sunday."

Another way to educate the adults is by giving pageants on Sunday nights. There are a great many splendid missionary pageants, and young people like to "be in" such things, and the older people will come to see and hear. Another way is to secure the splendid stereopticon slides furnished by both home and foreign missionary societies and use them Sunday nights. One way of getting a good audience is to announce "Travel Talks" on this or that country and arrange the slides so as to show the country and then put in enough missionary pictures at the end to show some results of Christian effort in those places where we have missions.

Many men have been won to the value of missions by reading Cornelius Patton's "Foreign Missions Under Fire" and his "The Business of Missions" (and good book-store). Next week I will speak of other methods of reaching the people of the parish so as to bring in generous missionary offerings.

CONGREGATIONAL NEWS

REV. E. C. GILLETTE, Editor; REV. F. P. ENSMINGER, and REV. M. J. SWEET, Associates.

NEW PROGRAM for Columbia is being prepared. To help in this work, Dr. W. Knighton Bloom and the pastor-at-large will visit this Church Sunday, March 22nd.

ATTENTION OF TRUSTEES of Country Life Academy is again called to the meeting on March 21st, at the Academy Building, Star, N. C. The meeting is called for 10:30 A. M., and continues till 12 M. At 12:30 luncheon will be served with the body of students in the academy dining-hall.

DR. JESSE K. MARDEN, who, with his wife, has been visiting relatives in Florida, has spoken at a number of our Churches and has made a splendid presentation of foreign missions as represented in his own work as medical missionary in Athens, Greece. Dr. and Mrs. Marden terminated their visit in Florida on March 18th.

THE YOUNG PEOPLE'S CONFERENCE of Georgia and Alabama Christian and Congregational Churches meets at Lanett, Ala., just over the Georgia line, at West Point, March 27, 28, 29. The program is in the hands of two extension workers, Miss Campbell and Miss Brackin. The meeting will close Sunday afternoon with an impressive Communion service.

MISS STELLA M. JORDAN, one of the field secretaries of the Congregational Education Society, has spent several days in Florida, speaking especially to the Sunday School and young people's workers of the Churches. Her itinerary was largely on the East Coast, spending most of the time with the Churches of the Miami region. Reports of her work were most gratifying.

DR. LEWIS H. KELLER, formerly president of Atlanta Theological Seminary, has been invited to supply the pulpit at Lake Helen, Fla., for the balance of this season, filling the vacancy caused by the death of Dr. Scott F. Hershey. Dr. and Mrs. Keller are already at work at Lake Helen and have been graciously welcomed by the people, who are happy under their leadership.

SPECIAL MEETINGS for Conference will be held in the Churches of South Georgia, with the pastor-at-large present, as follows: Friendship and Antioch Churches, at Baxley, March 23rd, evening; Whitehall and Millwood, respectively, in their own buildings, Tuesday, March 24th, during the day; Union Hill, Pearson, Tuesday evening at the Church; Doerun, New Light and Poplar Arbor, with neighboring Christian Churches invited, Wednesday evening, March 25th; Columbus, Rose Hill Christian Church, Thursday evening.

LAGRANGE PASTOR RESIGNS: Rev. C. C. Hamilton, pastor for the second time at LaGrange, Ga., has resigned to take effect April 1st. Mr. Hamilton is at the present carrying on a revival meeting at Christian Church, Columbus, but returns to LaGrange for his regular service Sundays. The LaGrange Church is preparing to call another pastor in the near future. Their progressive program announced a few weeks ago is being carried on by the official boards and pastor. Everything is going on an expectant basis, and Easter will be a great day for this Church.

THE ADVISORY BOARD of the Southeast will meet in annual session at Nashville, Tenn., College Side Church-house, April 14-17. All staff officers and officers and delegates kindly take notice. This will be another notable and historic meeting, one no one will willingly miss.

President Campbell, of the seminary foundation, and Dr. Jason Noble Pierce, pastor of College Side Church, unite in extending a most cordial invitation to all who can take advantage of this opportunity. In this connection it is well to call attention to the Rural Pastors' Conference at Vanderbilt during this same period, April 6-17, inclusive.

REV. W. CARL PARKER is happy in being called to minister to three strong rural Churches—Duncan's Creek, Center, and County Line. And these Churches seem happy and content with the best arrangement that can be made for their work. Mr. Parker is an expert decorator and finds it possible, apart from his business duties, to be the minister to these Churches. He has been with them for several years, and the old story grows in increased interest as the years go by. The time should come when all his time could be given to the work of a regular pastorate. In that way, Churches become strong in the work of the kingdom. Strength to his arm and grace to his lips and blessings on his work in these important Christian centers.

CONGREGATIONAL COMRADES of Chattanooga plan to meet with a week-end program every three months. The last rally included addresses with round-table discussions, a sight-seeing tour, supper on Missionary Ridge, games and songs, a good-night story, Church school and preaching and Church services at Union Church, where the sermon was preached by Rev. Lucy T. Ayres, a Christian Endeavor meeting, and a play entitled "Forgiveness." The Comrades' officers are Robert L. Murphy, president, Pilgrim Church; Leslie Poe, vice-president, Daisy Church; Grace Hair, secretary and treasurer, Soddy Church; program committee: Miss Azilee Johnson, Grace Hair, Jessie Stinecipher, Miss Marguerite Davison, and Miss Dorothy French were active helpers. The young people of nine Congregational Churches were invited.

AT CENTRAL CHURCH, Atlanta, the pastor-at-large, Rev. Mils J. Sweet, dropped in unannounced Sunday morning, February 22nd. He had just listened to a fine radio sermon by the pastor, Dr. Dodge, on "Why is Darrow an Agnostic?" It was a sane and telling reply to the wandering thinklets of the great criminal lawyer. Dr. Dodge showed how a man, great in his own department, may become utterly silly when entering another. Darrow was shorn of any vestige of learning when it came to a knowledge of the Bible and its teachings. Dr. Dodge did not mince matters or dodge any question, but came straight out and called the agnostic the ass that he really is when he opens his mouth to speak on religion and the Holy Book. It was good to listen to. And there was a good audience in the large auditorium of Central Church. "How to Be Happy, or the Way to Happiness," was the theme, and one found four good ways in which he might find human felicity and enjoyment. It was a good sermon for any man's Church, and the people present seemed happy to be there.

GREENSBORO Christians ask Congregationalists of the Carolinas to meet with them at the annual meeting May 5, 6, 7. And the board of directors are unanimous in accepting this fine invitation. At the same time, the directors acknowledge the magnanimous courtesy of the United Church, Raleigh, in releasing the Conference from the practical acceptance of their invitation given some time ago. All in all, it is a very definite advance in the line of the union of the two denominations, for at this meeting there will be delegates from both denominations and there will be propositions offered to unite both into one great Conference of the Carolinas on an equal basis and for the general good. Greensboro Christians are to be thanked and at the same time congratulated—thanked by the Congregationalists for the splendid spirit of hospitality; congratulated by both Congregationalists and Christians for the honor of being hostess to delegates who will, no doubt, make denominational history along union lines. It will make it easier in future days for individual Churches to catch the spirit actuating the national leaders in working out plans for the United Church of the country. Hats off and many thanks to Greensboro!

FLORIDA CONFERENCE.

The annual meeting of the Florida Congregational Conference is to be held with the Church at Orange City April 21-23. The program has not been completed, but the preliminary announcement carries the interesting information that Dr. Ernest W. Riggs and Dr. W. Knighton Bloom are to be in attendance and to be speakers at the conference. Dr. Bloom needs no introduction. Dr. Riggs is one of the secretaries of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions and was president of one of our Near East colleges and was a delegate to the Jerusalem Conference. He is well informed on missionary problems, and especially on conditions in India. He is also chairman of the committee on reference and council of the Foreign Missions Conference of North America. This committee is equivalent to the executive committee, and this office is one of great importance to the interdenominational missionary work of the Churches. Dr. Riggs is also to visit other parts of the Southeast and is to be present at the Southeastern Advisory Board meeting in Nashville.

CHURCH BOOKLETS.

We have received interesting booklets or pamphlets about three of our Churches recently. The first is a beautifully illustrated booklet concerning the Coral Gables Congregational Church, of which the pastor is Rev. Don G. Henshaw, with Rev. O. H. Denney as associate for parish activities. The pamphlet has no less than eighteen cuts of various sizes, showing the beautiful Church from several angles; also the interior of the Church, group pictures of the School of Religious Education and of the faculty, the young people's group, the choir guild and the pastors. There is a fine story about the development of the city and the origin and growth of the Church, its creed, organization and services.

The Circular Church at Charleston, S. C., of which Rev. George N. Edwards is pastor, has issued a very interesting historical leaflet with regard to this ancient and noble organization. The story of this Church is one that should be read by all those who are interested in our Southeastern Congregational-Christian development. The leaflet traces the story of the Church from the day of the French Huguenots down to the present pastorate.

The First Church, St. Petersburg, has issued its annual year-book, which gives several illustrations of the Church and the picture of the pastor, Dr. Kerrison Juniper, with the pastor's report and the reports of the treasurer and the various Church organizations. It also prints a list of the officers of the Church and the full list of members.

All of these Church booklets will undoubtedly be gladly sent to any who may write to the pastors for them. We highly commend this form of Church publicity.

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

PROHIBITION AND YOUTH.

Not a few well-meaning people are saying that there is more drinking, and even more intoxication, now among young people than in the days before prohibition. In the New York Times, February 11th, Mrs. C. H. Sabin, chairman of the Woman's Organization for National Prohibition Reform, and Mrs. John S. Sheppard, of the same organization, are reported as declaring, "There is increased drunkenness among the young of the nation as one of the worst effects of prohibition." Mrs. Sheppard's statement reads as follows: "In going through the State, I find that women are especially aroused with the dangers which threaten their children. How many mothers did you know before prohibition who ever worried about their daughters drinking? An honest answer to that question tells us the change which has come about." This statement, on the part of these women employed to carry on propaganda against prohibition are repeated ad infinitum ad nauseam by hundreds who are not employed and who are not aware that they are playing right into the hands of the anti-prohibitionists in making statements such as the above, which the facts do not warrant or verify. For the sake of clarity, let us take just a peep at some of the actual facts obtaining before national prohibition was enacted. In 1916 the Senate of the State of Illinois had a vice committee, who went into the matter of vice and its causes in many cities and communities of that State. Pages 491-2 of this report the following is found: "That intoxicants play a conspicuous part in the undoing of many girls is a matter of general knowledge so adequately covered in previous reports and court records as to require no further elaboration." Mrs. Joseph Bowen, testifying to the commission, said: "The girl mothers coming in to us assure us that their downfall began in the liquor-selling dance hall."

Mrs. Ira Couch Wood, president of the Illinois Training School for Nurses, testified before the city council license committee on drink as follows: "I want to make a plea for the girls between fifteen and twenty. I am speaking here as the representative of the nurses of the Cook County Hospital, where we have to face the facts squarely. Disgrace and disease are the results of the sale of liquor at dances."

Surely Mrs. Sabin and Mrs. Sheppard, with many others without the actual facts to verify their position, have not taken the pains to inform themselves of the actual drinking and intoxication among young people in pre-prohibition times.

The saloon-keepers, who, though their saloons have been taken from them, have never yet given up the fight (there being 50,000 of them yet (ex-saloon-keepers now) who are paying a dollar a month each to carry on wet propaganda), have the same spirit of indifference for the welfare of youth that they had in the old days. Back in the old days the saloon-keeper knew that his recruits must come from the youth, and both in open and in secret he sought to cultivate that fruitful field. A representative of the Retail Liquor Dealers' Association, speaking to a convention in Columbus, Ohio, in 1912, said: "We must create the appetite for liquor in the growing boys. Men who drink will die . . . and if there is no new appetite created, our counters will be empty as well as our coffers. The open field for the creation of appetite is among the boys. Nickels expended in treats to boys now will return in dollars to your tills after the appetite has been formed."

The difference between the old days and the present is that these same advocates of destruction of youth are at work now with more subtlety and in secret, because they know their business and nefarious traffic have been outlawed. Dr. Alexander Lambert, of Bellevue Hospital, New York City, after making a study on the subject of alcoholism some time before prohibition was adopted, told the world that "68 per cent of the alcoholics investigated began drinking before they were twenty-one years of age, and that almost 30 per cent of them began drinking before they were sixteen." Is it possible that Mrs. Sabin and Mrs. Sheppard, and those who take up their propaganda and pass it on are ignorant of such facts? Is it possible that people believe that prohibition and the outlawry of liquor have produced, or even increased, drunkenness among the youth of the land when facts, stern, cold facts, like the above, and enough others of similar kind to fill fifty issues of this paper, stare them in the face and confront them from all the reliable records of pre-prohibition times?

"But prohibition is not enforced." Of course, it isn't. A policeman in a thriving city told this writer not long since it was not enforced! This policeman said, "The year before prohibition passed I had forty-four men and women in the city lock-up for drunkenness on Christmas night. The Christmas night after prohibition passed I had four men there." "No," said he, "prohibition was not enforced against the four who broke the law and so became a spectacle and a subject of common comment, but something had taken place in the lives of the other forty who were not in the lock-up. I guess they, or most of them, were at home with their families."

How can a law be enforced universally when there are thousands of individuals who themselves want liquor and are willing to break the law of the land to have it? And there are other thousands who want the profit from it, that through its sale to others they may live on beds of ease and rake in the shekels from the lives and pockets of those they debauch. We have a long way to go yet, but we have, at any rate, made a start. We haven't stopped people from stealing, nor committing murder, but we have gone a long way in that direction by having laws passed which make a spectacle and an outlaw of the thief and the murderer.

Yes, there are a great many young people who are cultivating the taste for liquor. They realize, however, they do so against the law of the land and the State under which they live, and they know full well if they indulge they must go against that law and under cover do that which they dare not do openly. Some one has defined law as "the organized virtue of the community and of the State." The organized virtue of the community and of the State has declared, by the greatest majority ever given by the States of this nation, that the manufacture and sale of intoxicants is against the common good and should not be legally permitted. There, at any rate, stands the declaration of law, "The organized virtue of the community." Many, very many, do violence to that law, but ever and always to their own hurt and to the hurt of the community, whose virtue has shown or at least pointed them, to the better way.

RUTH.

One of the very thrilling books of the Old Testament is Ruth. It is a book of adventure, of romance, and of achievement; but it is far more than that. It is a book of contrasts and of challenge. It opens with a famine and closes with a feast. It begins in need, it ends in abundance. It starts with defeat, concludes with triumph. It opens and advances with human love, it culminates and closes with divine love. It lifts the curtain on a pastoral family scene, it drops it on a royal procession. It is a long call from Elim-elech, a man of the world and a poor provider, to David, a man of God and a prince among men.

When this is said we have just begun to get a glimpse of the beauty and the meaning of the Book of Ruth. And it is not Ruth, the woman as such, even with her charm of manner and devotion to her loved ones, that fills these brief pages with such delight. It is Ruth the Moabitess reacting to the vision and voice of God, that gives the book its bigness and its beauty. There are just four brief chapters, covering less than four pages of average size, in the book. Yet in twenty-two places—more than five times to the page, or chapter—the name Jehovah appears and is the dominating theme and prevailing power in the book and in the life of the lovely Ruth. It is not the plan, or purpose, or program of Elim-elech, or Naomi, or Ruth, or Boaz that stand out most prominently and that are portrayed most vividly in the pages of Ruth. It is the plan, the purpose, the program of God that give meaning to these few pages and seal them with eternal significance and meaning.

Ruth, even in her liveliness, has no majesty and no meaning apart from God's purpose with her and God's plans for her. It is one of the first, as it is to this day, one of the mightiest of God's missionary messages to the world. Ruth, out of the hated and despised people of Moab, by the mercy and righteousness of God, becomes the ancestress of David and your Lord Christ. When God gets hold of a human heart, touches with His finger the immortal soul, the heart throbs anew and that soul blossoms afresh unto all eternity.

In Ruth's heart a love more than human had control, and eternity, rather than time, left its imprint there. In the book, and in the life of Ruth, we catch a vision of God, hear a voice from God, and see victory through God. The more abiding vision in this wonderful little book is the vision of God, who took a widow in Moab and made her the mother of kings; a voice that called to this soul in Moab and brought her out as a heroine of all time; a victory over idolatry, superstition and false worship for and through the worship of the one true, eternal, omnipotent Jehovah.

SELF-DENIAL WEEK.

The Church stands alone in one field. That is the field of missionary service and activity. There are thousands of Churches and ministers and teachers and physicians and nurses doing missionary work in the homeland and in fields afar. How came one here, or there? The Church, through its missionary activity, is the cause and the explanation.

And the only way the Church can do this work of grace and salvation is through self-denial. God through His Son instituted and is carrying on the missionary work, and He said, "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself." This is our Saviour's method of financing the biggest business and the one spiritual task of this earth.

This year our Convention is calling upon our Christian Churches to raise $50,000 for missions—one-half for home, one-half for foreign missions. We can do this great and good things in one way, and one only, namely: through self-denial.

The Mission Board is asking that pastors and Churches set aside the week before Easter—March 30th to April 5th—as "Self-Denial Week." During that week, it will enrich our Church membership morally, mentally, spiritually to find some object of necessity, comfort, luxury or indulgence, and deny themselves of it and give the price thereof to the one spiritual task of the Church—its missionary task.

Only the Church does this work; and it is the one work, the one enterprise of the Church that no other order, society, fraternity or institution engages in. Will the Church fall down in the one task divinely appointed to it? We of the Church will answer in our willingness or unwillingness to deny ourselves something for our Lord.

NURSES.

At the end of the fourth century, when the temples of Aesculapius, Hygeia, and Serapis were closed, the sick poor were left adrift upon the cold sea of neglect. Christian monasteries and temples were opened to the poor and orders arose to provide for the sick.

The eleventh century saw the beginning of hospitals, rendered more necessary by the Crusades; and, on account of the death of physicians, women assisted in hospital work.

In the twelfth century, Hildeberg, Abbess of Rupertsberg, organized a school for training nurses for service in hospitals. From this school grew up the modern training of nurses for three lines of service.

1. Charitable hospital service.
2. Charitable service for poor sick people in their homes.
3. Paid service for rich sick people.

In 1840, Miss Fry's nursing sisters cared for outcasts in London.

In 1853, Florence Nightingale, born in Florence, of English parents, returned to England after an inspection of hospitals all over Europe, and gave great impetus to training of nurses; and, during the Crimean War, she went out with thirty-four nurses and made herself world-famous by caring for sick and wounded soldiers in that war of 1854-1855.

At the close of the war she gave 50,000 pounds to found the Nightingale Home at St. Thomas Hospital, for the training of nurses. She was often consulted during the Civil War and the Franco-Prussian War on camp hospitals.

Bellevue Training School for Nurses was founded in New York City and graduated its first class in 1872, sixty-two years ago. Training schools for nurses are now conducted in most of the cities of the United States, and the time required for graduation is one year, two years and, in Philadelphia and New York, three years.

Nursing is now a profession almost as important as that of physicians. They serve by day and by night and fill a much-needed place in hospitals and in homes. Patients often say, "The nurses are so kind to me"—and they are.

All of this is the result of the coming of Jesus into the world, not only afflicted by sin but also by disease. He is the great Physician. If Christianity had done nothing more than give the world doctors, hospitals and nurses, it would deserve the faith and allegiance of mankind. W. W. S.

HOW TO LIVE THE CHRISTIAN LIFE.

1. Believe that through Christ you have received eternal life (1 John 5:10-13). Then by faith walk in newness of life (Rom. 6:4; 1 Tim. 6:12). The Christian life is not an imitation of Christ, but the new resurrection life of Christ manifested in the believer. He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life (1 John 3:36).

2. Read your Bible daily. Memorize certain portions that are helpful, especially the promises. Meditate much upon these. They will be food to your soul (1 Peter 2:21), light to your pathway (Psa. 119:105), and weapons for your warfare (Eph. 6:17).

3. Pray to God as your Heavenly Father, daily, in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Thank Him for all things. Count your blessings and remember that they are from God. Recognize your weakness as well as your sinfulness, and pray for help and victory. They that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength (Isa. 40:31).

4. Confess the Lord Jesus Christ as your personal Saviour, especially when your silence would mean to deny Him. He has said, "Whosoever, therefore, shall confess me before men, him will I confess also before my Father which is in heaven (Matt. 10:32-33).

5. Avoid temptations. They are bound to come, but do not get in the way of them (Psa. 1:1). Avoid evil companions and make friends of God's people. Remember that you will not be tempted above that you are able to bear, and that there is always a way of escape through Christ (1 Cor. 10:13).

Fifty Thousand Dollars for Missions!

A CALL TO SELF-DENIAL

The last session of the Southern Christian Convention voted unanimously in calling upon our people and Churches this year to contribute $50,000 for Missions—$25,000 for Home, $25,000 for Foreign work. Our Year-Book shows there are 32,000 of us. If we of the Southern Convention will give $2.00 per member—$1.00 to help build Churches and support the Gospel at home, in needy places; $1.00 to carry the Gospel to those who are perishing without it—we will easily reach our goal.

Thus far, since September 1st, the Sunday Schools, Women's Missionary Societies, and a few individuals of their own volition have contributed to March 1st $11,052.81. This leaves a balance of $38,947.19. What shall our answer be? How much prayer shall we offer? how much preaching shall we do? how much self-denial shall we practice in order to make this the best year for the ingathering of souls, the output of means, and spiritual enrichment of our Churches and people we of the Convention have thus far had?

Prepare by self-denial for a great Easter offering. Let every one have some part in this great and good undertaking.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Farming is the natural and the biblical occupation of cultivating the soil, and it is the essential of the best in civilization. God made the world; then made man. And "The Lord God took the man, and put him into the Garden of Eden to dress it and to keep it" (Gen. 21:15). Man was not only to keep it, but to dress it. Farming can be made beautiful as well as useful. The garden idea implies decoration as well as cultivation. The great men of the world have come from the country. The great mothers of the world have come from the country. The great rulers of the world have come from the country. The great preachers of the world have come from the country. The country is the place to raise men and women, and the city is the place to market them. The cities have attracted too many people from the country, and the tenant system of farming has reduced the value of land and the importance of neighborhoods or communities. Money crops, to the exclusion of real farming, have reduced the success of farming and the real value of farmers. There are three important steps in successful farming.

The first is to make a living. That requires a variety of products—bread, meat, butter, eggs, fruits, vegetables, berries, and all that a good dining-room requires. It is false farming to raise all cotton, peanuts, tobacco, truck, or anything else for market. If the money crop succeeds and the farmer sells at a profit, and he gets his year's work in money, he cannot keep it. It is much more difficult to care for money than it is to earn it. That is the reason for salaries and wages to be paid by the month or the week. The first thing in successful farming is to make a living. You can tell such a farmer by sitting down to his table for a meal.

The second thing is to make a farm. And that means to improve the land, the stock, the buildings, the appearance of the house and yard, the orchard, and the pastures. A good farmer has as much to show friends who visit him as the merchant, the trader, or the official. The best thing on a city table, or in the fireplace, comes from the country. The hams, chickens, turkeys, eggs, butter and milk come from the farm. People, even in the city, talk about country butter, the country dinner, the fresh vegetables from the country.

The third thing is to make some money. After making a living, an improved farm, then plant for money. It may be corn, wheat, hay, cotton, peanuts, tobacco, strawberries, cabbage, potatoes, or whatever the farm produces best. Then, when the money crop is sold, and the butter and eggs, chickens and hams that are sold all through the year, family necessities can be purchased, and some money placed to the credit of the farm. If more people will remain on farms owned by them, and improve and manage them in the above way, prosperity will take the place of depression, country Churches can prosper, education will not interfere with labor, and happy homes will help to make a happy nation.

ELON LETTER.

Carrying forward our discussion begun two weeks ago with reference to the objective of life, we find another group which insists that life consists in the abundance of the things that a man thinks. They are not satisfied with making a man a catalog of events, nor a two-legged encyclopedia. They believe that thinking should characterize the human leader. They scorn knowledge as such. They scorn the energy and enthusiasm of the man who believes in doing things. Their view is that the world is to be forwarded by its thinkers. They quote Scripture, too, in support of their opinion. Did not Paul command that we should think on certain qualities of life, and does not the sacred Book say elsewhere that, "As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he"? Surely we appreciate the thinker and acknowledge our debt of gratitude to him. We are so busy, however, in doing things and acquiring information that, in the large, we lack time for meditation and thought. By diligent study we consume, as it were, large quantities of intellectual nutriment, but it is only when we think that we digest it. The thinker is inclined to believe that the man who is content with the acquisition of knowledge is afflicted with mental indigestion. We need opportunity in our college days not merely to study and to acquire information and facts, but to think them through calmly. The wise man makes it a rule to have a time for meditation and reverie each day. Such a practice will pay a handsome dividend in fruitful living.

Others are of the opinion that the abundance of a man's life consists in the things he understands. They are not satisfied with knowledge, nor yet again with thinking. They aspire to wisdom, to comprehension of the inner meaning of things, to the understanding heart. They admit that, through diligent study, we may acquire vast funds of information and mentally consume them. They also freely admit that, through meditation and thought, we may digest the facts and the knowledge we have consumed, but they are equally insistent that the mental process is not complete until this consumed and digested intellectual nutriment has been assimilated, organized, integrated by the individual mental personality, so that it becomes his very own by a process which we may describe as mental metabolism. Wisdom to them is the principal thing, and their insistent injunction is, "Therefore, get wisdom." The ability to sit in judgment on the facts that one has amassed and upon the meditations of one's own heart, to unify and integrate these so that the individual goes forth as master of all that he surveys—that is the goal and the aspiration of the abundant life.

PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE LETTER.

THE GREAT AGE.

History tells us of the great Grecian age, but it was not the only one, for the years of youth between sixteen and twenty-five is a still greater age. During this period there is a great awakening of the intellectual passion. This is the miracle which the whole world of education goes seeking. For, once wrought, it transforms youth, and youth thus transformed transforms the world.

This transforming of intellect did not always take place in standard, A-1-grade colleges, for words of wisdom uttered from the class-rooms and rostrums of humble institutions have come ringing down through the centuries. They have sired authors, senators, governors, and chief justices.

The current idea is that you must have guilt-edged equipment, but the one thing needful is delight in hard mental exercise as well as sharp physical exercise. If theologians could look into the heart of youth they would find youth's religion not Hebraic, but Hellenic, with but two articles of faith. One is athletics, which no less competent a witness than George Meredith has pronounced "the best philosophy youth can pretend to." The other is the passionate delight of the awakened mind.

It is a stupid, superstitious idea that boys naturally detest study. What they do detest is a bore. Youth is a hero-worshipping age. Give me a hero-schoolmaster and I will guarantee that the intellectual recession gets kindled in any mind that is combustible. Reticent, self-contained—a mind of a stoic housed in the body of an Olympian athlete, whose look is his discipline, without intimidation, who despised cowardice and meanness, yet not demanding perfection or even success, but a worthy effort. A personality as dynamic as this, with its fiery juices of life naturally generates action.

We need to learn to comprehend and appreciate the fine, unworldly ambition and determination to succeed in the noblest sense of that abused term, the resolution to reject a career of property-getting in order to create in that most vital of all art, forms the minds and characters of our youth in our small denominational colleges. There college professors are willing to make a great sacrifice because they have dedicated their lives to an aim higher than getting and spending.

How we deplore the need of funds for the work in Piedmont Junior College, and how we hope and pray that some one will come to our rescue! What a revolution would take place on the campus and in this section if some one would contribute a hundred thousand dollars or more. Up to this time, the school has had but little more to live on than love and loyalty—moral support. We have seen what this college can do with but little money; now we need to see what it can do with money enough for proper equipment and operation. Shall the great day begin now for Piedmont Junior College? Is the golden year here? Who will come to our rescue?

S. L. BEOUGHIER.

CHARLES C. RICHARDSON.

Charles Coker Richardson was born October 30, 1844, in Sussex County, Va., where he spent virtually all his life. He died in Suffolk, Va., February 9, 1931. In 1863 he volunteered and enlisted in Surry Light Artillery (Hankins' Battery). This, with two other companies, formed the battalion commanded by Col. C. E. Lightfoot. When Col. Lightfoot heard that General Lee was arranging terms of surrender at Appomattox with General Grant, Col. Lightfoot disbanded his battalion and gave his men their choice to go home or to join General Lee's army. From this fact, it is seen that the deceased never surrendered. There is possibly at this time only one survivor of the Surry Light Artillery with whom the deceased served during the Civil War.

After the surrender, he came home and returned to farming. On January 23, 1868, he was married to Mary Elizabeth Cox, who preceded him in death July 25, 1921. To this union were born ten children, nine attained manhood or womanhood, one died in infancy. Five survive their father, as follows: Maggie M., Alfonso F., Emmett B., Lena Jesse, and Mary Augusta. These, with twenty-nine grandchildren and thirteen great-grandchildren, one half-brother, and a host of kindred and friends, mourn the loss of this good man.

Bro. Richardson had a wonderful Church record. At the age of twenty-five years, he joined Spring Hill Christian Church, and on October 30, 1869, he was elected secretary of this Church, holding this office till death, a period of about sixty-two years. His daughter-in-law, Mrs. E. B. Richardson, assisted him the last ten or twelve years. He was ordained a deacon November 11, 1900, and served till death, proving his loyalty in this capacity as well as in the office of secretary. He was prompt in all that pertained to the Church, keeping himself well posted as to all its enterprises. He spoke ill of no man.

He was a loving husband and father, a true friend and neighbor, a patriotic American, a real Virginian, and a loyal Southerner. He had been a member of the Masonic lodge at Wakefield since 1868 and was held in high esteem by his Masonic brethren. His funeral was held at Spring Hill Christian Church February 11, 1931, at 2:30 P. M., in the presence of a large gathering of people, and his remains placed by the side of dear ones in the family square. The grandsons acted as active pallbearers. There was a large number of honorary pallbearers. The many beautiful flowers and the presence of so many friends brought further proof of the esteem in which he was held.

By personal request of the deceased, the writer was in charge of the funeral services, assisted by Rev. F. C. Lester, pastor of the Church, Waverly, Va.; Rev. W. W. Staley, D. D., and Rev. H. S. Hardcastle, of Suffolk, Va.

LANETT CHURCH VENTURES.

(The following unique letter has been sent out by our Lanett, Ala., Church, and the two replies, one by U. S. Senator Black, the other by U. S. Congressman Patterson, tell their own stories.—J. O. A.)

Dear Friend:

How would you like to see a new era, or a new day, dawn upon the Christian world?

That would be great, wouldn't it? Now, listen. Our Church owes a debt that must be paid. Some new Sunday School rooms that we have built. Perhaps you are not interested in our Church affairs, but please don't lay this aside. Read on. Here is our plan. We are going to sell one thousand of these little cards which you will find enclosed. Each one of these cards has fifty tens on them which represents a dime, and each card equals five dollars. Well, to the boy or girl, man or woman, who will sell one hundred and sixty-seven of these cards, they will receive a three hundred dollar scholarship in any college, business college, or high school, music or art, or for educational purposes as he or she may choose. Can you get a vision of what this means? It doesn't just mean that six of our boys and girls get a scholarship. But this is what it means. It means that if our Church can put this over during this depression, every year every Church, in making out its Church budget, can add one or more scholarships to their budget, and give same to some boy or girl who will get out and do something for their Church. This will encourage our young people to come to Church, teach our young people to work for their Church, and will give them some inducement beside spiritual worship in their Church. It will get the membership visited. Get more people to give and more people interested in Church work. And can you imagine just what it means to our college? Just suppose that every Church gives one or more scholarships a year in the United States. Can you get the vision of what that would mean in five years, or ten years? It means thousands of trained minds for our Sunday School teachers, to help mold the minds of our little children, to teach and preach, to go out into the business world well-trained. If a boy or girl gets a start to better and bigger things through the Church; if they would reach the very height of the ladder of success, they never will forget the Church that gave them a start in life. It means filling up our higher institutions of learning with our boys and girls. It means the very life of our colleges. Just imagine thousands of our boys and girls in college sent there by the Church. Doesn't this appeal to you? Wouldn't you be glad to help just a little? Then, if we can do this, every Church can do it. We are appealing to you. Please don't let this fail. It means the very life of a new era in the Christian world, not only to our Church, but to everybody's Church. Now, please give all you can. If you are not interested, please hand this to some one who you think would be. Send all contributions to G. F. Partridge, Lanett, Ala.

Committee.

Dear Bro. Seymour:

I have carefully read the committee's letter relative to raising money to advance the interest of our Christian Church in our section through giving scholarships to young people.

I wish to say that, in my judgment, this is a splendid work and will result in not only good to the beneficiaries of this plan, but, as pointed out in the letter, it will help to bring about the revival of interest in the Church, which is one of the great needs of the age. It is also obvious, as pointed out in the letter further, that it will be a great stimulus and inspiration to these young people and to all people who are interested in the support of the great institution, our Lord's Church.

I appreciate an opportunity to help in this meritorious work and am enclosing herewith my check for $5.00 as a further contribution.

With best wishes and highest regards, I remain

Sincerely yours,

LA FAYETTE L. PATTERSON.

My dear Mr. Seymour:

Enclosed find my check for $3.00 as a contribution to your Church scholarship campaign. It is a very great pleasure for me to be able to assist you to this extent. The fact that you are combining with your campaign to pay your Church debts, the privilege and opportunity for boys and girls to receive a scholarship for college and educational training, is most commendable. I wish you every success.

With kind regards, I am,

Sincerely yours,

HUGO L. BLACK.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Secretary.

A PRAYER.

O God, our heart's desire and prayer for the nations is that they might be saved. Saying so, may the Lord's redeemed give their first and best to make it so. We pray, Father, in the Spirit's power, send out Thy Church to succor and save. Why its being, if not to advance! Thou, Father, who givest life and opportunity, reveal unto us Thy holy will and bestir within us the sense of our own high privilege; thus, confidently, loyally, shall we carry forward our Lord's compassionate quest for souls until His judgment fills the earth. In His precious name. Amen.

DENOMINATIONS UNITE IN PORTO RICO.

BY WILSON P. MINTON.

In these days, when the question of Church union is so much in the foreground, it is interesting to learn that on the island of Porto Rico three distinct denominational groups—the Congregational, Christian and United Brethren—have just united in what is to be known as the "Iglesia Evangelica de Puerto Rico"—the Evangelical Church of Porto Rico.

News of this significant event in Church life has just been brought to the States by representatives who were present and assisted at the formal consummation of the union in Porto Rico on January 28th. The Congregational Church in Fajardo was the scene of the ceremony.

The new United Church embraces a total of thirty-six native organized local Churches, most of which are located in the larger towns of the former Congregational territory, on the east end of the island, and the United Brethren and Christian territories which are contiguous and cover a large section on the south coast along the Caribbean.

The importance of the United Church is indicated by the following statistics: The total membership is 3,518, with 39 ordained ministers and 33 paid workers. Besides the organized Churches, there are 74 other points where services are being held regularly. There are 77 Bible schools, with a membership of 6,292; 42 Young People's Societies, with 1,587 members, and 29 other Church societies, with a membership of 857. A total of $13,416.23 for the work was raised in Porto Rico last year, the balance of about $57,000 being contributed by the boards in the States. The property involved, including fifty Church edifices and other buildings, with a total valuation of $457,300, is held by the boards for the time being and is loaned to the United Church.

These and other interesting facts concerning this latest merger on the mission field were brought to a meeting of the Caribbean of the committee on co-operation in Latin-America, in a special session held in the office of the executive secretary, Dr. Samuel Guy Inman, 419 Fourth Avenue, New York City, on February 11th. The report was made by Rev. Fred L. Brownlee, of New York, secretary of the American Missionary Association of the Congregational Church, and Rev. Wilson P. Minton, D. D., of Dayton, Ohio, secretary of the Foreign Mission Board of the Christian Church. Other members of the recent deputation to Porto Rico were Mr. Wm. J. Boulton, of New York, and Rev. Judson L. Cross, of Boston, treasurer and regional secretary, respectively, of the Congregational Board, and Rev. H. W. Widdoes, D. D., of the Philippine Islands, a missionary who represented the United Brethren Board.

The Church at Fajardo, where the uniting ceremony was held, was filled to overflowing with Porto Ricans and missionaries not only of the uniting Churches but from the other leading Protestant communions on the island—the Presbyterian, Disciples of Christ, Methodist Episcopal and Baptist. Official greetings from these were brought by native Porto Ricans, and the ceremony was looked upon as the launching of a movement toward union of all the Protestant work in the island. It is hoped that the other denominations will enter the union soon, so that Porto Rico may have its own National Protestant Church, as have China, the Philippine Islands, Korea and South India.

It is important to note that this movement toward union originated in the island itself. While the boards in the States approved, the actual working out of the merger was left with the Porto Ricans and the handful of missionaries working with them. The plan of organization is simple. The local Churches send delegates to an annual assembly, like the first one which has just met at Fajardo; the annual assembly elects an executive council of fourteen members, which in turn elects a president, executive secretary and treasurer, and which is responsible for carrying out the instructions of the annual assembly. These duties include direction of all work, assignment of workers, preparation of the annual budget, etc. The council meets quarterly, and is already beginning to function. The first president of the annual assembly and of the executive council is Prof. F. Saez, of the Union Theological Seminary of Porto Rico, who recently received his master's degree from Columbia University.

Contact of the United Church with the three boards in the States will be had through an administrative board, composed of representatives from the three participating bodies. The executive secretary and treasurer of the executive council must be approved by this administrative board in the States, and the annual budget must likewise be approved and will be supplied by the boards concerned on an agreed percentage basis.

It was made clear that the new Church, the Evangelical Church of Porto Rico, would continue to co-operate in what is known as the Evangelical Union of Porto Rico, a co-operative organization of seven groups, formerly, the number now being reduced by this merger to five. Also these organically combined groups will, through their related organizations in the States, maintain their relationships to the whole movement of the Evangelical Church in Latin-America and the Committee on Co-operation in Latin-America in New York.

It is expected that the additional administrative responsibility which this union places upon the Porto Rican Church will result in greatly increasing self-support and ultimately lead to an indigenous Porto Rican Church.

As was pointed out, before the Porto Rican Church can approximate complete self-support, economic conditions on the island must improve. While considerable progress is being made, it is extremely slow. It is hoped that Col. Theodore Roosevelt, the present governor of the island, will do much to solve this problem, both through his personal, first-hand study of conditions and because of his known sympathy with the ideals and service of his illustrious father.

Following the reports, the Committee on the Caribbean passed a resolution felicitating the new Evangelical Church of Porto Rico. Because of the emphasis placed by Messrs. Brownlee and Minton on Porto Rico's economic and social needs in the largely rural population, the committee also passed a resolution suggesting that a specialist in rural work be brought to the island this coming summer for the annual institute for Church workers, and that the theme of the program be based on the practical relationship of the Protestant Church work of Porto Rico to the economic situation, particularly rural. It was also suggested that such a rural expert be asked to make a complete survey of the island with a view to recommending to the Churches a constructive Christian economic and social service program.

It is hoped that this union of Churches in Porto Rico and the report of the delegation may open the way for a real Christian advance there along most practical lines.

STEWARDSHIP AND THE CHURCH.

III.

SERVICE AND THE HOLY GHOST POWER.

At time of the Ascension, the twelve had learned this great lesson; they had discovered the mind of Jesus to such extent that in the "waiting" and its subsequent endowment to which Jesus had commended and commanded them, they now were ready to carry out His teaching: "As my Father hath sent me, even so send I you," by extending upper-room privilege and opportunity to the whole Church. To what end does God apply the "washing of regeneration" but to bestow upon all who experience it the gift of the Holy Spirit which alone empowers for service? "Ye shall receive power after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you. Who are the "ye"? Not merely they who have been called to Church leadership, although obligation and responsibility charter in these, but even as many as receive Jesus and believe on His name. This power, as it was released at Pentecost, the inheritance of every believer who "waits" in prayer and purpose and expectation, resulted in a program for the universal Church which includes the stewardship of all of life—mind, body, possessions, all. While the paying and giving phase of the Holy Spirit's teaching is an outstanding element in the whole Pentecostal impress, important as money is, the supposition that paying and giving are done only in terms of cash, is not to be entertained. Vast, unharnessed potency, which it should be the Church's aim to utilize, lies wrapped within a multitude of valiant, valuable, eager souls whom definitely God has called, each to a place no other can fill. To help find and properly occupy those places is an important part of the Church's task. There are times and instances when "such as I have" is of more worth to the kingdom than that which would fill its coffers.

MORNING SESSION.

THEME: "Jesus, the Light of the World."

- Call to Worship—Arise, shine; for thy light is come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee.
- Hymn—"I Love to Tell the Story."
- Leader—The people that walked in darkness have seen a great light.
- Response—They that dwell in the land of the shadow of death, upon them hath the light shined.
- Leader—That was the True Light that lighteth every man that cometh into the world.
- Response—He that sayeth he is in the light and hateth his brother, is in darkness.
- Leader—He that loveth his brother abideth in the light.
- Response—And this is the condemnation, that light is come into the world, and men loved darkness rather than light, because their deeds were evil.
- Leader—If we walk in the light as He is in the light, we have fellowship one with another.
- Response—I am the Light of the world; he that followeth me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life.
- Leader—While ye have light, believe in the light, that ye may be children of the light.
- All—Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works and glorify your Father which is in heaven.

Elon Summer School Meets June 10th to 17th.

*"Old Elon is calling,
In accents quite bold."*

THINGS THEY SAY AFTER LEAVING ELON.

WHY I WANT TO GO TO ELON SUMMER SCHOOL.

There are many things at this school which hold an attraction for me. There is everything on the religious side that any one could desire, but it is given in such an interesting way that it never grows tiresome. At Elon, religion is studied from a different and attractive angle. Religion becomes something more tangible, more personal, and a thing greatly to be desired. Such things as the "morning watch," the period of worship, and the vesper service come to mean a great deal in one's life. There is also the Christian fellowship between the members of the faculty and the students, which is invaluable. One becomes acquainted with every one there and forms friendships to be continued through life.

There is a recreational side to the program also. In the afternoon, there are games, hikes and picnics. At night there are sings, stunts, and more games. These are enjoyed by all.

The program is so well rounded and so instructive that it cannot fail to please every one who attends, and to make those who hear about it want to go to the Summer School.

Greensboro, N. C.

LIKES THE CANDLE-LIGHTING SERVICE.

After a week of intensive study in religious leadership, Christian fellowship, fun and friendship, the school was about to close. The final program was finished. Credit cards had been given to all who had completed the work. Then all the lights were turned out. Two candles on the speaker's desk represented the Christ and the Church. The dean invited all the people present to come to the front and light their candles, form a line and march to the campus. Through the darkness of the night, the company marched, singing, "Follow the Gleam." In front of the dormitory they formed a circle, sang "Blest Be the Tie That Binds," and said a prayer. Then the groups followed the leaders to separate parts of the campus for the final group meetings. It was a most impressive service. So long as memory lasts, this scene will be vivid to all those young people whose hearts rejoiced with the determination to live for Christ.

WHAT I LIKE ABOUT ELON.

Of the many things which impressed me, probably the most impressive was the sweet spirit of consecrated fellowship. This spirit seemed to permeate every contact which we had with each other. It was as if every one there had seen the Master face to face and had caught the same vision. This spirit was especially noticeable in the various contests. Those who lost seemed to realize that "It is good to fail—battles are lost in the spirit as they are won."

Next week this page will carry devotional articles for the week preceding Easter—Holy Week. These articles have been especially prepared for this page by Prof. A. R. Van Cleave, of Elon

A MESSAGE FROM THE DEAN.

It has been my purpose since assuming the responsibility of the Summer Schools of Leadership Training at Elon College, N. C., and Piedmont Junior College, Wadley, Ala., to make each session better than the last. How well I have succeeded can best be told by those who have attended.

The purpose of these schools is to assist those who are leaders in local Churches to become better leaders and to inspire others to undertake Christian service. There is tremendous need for Christian leaders in our day, and young people are eager to prepare for the tasks which God expects them to perform.

Life at these schools is as nearly normal Christian experience as we can make it. Christ started with meditation and prayer; so do we. He prepared Himself for His work, and worked with eagerness; so do we. He found delight in dining with His friends; and so do we. It is our purpose to follow Him in thinking, willing, and acting.

At this writing, the plans for this year are not entirely complete, but it is certain that the schools will be well worth the effort of any one to attend.

The date for Elon is June 10-17. Among the members of the faculty will be Rev. H. S. Hardcastle, of Suffolk, Va.; Miss Priscilla Chase, of Raleigh, N. C.; Prof. S. A. Bennett, of Elon College, N. C., and Mr. Riggs, a returned missionary of the Congregational Church. Other members of the faculty will be announced later.

The date for the school at Piedmont Junior College has been set tentatively for June 14-19. On the faculty of this school will be Miss Davison, of Thorsby, Ala.; Miss Jewel Truitt, of Waverly, Va., and Miss Annie Campbell and Miss Debra Brackin, members of the staff of extension workers of the Congregational Church in Georgia and Alabama.

There should be at least 100 young people, and people with youthful spirit, at Elon, and seventy-five at Piedmont Junior. It may mean a sacrifice to attend this year, but sacrifice is the heart of Christian experience, and we must make it to follow Christ. Begin now to plan to attend, and the chances are that you can arrive on time. Programs will be mailed to every Church, and to each individual who writes for one.

The cost is so small and the inspiration so great that all who are interested in living at their best and in serving humanity should attend these schools.

It will be a pleasure to correspond with any one who may be interested in either of these schools.

F. C. LESTER,

Waverly, Va.

College. It is in keeping with the deeper meaning of Easter that each young person reading this page, as well as others who may care to do so, should spend more time in prayer and meditation during these days when we rejoice that Christ arose. Easter is more than a sort of dress parade, a rush for flowers and new hats, gloves and dresses. It is not merely a festival. It means more than that. Easter means a risen Christ. May we be ready to greet the day of the anniversary of His resurrection with the spirit of full, abundant living in our lives.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Sunday, March 29, 1931.

Topic: "Why Christ is a Worthy Master."

Prelude: "I Give My Life for Thee."

Hymn: "Jesus Calls Us."

Reading: Read the words of the first stanza of "O Jesus, Thou Art Standing."

Scripture: Phil. 2:5-11.

Discussion of the topic: The following suggestions for talks may be used, or other topics may be selected by the committee in charge.

1. Christ works with us (Read John 15:4, 5).

"Thou seemest human and divine,
The highest, holiest manhood, Thou;
Our wills are ours, we know not how;
Our wills are ours, to make them Thine."
—Tennyson.

2. Christ is our Friend in everything.

3. Christ seeks the best for us (see John 10:14 and Phil. 3:13, 14).

"If Christ had thought of just Himself,
Our Blessed Saviour, Friend,
Would not have trod the bitter path
Up to the very end.
He never would have borne the cross
Up there on Calvary,
Nor paid salvation's cruel price,
Nor died to set us free."
—Carolyn R. Freeman.

4. Our need for a Master.

"I cannot do it alone;
The waves run fast and high
And the fogs close chill around,
And the light goes out in the sky;
But I know that we two Shall win in the end—
Jesus and I.

"Coward and wayward and weak,
I change with the changing sky—
Today so eager and brave,
Tomorrow not caring to try.
But He never gives in,
So we two shall win—
Jesus and I."

—Source unknown.

5. Christ the best Master (Phil. 2:5-11).

Prayer: "Teach us today, O Christ, Thine own great-hearted loyalty. Teach us loyalty, Christ, to God, to duty, to God's great family, here on earth and in heaven, to God's eternal kingdom. Teach us, in every action to labor, to pray, not for ourselves, not for our own most wretched and empty advantage, but for love of Thyself, for the love of that kingdom for which Thou didst die, for love of the men Thou lovest. Teach us the blackness of sin, as treachery, reeking and foul, against that radiant kingdom of God to which Thou wouldst have us belong. Teach us Thy loyalty, Christ." Amen. (From the American Student Hymnal.)

Closing thought:

"I heard Him call,
'Come, follow'—that was all.
My gold grew dim,
My soul went after Him.
I rose and followed—that was all.
Who would not follow if he heard His call?"
Mizpah.

From forge and farm and mine and bench,
Deck, altar, outpost lone;
Mill, school, battalion, counter, trench,
Rail, senate, sheepfold, throne—
Creation's cry goes up on high
From age to cheated age,
"Send us the men who do the work
For which they draw the wage."—Kipling.

JESUS THE WORLD'S SAVIOUR—PREPARATION AND POPULARITY.

LESSON XIII—MARCH 29, 1931.

REVIEW.

GOLDEN TEXTS "Jesus of Nazareth . . . who went about doing good, and healing all that were oppressed by the devil; for God was with Him."—Acts 10:38.

LESSON: Isa. 35:5-10.

By way of variety in this review lesson, the comments will be concerned briefly with the Golden Texts of the lessons during the past quarter, for in a way they sum up the respective lessons.

I. The Birth of John the Baptist.

"Thou shalt go before the face of the Lord to make ready His ways" (Luke 1:76). This was, in essence, the work of John. He was the forerunner, the link between the prophets and Jesus Himself. But it is also the work of all of us who name the name of Jesus. We are to make ready His ways. We are to give fuller entrance into our lives of His spirit and His principles, and through us to make ready His coming into all phases of life.

II. The Childhood of Jesus.

"Jesus advanced in wisdom and stature, and in favor with God and man" (Luke 2:52). Here was well-rounded, full-developed life. Here is the ideal for us. A sound mind in a sound body, expressing in the social relationships of life the spirit of God.

III. The Ministry of John the Baptist.

"Bring forth, therefore, fruits worthy of repentance" (Luke 3:8). John had the courage of his convictions. He did not "soft pedal" the things that needed to be said. Men may disagree with us, but they will always admire honest convictions. Here also is the lesson that outer conduct ought to correspond with inner ideals and heart-life.

IV. Jesus Tempted.

"In that He Himself hath suffered being tempted, He is able to succor them that are tempted." Jesus lived our life and was tempted as we are tempted. He, therefore, knows how to sympathize with us, and also how to help us when we are tempted. And one of Jesus' greatest contributions to man was the practical help He gives in overcoming temptation.

V. Jesus the Great Physician.

"Surely He hath borne our griefs and carried our sorrows." The fact that Jesus, in the flesh, exercised a healing ministry, bears witness to God's interest in the physical well-being of His children, and also to the curative powers which are the expression of His love for His children. Above all else, He is the Physician of the soul.

VI. Jesus the World's Teacher.

"As ye would that men should do to you, do ye also to them likewise." We call Him Teacher, and we do well. Modern educational method can never outgrow Jesus. He saw clearly and used constantly the fundamental principles of the teaching process and the learning process. All teachers and preachers should study carefully Jesus' method.

VII. Jesus the Friend of Sinners.

"Faithful is the saying and worthy of all acceptance, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners." Man's supreme need has been and is to be saved from the penalty and power of sin. Jesus was not only friendly to sinners, but He has power to forgive sin and to save from sin. He imparts to human hearts resources adequate for life.

VIII. Jesus the Bearer of Good Tidings.

"He went about through cities and villages, preaching and bringing the good tidings of the kingdom of God." Good news about God, about man, about life, about Himself—Jesus brought a message that was and is good news. The world still needs that message.

IX. Jesus Sending Forth Missionaries.

"The harvest indeed is plenteous, but the laborers are few; pray ye, therefore, the Lord of the harvest, that He send forth laborers into the harvest." The good news is to be shared with others. There is great need. The only guarantee that the workers will be supplied and that they themselves will be supplied is the spirit of God. We are to pray that God would furnish the workers, but in praying we should try to do our individual part in furnishing them.

X. The Good Samaritan.

"Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." In the simple story of the Good Samaritan there are embedded abiding principles that are at the heart of the thing we call Christianity. The assumption of our personal share of helping those who are in need is at the heart of the gospel. We are to love God so much that we will do everything we can for God's children.

XI. Jesus Among Friends and Foes.

Friendship is a great factor in life. Jesus offers us life's highest friendship, friendship with God through Him. Here is the secret of the transformation of character, and the inspiration to service.

XII. The Use and Abuse of God's Gifts.

This lesson has a very timely and practical application to our modern world. Science, education, and many other factors are putting at the disposal of even ordinary folks power which our forefathers never dreamed of. The right use of the things entrusted to our care is not only the secret of happiness here, but the determiner of destiny hereafter.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE

One of our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy.

"If thou wilt make the Almighty thy treasure . . . then shalt thou delight thyself in the Almighty . . . and thou shalt make thy prayer unto Him and He will hear thee."—Job 22: 25-27.

MONDAY.

THE JOY OF LIVING.

"There is nothing better than that a man should rejoice in his works."—Eccl. 3:22.

"As a bridegroom coming out of his chamber, and rejoiceth as a strong man to run his course."—Psa. 19:5.

Joy is not alone a blessing and a gift; it is also a duty and a virtue. Some lives are so ordered with good health, of inspiring circumstances, or successful achievements that joy springs up spontaneously. Other lives must find joy, if at all, in spite of illness or dull surroundings or unhopeful defeats. Yet, through prayer and unselfishness and the presence of Christ, the least favored life may be kept in touch with the sources of joy and respond to them with praise and thankfulness.

Whoever wakens on a day,
Happy to know and be,
To enjoy the air, to love his kind,
To labor, to be free—
Already his enraptured soul
Lives in eternity. —Bliss Carmen.

Prayer.—Gracious God, Thou art the source of life. We rejoice in life, because it is Thy gift, and we thank Thee for all the blessings by which it is sustained. May we find each day some fresh cause of satisfaction. Save us from yielding to the spirit of gloom, dissatisfaction or ill will. Help us to be obedient to the good and wholesome laws of life, and thus may we be at peace with all the world and with Thee. Pardon our unthankfulness, and lead us into more fruitful living and deeper gratitude. For Thy name's sake. Amen.

TUESDAY.

THOSE HAVING NO HOPE.

"Ye were at that time separated from Christ, alienated from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers from the covenants of promise, having no hope, and without God in the world."—Eph. 2:12.

"No hope." These are dreadful words! How distressing it is when the doctor says that! Nothing can adequately express the feelings which overpower us when a ship at sea springs a leak and, after everything is done to save it, the captain says, "No hope." Sometimes a man in financial despair has to throw up his hands and say, "No hope!"

These words are dark words. But they are darker yet if we have no hope for the future. Better be without everything else than this hope. We may be in all sorts of temporal distress, but if we have surety of the future, it matters little. We may have riches, but without this hope they are worth but little.

We are told of a missionary in India who found an old man by the roadside dying. After ministering to his comfort as far as possible, he asked him, "What is your hope?" The old man recalled the song he had heard and replied, "My hope is built on nothing less than Jesus Christ and righteousness." "What doth the Lord require of thee but to do justly, love mercy, and walk humbly with thy Lord."

Prayer.—Dear Lord, the God of hope, do Thou bring to pass in us the inspiration of our eternal hope in Thee through Jesus Christ. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

THE VICE OF IDLENESS.

"Working not all, but are busy-bodies."—2 Thess. 3:11.

How oft it is repeated in our ears, "An idle brain is the devil's work-shop"? And again, "Idleness is the parent of vice."

To labor consistently in a Christian frame of mind helps to subdue the flesh and its tendencies, and strengthens the spirit; it tames sensual lusts and rouses noble action; it banishes unholy thoughts and nourishes joy and hope; it seasons food and gives good sleep; it reveals life's relations to the Heavenly Father and makes life useful.

Prayer.—Heavenly Father, give us a child-like faith and make our labors easy, through Jesus our Lord. We thank Thee that the curse which we brought on ourselves, Thou hast turned into blessing. Enable us to not only eat and drink, but to work and rest in Thy house. And when at last the evening is come and our strength is wasted away, give unto us the rest that remains for the people of God, and to enter into the joys of our Lord. Amen.

THURSDAY.

MUST DO MORE THAN OTHERS.

"What do ye more than others."—Matt. 5:47.

Our love and helpfulness toward others is indicative of our spiritual temper. He who gives through motives of ambition or self-righteousness, practices bad economy and lacks Christian incentive.

The Christian spirit is: put yourself in the place of the other fellow and consider what would be to your benefit in that case, and then let sincere sympathy move you. Alas! how little is done out of true love, a holy heart, and unadulterated unselfishness. Therefore, much that is done is done in vain. Seed sown for the sake of reward is wasted, so far as spiritual uplift is concerned. It is doubtful that any of us can understand fully the great value, in heaven and on earth, of every good deed of charity which springs out of the pure and divine fountain of the heart. Even the smallest genuine deed of true love gives great delight on earth.

Prayer.—Dear Lord Jesus, Thou who didst give us ears, may we hear all the voices of love and the pleas of man and the songs of heaven. Stretch out Thy strong arm to us, that we may ever live as true Christians in the spirit of Christ. Enrich our spirits by love and make us rich in charity. Amen.

FRIDAY.

DROPPING "RECEIVER."

"Before honor goeth humility."—Prov. 15:25.

A British paper, the Manchester Guardian, tells of an American who went to England with letters of introduction describing him as "General" So-and-So. He fell one day into military society and inquiries were made about his army experiences. He answered frankly, "The fact is, gentlemen, that my full title in my own country is "Receiver-General," only I drop the "Receiver" when I come over to Yurup." We are all of us prone to drop the "receiver." Boston's finest residence street, Commonwealth Avenue, runs out eleven miles into the country, through many humble villages and thousands of people who are not rich at all, let it be known that they dwell on "Commonwealth Avenue."

Before honor—real honor—walks humility as his herald. A truly great man is certified by his unpretentious manners. He knows how very little, if at all, he rises above average humanity, and in self-defense, if for no other reason, he wants all men to know it.

Prayer.—Thou King of kings, Thou Lord of lords, Thou who didst not think equality with God a thing to be grasped at, how weak wert Thou and how lowly when with us on earth! Put far from us, Thy brothers and sisters, all vain glory. For Thy great name's sake. Amen.—Wells.

SATURDAY.

"Make straight paths."—Heb. 12:4-13.

That automobile pioneer, Mr. T. H. Franklin, of Syracuse, N. Y., urges in a recent address that in the interest of speed and safety, the new roads that are built or the old roads that are built over shall boldly disregard boundary lines and go directly to their goals. "Let road-builders see further ahead," he insists, "and build tomorrow's road today."

That is mighty good advice for all phases of life. It will save a vast amount of strength and time if we get our objectives now for many years ahead, and plunge straight at them. We make false starts in our occupation, and so our work is a zigzag, and ineffective. If our life is on the wrong track, we reform it piecemeal instead of making it wholly and superbly right at once. The worldly man, instead of joining the Church and devoting himself joyfully to the Master's work, compromises on merely going to Church. We forget the dreams of youth and abandon youthful ideals. Thus we come back to them with extreme difficulty, and in partial and unsatisfactory fashion, if we come back to them at all.

Prayer.—Lord Jesus, we would be wholly Thine. We would iron all the curves out of existence: Forgetting the things that are behind, and stretching forward to the things which are before, we would press on toward the goal. With Thy guidance and in Thy strength we would build tomorrow's road today. Amen.—Wells.

SUNDAY.

BUTTERED.

"Cast thy bread upon the waters; for thou shalt find it after many days."—Eccl. 11:1-8.

Some one has enlarged upon this wise and cheerful saying: "Cast your bread upon the waters, and after many days it will return to you—battered." What we give always comes back to us, and with splendid additions. What we give, we have; what we withhold, we lose. Treasures in heaven are still richer treasures on earth.

Giving requires much heroism, but only at the start. After a while, the blessings begin to come in so fast that we long for more giving, and still more. When a young man starts to save and to invest, it seems utter folly to exchange his hard-earned coin for an entry in a savings-bank book; but as the interest begins to come in, and comfort and power with it, the idea of saving and investing becomes a delightful habit. Even so, and far more blessedly, with the habit of giving.

Prayer.—Lord Jesus, blessed Giver, what we give we give not only to men but to Thee. Thou wilt receive it, and Thou wilt not forget. May we give ever more largely, because we love more largely. Amen.—Wells.

REV. JOSEPH W. FIX, Preacher.

DAVID, NABAL, ABIGAIL.

(A brief missionary sermon.)

BY REV. J. LEE JOHNSON.

In the twenty-fifth chapter of 1 Samuel, David is in hiding from Saul. With him are about 600 men who chose to follow the rightful king. David is in want, and sends to Nabal, a rich man, for supplies, but is refused.

In these Old Testament stories we have more than history, and if we look carefully we can find His-story—a story of the gospel of grace, the great missionary gospel. Here in this particular chapter, verses 2-42, we have three outstanding persons—David, Nabal and Abigail. Let us, very briefly, look at these three characters, and the story of which they are a part, and see here revealed the gospel of missions.

I. David.—The name means "beloved." This suggests at once the Greater David, of whom the Father said, "This is my beloved." This word from the Father came when the Son had been anointed by the Spirit. David, in our lesson, had been anointed as King of Israel, but was not yet upon the throne. He was fleeing from Saul, who despised and hated him. So now our father's beloved is not upon his own throne, but "by the few enthroned," "despised and rejected of men."

David is here seen as a man of peace (vs. 6, 7). He is also seen protecting Nabal's sheep and the shepherds being "a wall" unto them "both night and day." How beautifully this foreshadows our Lord, Son of David, who is the beloved and is our peace and protection.

II. Nabal.—Here again the name is significant. Nabal means "fool," and his wife, who knew him so well, so testifies in verse 25, "For as his name, so is he. Nabal is his name and folly is with him." He was such an ill-tempered, unapproachable man when it came to the cause of benevolence, that even his own servants said of him, "He is such a son of Belial that a man cannot speak to him" (v. 17).

But more, in verse 2 he is said to be "churlish"; that is, miserly, niggardly, or to use a more common phrase, a tight-wad. When David, who had been so good and kind to Nabal as to protect and preserve his property, sent his young men to ask him for a free-will offering (v. 8) in order to provide for the anointed king and his servants, he refused, saying, "Who is David? And who is the son of Jesse? There be many servants nowadays that break away every man from his master" (v. 10). And Nabal used as good excuses as people often make today when asked to support the work of the Anointed One.

But in verse 11 we see this man's folly more pertinent still. "Shall I, then, take my bread and my water, and my flesh, which I have killed for my servants, and give unto men whom I know not whence they be?" Is this not the very same kind of excuse we hear today when gifts are asked to spread the gospel across the seas to men whom we know not? No, the Nabals, the fools, the churlish, the miserly, the niggardly, the tight-wads are not all dead yet.

Now note in verse 2 it is said that Nabal was "very great." But look carefully and all his greatness is in this world's goods. It means he was very rich and yet he refused to use that with which God had blessed him, to send the anointed servant on his mission. Such great men will be at the judgment, but their greatness will vanish away. When his money is melted, his greatness is gone. How tragic the death of this miserly fool who refused aid for God's anointed, "and it came to pass about ten days after that the Lord smote Nabal and he died" (v. 38).

III. Abigail.—Just a few words here must suffice. Abigail means "my father's joy." Yes, all such liberal souls gladden the heart of God and bless His anointed. "A woman of good understanding and of a beautiful countenance" (v. 3), not features. Her character was just shining through her face. She hastened with that which Nabal had refused to give, and presents it to the uncrowned king and receives his blessings. (Read carefully her prophecy (vs. 28-31), which certainly goes beyond David, son of Solomon, to David, son of God.)

The incident closes by saying that Abigail "became his (David's) wife." Who is it that gladly give themselves and their all to carry the message of salvation to the lost, but those "espoused to one husband" and soon to be "presented as a chaste virgin to Christ" (2 Cor. 2:2).

NEVER ANOTHER WAR.

War is an insanity. It grows upon the nations in a very subtle manner. It steals away men's judgment and leaves them in possession of their lower passions and combative instincts. War has become the most destructive instrument man has ever found. He has fought off plague and infection and the various ravages of disease. Now he must face the absolute necessity of destroying all possibilities of war. He who speaks of "the next war" should find a mailed fist upon his lips. There is no other way to deal with this great evil. Strike it! Strike it hard! The mailed fist should not be thought of as representing war, but as the prepared hand of peace to strike this great enemy every time it appears.

Humanity cannot afford to have another war. This has been said again and again. Apparently it is difficult for the human mind to give way before the repetition of this sentence. A great fear should be created. A mighty dread that will blanch the face upon the mention of war should be made the immediate reaction. We have formulas for gases that can destroy a great metropolitan city in a few hours. These are held by different nations, especially America, we are informed. The battles on tomorrow will not be upon the earth. There will be battlefields in the sky. Airplanes dropping gas bombs will determine the outcome of international conflicts. Already the nations have been warned.

Arthur Henderson, foreign secretary of the Labor government of the British empire, recently said: "Every year our air forces carry out maneuvers over London. Have you ever thought of what these maneuvers mean? They mean what our staff, like every other staff, is expecting that the decisive operations of the next war will be air attacks against great centers of industry and civilian population."

Here it is, if you want to see what the militarists are anticipating. The great air fortifications are to be prominent tomorrow if we do not outlaw war. The old days of international conflict are gone. The cavalry of the army as a fighting unit is gone. The infantry is passing as a great instrument of combat. The navy is no longer looked upon as the great defense of a nation during a war period. Cannons and musketry are passing. The airplane, swinging through space over cities and country, flying at great speed, carrying destructive bombs of gas and explosives, is the instrument to be used on tomorrow. The day of the bombing plane is here.

Shall we have war? Let those who propose it be the first ones to have to pay the price with their lives. Then we shall not have the militaristic group, nor a governmental group losing their heads and sending other people into battle to lose their lives, while they stay at home to be heroes and great military leaders. One of the ironies of war to the observer is the escape from guilt and responsibility for war on the part of the crowned heads and the statesmen who decree war. They survive, while millions of people who had nothing to do in creating conditions that called for war, go out and give up their lives. War is built on a form of insanity. Its irony writes the pages of history.—Christian Advocate.

LINCOLN'S ESTIMATE OF WASHINGTON.

"Washington's is the mightiest name of earth—long since mightiest in the cause of civil liberty; still mightiest in moral reformation. On that name no eulogy is expected. It cannot be. To add brightness to the sun, or glory to the name of Washington, is alike impossible. Let none attempt it. In solemn awe we pronounce the name, and in its naked, deathless splendor leave it shining on."—Lincoln.

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

It is really amusing sometimes as to the idea some people have about an orphanage, and the funny conclusions they arrive at, when they have never visited an orphanage and know nothing about one. We had a very critical case of pneumonia in our institution some weeks ago—the only case we have had this winter—and it was necessary to call a trained nurse to handle it. It so happened that we called a lady who had never visited an orphanage and did not know what one looked like. She said that when we called her to come to an orphanage to nurse a child that the thought flashed through her mind that she was going to an orphanage where little children were barefoot in the winter-time, dressed in ragged clothes, and walking around crying for bread, wearing long faces and sad. But she was, on her arrival, happily surprised to find the opposite. She found the building clean and neat; the sick boy in a nice, comfortable room, in a nice, clean bed; the children dressed in neat, comfortable clothing (not in rags), comfortable shoes on their feet (not barefoot), and plain, but wholesome food on the table, well prepared, and the children not going around crying for bread; children with happy faces, and not with long, sad faces.

She said she had gotten a different idea and a different vision altogether from her few days' stay in the Orphanage. Some people have the idea that a child in an orphanage should be different from other children. It should be good all the time and never do anything that is wrong. We wonder if these same people ever take into consideration that we take children from all kinds of homes, from all kinds of environments, all kinds of training, with habits already formed and many bad habits, which takes months in some instances to correct and change their way of thinking and ideals. Who would expect them to wear wings, grown in a day, and be ready to fly any time? We don't. It takes father and mother twenty years to rear a child, and then sometimes the job is not too well done. An orphanage family is made up of human beings. But it is different from a family from the fact it is composed of fatherless, motherless and helpless children, who need our love and care, training for useful citizenship. They are just as precious in the sight of God as any other child. He is so interested in them that He has called our attention to them in His word more than thirty times. Will we heed His instructions?

THE CO-OPERATIVE COUNCIL.

This is a new name in our United Church organization. It is a combination of the promotional council and the committee on education. These two committees or councils have agreed to work together this year, and are doing so under the name of the Co-operative Council. This council recently held its first meeting at Waltham, Mass., and was attended by a large majority of those who are members of the council. The representatives from the Southeast were Dr. W. Knighton Bloom, Miss Priscilla Chase, member of the Missionary Education Committee, and Dr. Edwin C. Gillette, the latter having been elected a member of the Promotional Council to represent the Superintendents' Conference, meeting at Evanston in January.

The major interest of the meeting in Waltham was the program for the promotion of missionary interest and plans for missionary literature for the coming year. Sub-committees considered and reported upon plans for missionary round-tables and forums and missionary field work; also for missionary education materials and programs.

GEORGIA AND ALABAMA SUNDAY SCHOOL AND CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR CONVENTION.

The above convention meets with our Lanett Church March 27-29. Because of sickness and death in our home, I have not been able to give it the usual publicity. I am sure the people who attended the first meeting we had, in union with the Congregational people, at Rose Hill last year, remember it with pleasure. We are expecting every one of you back, and a great number of others. Those in charge of the program and arrangement have spared no time nor pains in discharging their duty. We hope to even have a better convention than last year. Remember that a banner is given to each school, society and district making the best report. Let every pastor, superintendent and president come with a large delegation from your place. A prize is also given to the group contributing most to the spirit of the conference.

I know times are hard, but we can pool expenses and get along all right. Don't forget your convention dues, which are five cents per member. We will be disappointed and the meeting will suffer if you are not there. So come on, all of you! We are looking for you, and don't forget to pray for the meeting and your president. Let's have 100 per cent representation.

W. C. CARPENTER,
President.

Holman Jewel Testament

INDIA PAPER ONLY—Size 2½x4¼ inches x¾ inch

The JEWEL is the latest and most attractive Pocket Testament made.

The TYPE is black, bold and larger than that in the famous Vest Pocket edition, and the book itself is smaller.

It is printed exclusively on the famous Holman India paper, noted for its unique quality and unusual tensile strength.

One advantage of this India paper is that the leaves do not cling together.

The size, 2½x4¼ inches, is so small that the book practically fits the palm of the hand.

The GEM TESTAMENT has been steadily growing in popular favor ever since its first appearance.

In size, 3½x4½ inches, it is not much larger than the Vest Pocket. It is also the only Testament of its size with large bold type and pronouncing text.

The edition on India paper is ideal, and we know of no better gift at the price than one in the finer bindings.

SHARPE.
God, in His infinite wisdom, removed from our midst our friend and brother, J. Little Sharpe, on December 31, 1930. We, the committee, offer the following resolutions:

- 1. That New Lebanon Church has lost one of its most faithful and willing members. His going has left a vacant place that cannot be filled.
- 2. That we extend to his bereaved family, wife and children, our deepest sympathy, commending them to look up to the Father for comfort in this sad hour.
- 3. That a copy of these resolutions be put on the Church record, a copy be sent to the family, and one published in The Christian Sun.

GORT.

God, in His infinite wisdom, removed from our midst our sister and friend, Mrs. Caroline E. Gort, on January 10, 1931.

The Woman's Missionary Society of First Christian Church wishes to offer this tribute of respect in loving memory of her. "Her children arise up and call her blessed; her husband also, and he praiseth her" (Prov. 31-28). There is not a more beautiful Scripture lesson in the Bible than this; none could better express her life and character; no greater tribute could be paid motherhood.

Resolved: First, That our Church and society have lost one of the most faithful and willing members. Her going has left a vacant place that cannot be filled.

Second, That we bow submissively to the will of our all-wise Father, who does nothing save for the good of His children.

Third, That we extend to her bereaved family, husband and children, our deepest sympathy in this dark hour, recommending them to our Heavenly Father for comfort and resignation to His divine will.

Fourth, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the bereaved family, one to be published in The Christian Sun, and one spread on the minutes of the society.

MOATS.

Carrie Myrtle, daughter of A. M. and Rev. Mrs. Annie Moats, of Steel, Ala., died of pneumonia January 25, 1931, being 11 years, 3 months, and 11 days of age. She had lately expressed her desire to be a messenger of the gospel to foreign land, as has her mother in the home land, but God knows what is best, and has taken her home to be one of the innumerable throng John saw before the throne in white robes.

The body was carried, accompanied by family and friends, to old Liberty Grove Congregational Church, where it was buried in the family lot after a brief service and a last look, with the writer in charge of the ceremony. We request your prayers and sympathy for the bereaved family. May the Lord watch over them and bless them and keep them in this time of sorrow.

PENNY.

In the passing of our sister, Mrs. Mary E. Penny, who died January 31, 1931, Caraleigh has lost its oldest resident, who said she was past 100 years old. Funeral services were conducted at Caraleigh Christian Church on February 1, 1931, by the pastor, Rev. J. H. Lee, assisted by Rev. R. E. Atkins, former pastor of Caraleigh Baptist Church. May the Lord comfort the hearts of the loved ones left sorrowing.

ELON COLLEGE

AN ACCREDITED COLLEGE

of the

CONGREGATIONAL CHRISTIAN CHURCHES OF THE SOUTHEAST

ELON was founded to train Christian leaders for the New South.

ELON has done its task well—one graduate in seven being in the Christian ministry. The other six express Christian leadership in the various professions and vocations. Experience teaches that spiritual leadership must be indigenous.

The South is now a New South ready for an inclusive Church, the type of Church for which Elon has stood for forty years and for which she is prepared to produce capable leadership.

With no Church in the community, save the College Auditorium, ELON has practiced Christian Union for faculty, students, and community for four decades.

Its contribution to Christian Education is nationally known and approved.

Its Christian Education Building, providing laboratory facilities for religious leadership training, is unique and is the first college building of its type in the world.

ELON confines itself to undergraduate liberal arts work with that religious emphasis which befits the Christian College.

In ELON the Congregational-Christian Church has an asset of marvelous helpfulness.

The South needs her Yale, her Oberlin, her Carleton, her Pomona for the intellectual leadership of the United Church. Many regard ELON as strategically located and spiritually endowed to become such a center of illumination and leadership training.

RUMLEY.

Eugene F. Rumley was born July 8, 1913, and died January 30, 1931, age 17 years, 6 months and 22 days. Funeral services were held at Apple's Chapel Church January 21st, in charge of the writer and Rev. Mr. Tillman. Burial took place in the Church cemetery.

Surviving the deceased are three sisters, Mrs. W. B. Key, Mrs. R. P. Loftis, and Miss Eva Rumley; two brothers, Mr. Lymon Rumley and Mr. C. R. Chrismon. May the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ comfort the bereaved.

WYRICK.

James Alvis Wyrick was born December 11, 1868, and died February 24, 1931. He was the father of our beloved and faithful brother-minister, Rev. L. L. Wyrick, of Elon College. He leaves six children to mourn his going—four daughters and two sons; eleven grandchildren, and many other relatives. His sudden death was caused by injuries received when he was struck by a falling tree while he was engaged in cutting trees. He was carried to a Greensboro hospital, where he expired a few hours later.

He had been for more than eighteen years a member of Apple's Chapel Christian Church, and was one of the Church's most loved, loyal and faithful members. His beautiful Christian life was an example for all who knew him. In the moment of death he was not dismayed, but calm and reconciled. His latest testimony was that he was "in the hands of the Lord."

The Church could not contain the large congregation assembled on the evening of February 26th, when his funeral was conducted by the following ministers:

STOCKDALE ACCEPTS.—

First Congregational Church, pastorless since Dr. Jason Noble Pierce went to Nashville on December 1st, invites Dr. Allen A. Stockdale to its pulpit and rejoices at his acceptance. Dr. Stockdale is well known in Congregational circles. He goes to Washington from Chicago, where his last pastorate was at Rogers Park Church. He will assume his now obligations on April 1st, and begin with the Easter service. We wish for him a long and useful pastorate with the Washington Church.

CHURCH MERGER.—

The well-known West Side Unitarian Church has merged with the Universalist Church of the Divine Paternity. Financial difficulties of West Side Church, which were intensified by the failure of the Bank of the United States with consequent loss of Church funds, made this move necessary. The congregations are well known to each other, for Dr. Francis Potter, now leader of the Humanist Society, has in the past decade had brief pastorates in each. Thus we see that the trend of Church union continues, regardless of doctrinal differences. Jesus prayed that they might be one, as He and the Father are one.

CRIME DECREASE.—

A general decrease in crime in 1,000 cities during January, as compared with December, was reported recently by the Bureau of Investigation of the Department of Justice. In a monthly bulletin, prepared under the supervision of Director J. Edgar Hoover, the average number of crimes committed daily in these cities was given as 1,824 for December and 1711 in January. The number of murders reported daily decreased from an average of slightly more than eight to slightly less than eight, while the daily average of cases of manslaughter by negligence dropped from less than seven to less than five. Let us hope that the crest of the crime wave has been passed.

HALF-HOLIDAY.—

The 65,000 men and women who work for Uncle Sam will lay aside their tasks at 1 o'clock every Saturday afternoon, beginning at once. The bill has passed both houses of Congress and has received the President's signature. Heretofore this privilege has been accorded only during summer months. Not only does it apply to government workers in the Capital, but to all Federal employees throughout the country. From 9 A. M. until 4:30 P. M., with thirty minutes for lunch, are the government's working-hour demands, with Saturday shift of four hours. The action is in line with that long ago adopted in private industry, and the wonder is that it should have been delayed so long.

MISSIONARY RIVALRY.—

The national staff of the Presbyterian Board of National Missions plan to present resolutions to the coming general assembly of the Church, asking that funds be no longer used for the support of Presbyterian enterprises in competition with those of other evangelical denominations. This action is well timed, for it is possible that considerable good in the way of lessening denominational rivalry will come from the business depression which is compelling all our denominations to count their expenditures more carefully. Co-operation in religion is better than competition, for there is enough for all to do without hurtful competition.

GIFTS TO MISSIONS.—

The report of the survey recently made public by Dr. Harry S. Myers, secretary of the United Stewardship Council, shows that the average member of the United Presbyterian Church gives to missions annually $11.63; the Presbyterian Church in the United States, Southern branch, $9.99; the Moravians come third. It is an interesting fact that while the per capita giving for local demands by the Episcopalians is very heavy ($37.25 annually), the Episcopal Church ranks twentieth among the Churches in per capita giving to missions. In total gifts for all purposes, the Methodist Episcopal Church outruns the whole field by a margin of nearly twenty million a year. What does the Congregational-Christian Churches give annually per capita for missions? This is the mission period of these Churches and our membership should rally to the call.

HE GOT THE JOB.—

In this, the winter of our discontent, on account of economic depression, the financial strain of the times has produced restlessness in both pulpits and pews. A number of divines have been candidating, but with indifferent results. When one worthy dominie was stealing out of town on Saturday afternoon to preach before a pulpit committee on the morrow, some vile thief purloined his bag, containing his swallow-tail coat, pulpit gown, and his three best sermons. The next morning the newspapers regaled the town with the story of the theft, together with the information that the police appraised the loss at $15.00. However, the worthy brother proceeded to his destination, parted his hair with the hotel towel, brushed his shoes with his handkerchief, borrowed a gown from the choir, and preached so effectively that he got the call. Times are growing better.

UNEMPLOYED CLERGY.—

There are increasing evidences that clergymen are feeling the effects of the depression. Nearly all denominations report many clergymen out of work. Dr. Samuel Trexler, president of the United Lutheran Synod of New York, has just sent out a general letter to all the theological seminaries of the denomination, telling them to weed out students who lack the qualifications to become first-class pastors. Dr. Trexler feels that the best method of dealing with the oversupply of preachers is to tackle the problem at the source and allow only men of the highest type to enter the ministry at all. Other Churches would do well to look well to the native ability, the studious habits, and intellectual attainments of those applying for admission to the ministry. With free tuition in our colleges for the ministry, the Church should see to it that those applying for the ministry should be qualified to make good use of their opportunities.

INTERNATIONAL SOCIAL CONFERENCE.—

The world industrial relations congress on "social economic planning—the necessity for planned adjustment of productive capacity and standards of living," is announced for the last week in August by the International Industrial Relations Association, whose membership is twenty-nine countries, includes industrial executives, labor leaders, industrial relations consultants, economists, bankers and others actively concerned with "the study and promotion of satisfactory human relations and conditions in industry."

The congress, the first of its kind, will be held in Amsterdam. All proceedings will be in English, French and German. Among the subjects discussed will be "The Present Paradox: Unemployment in the Midst of Economic Progress," "Potentialities in National Economic Planning," "The Co-operative Movement," "The International Bank," and "The Necessity for and Means for International Economic Planning."

APPRAISAL OF MISSIONS.—

John D. Rockefeller, Jr., whose interest is largely responsible for a layman's appraisal of foreign missions now in progress in many lands, is making a great contribution to a better understanding of the missionary work of this age. Commissions have been or are about to be dispatched to all the major mission fields. There, sympathetically but from a layman's point of view, the work of world evangelization will be scrutinized. Recommendations, although not binding, will be produced for the use of all the major mission boards in the United States. The entire program has been undertaken with the end in view of revitalizing the missionary program of America's Churches, which—as a study of missionary giving or not giving—badly needs it. On account of the feeling of financial depression, our people should make special effort to enlarge the number of contributors to missions and to increase the individual contributions, for we have missionary obligations that we must meet or be truant to our responsibility. Rally to the present missionary call.

NOTES-PERSONALS

We face now the rapidly approaching anniversary of the greatest single event of all time—the resurrection of our Lord.

"And he hath set eternity in the heart" (Eccl. 3:11). One of our pastors used that meaningful text in a great sermon recently.

Rev. D. M. Spence changes his address from Lillington, N. C., to 2821 Vanderbilt Place, Nashville, Tenn., and writes, "I am still open for Church work, should any become available."

Jesus, with all the mighty works He did, would have been forgotten long, long ago had He not arisen from the dead. In His resurrection He crowned, sealed and verified that which He had done in the flesh.

"Self-Denial Week"—March 30th to April 5th. Of what will each and every SUN reader deny himself that week and give the price to the mission offering to help carry the gospel to those who perish without it?

The Mission Board is requesting SUN readers to observe March 30th to April 5th as "Self-Denial Week." There can be no better way to prepare ourselves for the joy and events of Easter, since it is through self-denial that the gospel is to be preached unto the uttermost parts.

It is most fitting that Easter time be observed and celebrated with giving to missions. The Church is a spiritual body, and this spiritual body (the Church) is the only body or institution that gives itself to preaching the gospel, sending out missionaries, building places of worship to the living God.

Mrs. C. H. Rowland, president of the Woman's Conference, calls attention again to the places and dates of the missionary rallies in the North Carolina Conference, as follows: Palm Street, Greensboro, April 14th; Mebane, April 15th; Durham, April 17th; Shallow Well, April 21st; Parks Cross Roads, April 22nd; Henderson, April 24th; Liberty (Halifax), April 28th.

Rev. G. D. Hunt, Roanoke, Ala., March 16th, writes: "We are having our missionary services in April, beginning the first Sunday. We are having fine services with our Church at Roanoke this month. This is our 'Go-to-Meeting Campaign,' and we are trying to make our attendance report 100 per cent. So far, the attendance has been non-resident members, 99 per cent; resident members, 98 per cent—which I think is fine."

There is to be a fellowship meeting at Country Life Academy, Star, N. C., beginning at 2:30 P. M. Sunday, March 29th. Among those on the program are President Edward F. Green, Star, N. C.; Rev. J. M. Allred, Asheboro, N. C.; Dr. C. H. Rowland, Greensboro, N. C.; Rev. S. M. Penn, Sophia, N. C.; Rev. E. M. Brady, Kemp, N. C.; THE SUN's editor, and others. All Congregational and Christian Churches, their pastors and people within reach of Star have been invited to the meeting.

The quota for each Church in its missionary offering is one-third the amount of the pastor's salary, the offering to include the amount given by the Sunday School. Every Church in every Conference of the Convention can contribute this much, and so reach its quota, if every member will obey the call of the Master, "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, take up his cross and follow me," and if every member of the Church school is given the opportunity and the urgent invitation.

One pastor says: "How can I expect my people to give to missions this year when they are having to borrow money to buy meat and bread and supplies for themselves and family?" Well, while borrowing to buy supplies, such as tobacco, cigars, cigarettes, motion-picture tickets, gas, oil and tires for pleasure trips and other indulgences, why not borrow a little also for the Lord's work? And if some one has faith in you to advance you some money, why not you have faith in God to put a little in His treasury? We want God for our Friend all the time. And God wants us as His friends all the time, too. Now is the time to prove whether we are or are not the friends of Him who gave all to reach and redeem us.

Rev. C. W. Hanson, pastor of First Church, LaGrange, Ga., writes: "We are putting on a budget and furnishing each of our Church members with envelopes and making an every-member canvass. In our budget we have included $100 for missions, $3,000 for Church fund, $1,200 for pastor's salary, $150 for incidental expenses, $60 for janitor, $100 for Christian Orphanage, $100 for Christian education, $100 for Conference apportionment. This is a large budget for our Church, but we are endeavoring to put it over and are praying that the Lord may open up ways and means that the same may be accomplished." This is, indeed, a vast undertaking for our LaGrange Church, and we wish for Bro. Hanson and his co-workers success in the great undertaking.

In 1812 a Methodist conference was held in Baltimore. In that conference a resolution was offered providing that ministers of the Methodist Church should not be allowed to sell liquor at retail; in other words, run saloons. The resolution was defeated. Four years later, at the conference of 1816, the same resolution was again introduced and adopted, since the resolution had a clause not preventing ministers from selling beer at retail. In 1808, the Billy Clark Temperance Society, later growing to great numbers, was organized. The constitution and by-laws of this society provided that members of the society shall not be permitted to drink at excess, except at public dinners. For violation of the law, a fine of 25 cents was assessed. If a member had to be carried out, the fine would be 50 cents. And yet there are folks left in the world who will say that drinking and drunkenness are not decreasing. How early we forget some facts!

Mrs. J. W. Manning, Norfolk, Va., relates that "Our Sunday School (Christian Temple) is now enrolled as a 'World Service School,' and we are receiving the splendid programs and missionary literature sent by the Missionary Education Department, 14 Beacon Street, Boston, for all departments of the Sunday School. I cannot say enough in praise of this material. We have used all the study books on India from the beginners' department to the adult, and are now using those on the Caribbean islands, also pictures, posters and maps. We have also used the adult book, 'A Cloud of Witnesses,' and the junior book, 'The Treasure Hunt.' We sent for a set of fifty-three hand-painted stereopticon slides on 'Awakened India,' and our pastor gave the lecture, which comes with the slides, at one of our Sunday night services. We also used in our elementary department a set of curios from India, all of which we secured from our Missionary Education Department, we having to pay transportation only. The exercises were very interesting and, I think, helpful. The four missionary booklets which were recommended by Miss Priscilla Chase in THE SUN, entitled 'India Today,' 'Yesterday and Today in Porto Rico,' 'Our Common Social Problem,' and 'Why a Woman's Society in the Local Church?' are exceedingly interesting and helpful, especially for adult groups." Evidently the Sunday School of Christian Temple is getting that which counts both in character-building and for achievement both in time and eternity.

METHODS CORNER

BY REV. ELISHA A. KING, D. D.
Miami Beach, Fla.

WEST PALM BEACH, FLA.: Rev. Charles W. Pusey has resigned as pastor of this Church, closing a pastorate of three and one-half years. Prior to going to West Palm Beach, Mr. Pusey was the pastor of the Church at Orange City. At present, the Church is being supplied by Rev. D. M. Goodyear, of Hollywood.

WINTER PARK, FLA.: Raymond Robbins, the well-known social leader, spoke at the morning service of the Congregational Church in Winter Park on March 15th. Dr. Vincent, the pastor of the Church, was one of the speakers at the law-enforcement meeting of the Southern States held at St. Petersburg. His topic was "The Constitution of the United States. Who is to Rule This Nation, the People or the Bootleggers?"

MIAMI BEACH, FLA.: The Woman's Association of the Miami Beach Church was responsible for a very beautiful and successful garden party on the grounds of Mr. Harvey Firestone. This was one of the outstanding events of the season at Miami Beach and was very largely attended. The association took in about $1,400, part of which is used for Congregational benevolences and part for local charities. Dr. Elisha A. King reports successful progress toward the budget goal of this Church, which is $18,000.

JACKSONVILLE, FLA.: The evening of Wednesday, the 18th, was an interesting one at Union Church. Following a supper, there was a teacher's meeting which was addressed by Miss Stella M. Jordan, and at the same time a meeting of the Christian Endeavor Society, which was addressed by Mrs. Jesse K. Marden. Following these gatherings, there was the Church-night service, which was addressed by Dr. Jesse K. Marden, our foreign missionary doctor at Athens, Greece. These addresses were all greatly enjoyed.

ROBBINS, TENN.: The Barton Memorial Church, organized by Dr. William E. Barton forty years ago, is a strong force in the life of the entire country under the direction of Rev. and Mrs. G. L. Day. The beautiful little Gothic structure, with parish house and parsonage, appeal in a helpful way in connection with Church worship and the social and relief work carried on endear the minister and his wife to thousands of people throughout the great area of country that has suffered through depression during the past few years.

STEARNS, KY.: The final payment of the rebuilding program of Community Church three years ago, amounting to nearly $2,500, has been made, and notwithstanding continued and serious financial depression, the Church work in every way is prospering under the able leadership of Rev. Almon O. Stevens. The personnel of the Church is of a fine type, the Church school functions in a strong way, and the pastor and his people have faced the physical needs of the community and surrounding country in a way that has meant much to all who are suffering and resulted in a blessing to the Church itself.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S CONFERENCE.

A fine young people's conference was held in the Tampa Church on Monday afternoon and evening, March 16th, for the young people of the St. Petersburg, New Port Richey, Crystal Springs, West Tampa and Tampa Churches. Each of these five Churches on the west coast were represented by young people, and the four Christian Endeavor presidents in that group were present.

The program, which contained much fun and fellowship, a fine worship service, Camp Immokalee songs and presentation, came to a close with a splendid address by Miss Stella M. Jordan, of the Congregational Education Society, Boston. The young people were so delighted with the conference that they voted to hold similar conferences quarterly, the first of them to be held in the St. Petersburg Church, in June, following Camp Immokalee, with the four Christian Endeavor presidents and Miss Patty Lee Coghill serving as a committee on arrangements.

CHATTANOOGA COMRADES.

The Congregational Comrades of Chattanooga district held their second week-end conference at Union Church, East Lake, Chattanooga, March 7-8. The wide area embraced by this district is proven by the delegations attending. Pilgrim Church, Chattanooga, Daisy, Soddy and Pleasant Hill were represented.

The program, briefly, consisted of special services conducted by delegations from Soddy, Daisy, Pleasant Hill, and East Lake, and by individual young people; of addresses by Dr. T. B. Cowan, Mr. Robert Sparks Walker, and Rev. Lucy T. Ayres; of discussions conducted by Rev. A. L. DeJarnette, Dr. C. Rexford Raymond, Principal Samuel Elder, and Rev. Lucy T. Ayres; and of recreational and informational activities. The theme of the conference was "Forgiveness," an appropriate topic for this time of preparation for peace rather than war. From the opening devotional service conducted by our host, Rev. George R. Blount, at which he introduced Dr. Cowan, a veteran of the World War, who spoke on "War and Forgiveness," through the discussions, to the final service conducted by Pilgrim Church, a dramatic worship program entitled "Forgiveness," we kept that theme alive in our thoughts.

Memphis young people are too far away from the other Churches in the State to enjoy the inter-church fellowship which means so much, but they held their own week-end conference March 13-15. The small group of splendid young people met at the home of the pastor Friday night for an opening social and talked over their plans with the leaders, Dr. and Mrs. George, Rev. Lucy T. Ayres, and Marguerite Davison. On Saturday afternoon they held their first discussion on social and religious problems, then went to lovely Riverside Park for supper and a vesper service. Early Sunday morning they gathered again in Overton Park for a sunrise service and breakfast. They attended the regular services of the Church in a body, then met again in the afternoon for discussions, Christian Endeavor, supper, and a wonderfully impressive consecration service. This week-end meant a great deal to all.

"Let us be silent as to each other's weakness; helpful, tolerant, nay tender toward each other! Oh, if we cannot feel tenderness, may we at least feel pity! May we put away from us the satire which scourges, and the anger which brands; the oil and wine of the good Samaritan are of more avail. We may make the ideal a reason for contempt, but it is more beautiful to make it a reason for tenderness."—Amiel.

One who is systematic in his work gets the largest results from the least outlay of effort. A lack of method makes us slaves to our work. System makes us masters.—Selected.

We who go to Church with some degree of regularity know where the Church is located. People who have resided in a town for a long time ought to know where the Church is located, but there are a lot of people in every community who do not know the location of any Church. It is important that the name of the Church and its location should be known by all.

I have traveled through many country districts in several States and have made it a point to look for bulletin-boards or names of Churches, and have been surprised to find so many Church buildings unidentified. Strangers have no idea what a Church is except it be a Catholic or an Episcopalian edifice. There is something distinctive about them. But who knows a Congregational or a Christian or a Methodist or a Baptist Church by its architecture? So long as there are these different denominations in a community, why not advertise them as such? But the main reason for putting a bulletin-board or a name on the building is to let people (new people, strangers) who are looking for a Church know where it is.

Then it is also advisable to inform the police department and the street-car conductors and bus drivers where the Church is located. Strangers naturally turn to these people for information, and it seems to be a fact that policemen, conductors, and bus drivers do little to inform themselves about Churches. If the Church members do not take pains to see that this information is given, ignorance prevails and the Churches involved fail to reach folks seeking a Church home.

It is of importance also to keep the name of the Church before the public in the newspapers. In most towns, the local paper carries a list of Churches and hours of service on Saturdays. The name, location and hours of service ought to be printed in the paper each week. Publicity is far more important than many people seem to think, but it is through proclaiming the facts as stated above that Churches grow.

In printing cards or announcements of any kind, the location of the Church, with the name of the town or city, should be included. Local people might understand that "Plymouth Church" printed on a card meant the Congregational Church on College Street, and if the card strayed into the next town some one might know where it came from, but the average person would know nothing about it. Let your light shine. Tell the world! But above everything else, be accurate and specific.

HOPEWELL, VA.

The Hopewell Christian Church has had a blessed season of revival for ten days. In showing charity to others, the blessing has come to them. The Salvation Army started revival services in an unused building, but in the middle of their meeting the building was called for. The Christian Church offered them the use of the Church building as so many of the members were co-operating in the meeting.

Rev. A. E. Wachtel, of Leesburg, was the evangelist, and many knelt at the altar for salvation and sanctification because of his earnest preaching of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

At this season of the year, the passion and cruel crucifixion of our Lord for the sins of the world should grip our souls, for "He was wounded for our transgressions, He was bruised for our iniquities," and "the blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth us from all sin."

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

ONLY SELF-DENIAL WILL SOLVE IT.

The Disciples of Christ, through the brief years of their history as a people, have grown by leaps and bounds solely because, from the beginning, they have been a missionary people. They have put first things first. They are today one of the mighty factors of missions in the world. But, like the rest of us now, they face great difficulties because they are undertaking to raise huge sums (going into the millions) for missions. One of their organs, the Christian-Evangelist, declares editorially that "Self-denial alone will solve the mission problem." Let every CHRISTIAN SUN reader get the force of this:

"A people who undertake great things will not be surprised when they come up against great obstacles. It is comparatively easy to make a trail across the Rocky Mountains, but when you undertake to build a railroad and go through with the transcontinental trains, mountains themselves will stand up as the obstructions to be removed. The bigger the task, the greater the obstacles, but the divine purpose working through consecrated human personality can remove mountains."

Be it borne in mind that our Lord Himself, and not a mission board, instituted missions. He is responsible, and the cause is near and dear to His heart. Working with Him, however great the obstacles, we shall not fail. But in order to work with Him, we shall have to practice self-denial, because He saw fit to base the whole missionary movement on self-denial. This is His method of financing the greatest undertaking known to man. But our Disciples' friends are facing the problem, having appointed and used the week of March 1-7 as "Self-Denial Week." In making the appeal that this week be observed, the Christian-Evangelist said:

"It is likely that no people ever had bigger tasks before them than the Disciples have at the present time. We know we shall have to take off our coats and maybe sweat blood, but we have heard of no soul wanting to surrender or turn back or put it off. Least of all must our foreign missionary work be starved or shunted to one side. Retrenchment would embarrass us, halt and dampen our enthusiasm. And we are on the road to defeat when we let enthusiasm cool."

Our Mission Board faces a similar situation to that of the Disciples, who call upon their people to appoint a week of self-denial. This year the Convention is asking that we contribute $50,000 to missions. If we enter into the Easter period and service in the spirit of Him who gave us Easter, we shall come out victorious. He had not where to lay His head. He denied Himself of everything that He might conquer. He conquered. Self-denial enabled Him to conquer. The spirit of self-denial, practiced in His name and for His sake, will enable us to conquer.

We shall catch the spirit of Easter, not through self-adornment or indulgence, but through self-denial.

In our missionary offering we will be denying ourselves for the sake of Him who gave us Easter. It was a spiritual undertaking. Giving to missions is a spiritual gift. Christ proved this by committing to His Church the task, and to this day the Church, a spiritual body, is the only institution engaged in this task. We of the Church, a spiritual body, are called upon now to deny ourselves for the sake of our Lord, that through the act of self-denial we may enthrone Him in our lives, crown Him King of our souls and of our substance.

J. O. A.

THE SPIRIT GUIDES.

The work of salvation is of God. He alone can save the souls of men. And through His Holy Spirit, now present in the world, His plans are revealed, His program is presented and prosecuted. Our Saviour told His disciples that they should receive power, after that the Holy Ghost was come upon them, and then, and not until then, "Ye shall be witnesses unto me, both in Jerusalem and unto the uttermost parts of the earth." The Holy Spirit had to come to guide them, and only as He guides has the work of world-wide salvation gone forward. We may try all the man-made schemes, plans and programs we please for the saving of society and the welfare of mankind, but we will achieve permanent results only as we are guided by the Holy Ghost. Christ made this emphatic. There is no explanation, either of the magnitude of results achieved thus far or of the efforts now being put forth to reach and redeem the world through Christ, except the power and the guidance of the Holy Ghost.

The power necessary to carry on the work of winning this world to Christ comes only as the Holy Ghost is present in His sustaining and guiding strength. Luke, in closing his gospel, makes this very clear: "Thus it is written, and thus it behooved Christ to suffer, and to rise from the dead the third day, that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in His name among all nations. And behold, I send the promise of my Father upon you: but tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem until ye be endued with power from on high."

Now, carrying out this promise made by our Lord before His crucifixion, the same writer (Luke), in opening the second book he wrote (the Acts), said, as has already been quoted: "Ye shall receive power after the Holy Ghost is come upon you." Thus Luke, in closing his earthly history of our Lord, and in opening the heavenly, or rather the continuation of that history, as carried on by His Spirit, shows that, as Jesus guided His disciples while here on earth, so would the Holy Ghost guide after the Son had gone back to the Father. This explains why the Church of the living God is the only missionary factor and institution on earth. It is a spiritual body, missions a spiritual task. In carrying the gospel to the world, a spiritual undertaking, the Church, a spiritual body, stands alone, and unless the Church does the missionary work, it is not done.

At this period of the year our minds are directed to spiritual things. The breath of spring revives slumbering nature and calls to energy and activity all the forces and factors of dormant life about us. And the passion and resurrection of our Lord calls us to self-denial and to a reconsecration, under the guidance of the Holy Ghost, to the task for which our Lord died and because of which He arose from the dead.

The resurrection shows us the best that Christ Himself did or could do, viz: His victory over death, sin and the grave. Missions, under the guidance of the Holy Ghost, show us the best that we, as Christians, can do, calling upon us through self-denial to make our supplications and our offerings, that His name may be made known to the uttermost parts both at home and abroad.

A MARVELOUS RECORD.

All denominations of Christendom must marvel at the amazing results and achievements by the Seventh Day Adventists. No other Protestant denomination goes even one-half the distance that the Adventists go in obeying our Lord's most emphatic and farewell command, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel." Here is a statistical report that reads like a leaf out of a fairy story, or a page from the wildest fiction. It is said that fact is often more wonderful than fiction, and it is certainly true in this instance. Hold your breath while you read of a denomination with about 125,000 members here in the United States piling up a record like this:

"In five years, ending December 31, 1929, the Seventh Day Adventists have—

"1. Entered twenty new countries (political divisions).

"2. Undertaken gospel work in 170 new languages, increasing the total to 394.

"3. Established eighty new mission fields.

"4. Developed fifteen new union conferences or union mission organizations.

"5. Established 127 new institutions—colleges, academies, hospitals, dispensaries, and publishing houses.

"6. Opened 699 mission schools.

"7. Sent out 889 adult missionaries.

"8. Increased investments in home and foreign fields over $7,000,000."

Is it any wonder that this denomination has some forty hospitals strung across our country, dedicated to the relief of human suffering, and, while by no means a rich people, are establishing institutions, colleges, academies, publishing houses that thrive and prosper in the most marked manner? It may be said again that our Heavenly Father will forgive a Church and a denomination for a great many ills and sins and blunders, but there is one He will not forgive, and that is for not being missionary. The denomination that is missionary in spirit and in activity may be loaded with much unnecessary baggage, and have handicaps that otherwise hinder, but God will carry them forward in spite of all this if they are missionary and dedicate time, talent, life to the service of giving the gospel to those who are perishing without it. If we Christians could catch the missionary vision and zeal of Seventh Day Adventists for one decade, our numbers would multiply many-fold and our prestige would startle mankind and glorify God. God never has allowed a non-missionary people to grow. And He never has failed to give strength and power to a missionary people. J. O. A.

MONEY ABOVE MORALS.

A strange, not to say disgraceful, rivalry has sprung up between some States of our blessed Union. It is an unholy rivalry, since it supplants a moral question with one of money. Heretofore the State of Nevada has required ninety days' residence within its borders before filing a divorce suit. Recently Arkansas and Idaho, in order to compete with Nevada for the divorce trade, enacted ninety-day laws also. Whereupon, the Nevada Legislature passed a bill, which the Governor has now signed, providing that applicants for divorce can obtain their decrees after residing in the State for only six weeks—forty-two days. The new Nevada bill also provides that the grounds for divorce may be set forth in the words of the statute only, eliminating all details as to domestic troubles and what-not. There was threatened opposition to the new Nevada bill, all of which vanquished when a delegation of Reno attorneys and business men declared that "Reno would lose business amounting to over $3,000,000 a year to Arkansas and Idaho unless immediate steps were taken to meet the competition from these two States for the Eastern divorce business."

The humiliation and the disgrace of this spectacle grew out of the fact that the consideration of divorce as such had nothing to do with the matter, whether moral or immoral, right or wrong. It was all reduced to a money basis, and Nevada felt that it could not lose the revenue it was receiving by allowing competition.

It is indeed a sorry spectacle when any social question, whose center and foundation are moral, is considered solely in the light of the revenue brought in. There are many who insist on discussing the prohibition question, for instance, in this light, only declaring that the State and the nation need the money, and, therefore, should license liquor manufacturing and liquor selling. A people are in a poor way and a sorry business when they elevate economy to the supreme place and forget the social and the moral consequences involved.

So far as the press reports, there was no question raised in the Nevada Legislature about the morality or immorality of divorce. The one question that swept all before it was, "Can Nevada afford to lose some revenue by having a rival?"

It is significant also that the same Legislature enacted a gambling law, thus legalizing gambling in all forms in Nevada. Evidently Nevada is greedy for the shekels, soul or no soul. J. O. A.

HARD TIMES.

It is always hard times with some people, some business, and some sections. It is even hard times with some nations—during wars and after wars. But in the hardest times it is good times with some people and some lines of business. One can easily tell when it is hard times if he observes closely while riding on a train. If great piles of railroad ties lie along the road, he may know that it is hard times along that road. If prosperity were all along that road, they could not get ties cut from the woods; but when men have no money and no work, they will go to the woods and cut and hew railroad ties and haul them to the track. It seems that hard times may be necessary for making business and, eventually, prosperity. If there were no poor people, factories could not operate, mules could not be shod, plowing could not be done, coal could not be mined, and rich housewives would have to do their own cooking.

Prosperity causes people to forget that "In Him we live, and move, and have our being" (Acts 17:28), and when men forget that great truth they indulge in pleasure, increase their luxuries, neglect work, go in debt, and run wild in thought, associations, indulgence, neglect the house of God and the Christian way of living. This country has just passed a period of that kind, and hard times is the result. More people are having it hard now from debt, neglect of honest work, and extravagant use of cars and good roads than ever before. All wrong is the abuse of right. All sin is the abuse of good. Adam and Eve found that out before there was any wicked society to lead them astray. Sin causes people to disregard the law of "Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them" (Matt. 7:12). When we live as we should, we do not live for pleasure nor for ourselves, but for others. The farmer produces for others; the dairyman produces for others; the manufacturer produces for others; the historian and the poet write for others; paper, pencils and books are made for others. Monopoly is wrong in all its relations. Men, when they fill their true place in life, are co-laborers. "None of us liveth to himself, and no man dieth to himself" (Rom. 14:7). Life and death meet on normal terms at a funeral.

Hard times are necessary to correct public conditions and to bring people to a normal way of life. Hard times are the brakes on the car of progress necessary to cause people to stop, think, change their way of living and strive to obey the laws of God and the laws of the land. Hard times depress real values—wages, prices, employment, feelings, enterprise, and all the agencies of progress. To live soberly, discreetly, to love God and our neighbors as ourselves, to keep out of debt and live within our means, to reduce luxuries and games, to attend the house of God and worship Him in spirit and in truth, would change the times because it would change us. W. W. S.

The best part of health is fine disposition. Nothing will supply the want of sunshine to peaches. Whenever you are sincerely pleased, you are nourished. The joy of the spirit indicates its strength. All healthy things are sweet-tempered.—Ralph Waldo Emerson.

"If faith produce no works, I see
That faith is not a living tree;
Thus faith and works together grow,
No separate life they e'er can know;
They're soul and body, hand and heart:
What God hath joined, let no man part."

Fifty Thousand Dollars for Missions! A CALL TO SELF-DENIAL

The last session of the Southern Christian Convention voted unanimously in calling upon our people and Churches this year to contribute $50,000 for Missions—$25,000 for Home, $25,000 for Foreign work. Our Year-Book shows there are 32,000 of us. If we of the Southern Convention will give $2.00 per member—$1.00 to help build Churches and support the Gospel at home, in needy places; $1.00 to carry the Gospel to those who are perishing without it—we will easily reach our goal.

Thus far, since September 1st, the Sunday Schools, Women's Missionary Societies, and a few individuals of their own volition have contributed to March 1st $11,052.81. This leaves a balance of $38,947.19. What shall our answer be? How much prayer shall we offer? how much preaching shall we do? how much self-denial shall we practice in order to make this the best year for the ingathering of souls, the output of means, and spiritual enrichment of our Churches and people we of the Convention have thus far had?

Prepare by self-denial for a great Easter offering. Let every one have some part in this great and good undertaking.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Liberty Spring Christian Church, in Nansemond County, Va., celebrated its sixty-second anniversary Sunday afternoon, March 15, 1931. It was a great occasion, a great congregation, and a great service. Hymns, prayers, "Satisfied With Jesus," as a solo by Mrs. W. F. Monell, of Portsmouth, and the major part of the program was a history of the Church by the pastor, Dr. I. W. Johnson, who has served this Church twenty-seven years. The main building was dedicated twenty-five years ago. Sunday School rooms, kitchen and heating plant have been added since that time, and the property is now worth $20,000, with no debt.

There have been thirteen pastors during the sixty-two years, and only three of them are living—M. W. Butler, R. H. Peel, and I. W. Johnson. The present membership is 335; the Sunday School is large and well attended. A. H. Savage began to teach a class of young ladies in 1874; one of his class became his wife, and he continues to teach, now more than fifty years. Five young men from this school became preachers—C. C. Peel, R. H. Peel, J. W. Harrell, J. W. Rawles, and Stanley C. Harrell.

No doubt, the history prepared and read at this anniversary celebration by the pastor, Dr. I. W. Johnson, will appear in THE CHRISTIAN SUN, and readers of THE SUN can get all the information it contains.

Liberty Spring is noted for its good people, its good dinners, good congregations, good singing, and good community. This history will, no doubt, inspire other pastors to spend time and research and do some hard work in preparing histories of their Churches and celebrating anniversaries. It is a big job to get the full history of a local Church, but it is information very much needed. If all the Churches in a Conference would get up such histories and have such celebrations; and then if W. E. MacClenny would condense these histories into a brief history, it would furnish the Conference with important data for permanent record and reference. The Church, as well as the Churches, has paid too little attention to Church history. The average members know almost nothing of the history of their local Churches, and less of the Church of which the Conference is a member.

Rev. H. S. Hardcastle, of the Suffolk Church, offered prayer, and this writer made a brief address on "The Country Church and the Country Preacher." Liberty Spring Church and their pastor might have furnished good material for such an address, but they received only congratulations for their great work and their great example: for that Church has made that community great not only in Sunday School and Church, but in homes and a Christian neighborhood. There is nothing more concrete in friendship and association than a Christian country community, and there is nothing equal to a country Church and a country preacher in producing such a community.

After the service closed at the Church I went with four couples to the homes of Joel Harrell and family to enjoy a sumptuous and hospitable dinner. Fourteen kinds of good food, well prepared, and in abundance, made the table groan under its weight, and all around the table enjoyed the hospitality of this Christian home. There is no home like a country home, no dinner like a country dinner, no Church like a country Church, and no preacher like a country preacher. Christian hospitality and Christian neighbors, and Christian service make a Church that holds a community together as nothing does. It is unity in action, love in reality, and faith in expression.

W. W. STALEY.

ELON LETTER.

I have previously written of five objectives held by various persons as satisfying the end of life. In this letter I wish to write of two others. The objectives so far discussed have been "Faith, Good Works, Scholarship, Thinking, and Understanding."

The sixth group about whom we write this time looks upon life as an aspiring adventure. They fasten their eyes upon the future in terms of a growing and developing life. They are charmed with the inspiration of the things that are to be, and they insist that a man's life consists in the abundance of the things he hopes for. Does a man hope only for food to satisfy his physical appetite? Put him down in the class of the wild animals and the beasts. Of if he is somewhat socialized in his quest for the satisfaction of his physical wants, but longing only for satisfaction in that realm, put him in the class of the domesticated animals. Does a man hope to achieve a brilliant career for himself, trampling over the broken and bruised forms of his fellows in his upward climb? Then mark him down as a savage. No matter how many fine clothes he may wear, nor how many of the conventionalities of civilization he may have acquired, essentially such a man is a savage. Does a man hope for the abundant life for himself and for all the other creatures whom God has made? Does he hope that the weak will become strong; the poor, rich; the bond, free; the blind, possessed of sight; the lame made able to walk; the hungry, clothed and fed; the ignorant, wise; the deprived, pure; the disconsolate, cheered by the good news of the gospel? If he hopes for these things and is determined to do full duty for their realization, mark him up not merely as a civilized and enlightened man, but also mark him up as a Christian. The things we hope for are a determining factor in our individual life. The things a nation centers its aspirations on, likewise determine the national character. Our fate, our future, is briefly comprehended in the hopes that stir our hearts and animate our endeavors.

There is a final group about which I wish to speak. They do not undervalue faith, nor deeds, nor knowledge, nor thought, nor wisdom, nor hope, as representing each a basic concept in the constitution of the abundant life. They rather accept all six of these answers as containing a vital principle for the successful and satisfying ordering of life, but they are not satisfied with any one of them nor all of them in combination. They insist that the abundance of a man's life consists not only in what he believes, in what he does, in what he thinks, in what he understands, and in what he hopes for, great and good as all these are. They insist that a man's life consists in the abundance of the things he loves, and they would comprehend in the circle of life's affections God, brother-man, their own individual personality and the world itself.

The interests included in the heart's affections determine the magnitude of our soul's growth. A man is, they say, the sum-total of the things he loves. God loves the world. And they would join with Paul in the praise of this principle of love as the integrating and the seasoning quality of life, lacking which life is a sounding brass or a tinkling cymbal. They would plead for a love that suffers long and is kind, that envies not, that vaunts not itself and is not puffed up, that does not behave itself unseemly, that seeks not its own, that is not easily provoked, that thinks no evil; for a love that rejoices not in iniquity, but in the truth, that bears all things, believes all things, hopes all things, endures all things; for a love that never fails. And they would have us say to the buoyant youth who throng our colleges today, "Now abide faith, good works, true scholarship, clear thinking, wise understanding, aspiring hope and divine love—these seven; but the greatest of these and the all-inclusive is love."

W. A. HARPER.

THE FORTY DAYS.

The sacred season of peculiar separateness for Christian life has come again. These forty days have deep meaning for all souls who are one with Christ, who belong to the holy assembly of "a withdrawn brotherhood" and are attuned to the brokenness of Christ. "If St. Catherine of Siena prayed," says H. Herman, "that she might in her measure bear the sins of a heedless world; if the theosophical mystic, John G. Gichtel, besought God that, since he was unworthy to be anathema for his brethren, he might at least suffer the loss of all things, that they might be saved; surely the bride and mystic body of Christ must be smitten with a like pity and a like passion for self-oblation."

The Lenten time calls Christians to the fast of the wilderness, to meditation upon the sacrifices of the Spirit, to that wonderful keenness of sense which can penetrate through all to the uttermost. During these forty days we go apart with Christ; there to learn that "the contemplative soul stands on that haunted frontier line between sense and spirit which is the devil's own hunting-ground," and from there to see "the mount of God, ringed about with heaven."

The chastening of the spirit is a means of grace which yields rich compensation. The refined experiences of St. Francis of Assisi were due to the action of "love bending its whole strength of will to comply with and conform to the passion of the well-beloved, so that the very soul . . . was transformed into a second crucifix." Communion with Christ and participating in the sorrows of the last days of His ministry will work to the filling up of His sufferings and to the efficiency of His redeeming death. Only a Church that has a bleeding heart can help a perplexed and straying world. Only a riven side draws forth and heals the hand of doubt. The Church or the soul which is not broken as Christ was broken will fail to save a perishing humanity.

A fast of forty days will bring new power into Christian life and will furnish new hope to a lost and despairing world. As Christendom moves toward Calvary, sinners will enter upon the way of salvation, and great will be the company which gathers at the cross.—Nashville Christian Advocate.

RUSSIA'S NEW MORAL CODE.

Following the recent sixteenth session of the Communistic party, a pamphlet was distributed by hundreds of thousands throughout the entire country, spreading a growing hatred against religion as the worst enemy of Communism. A Poland newspaper says that it is evident, from statements contained in the pamphlet, that the fight against religion is to be waged with greater energy than ever before, and to this end everything is justifiable, good and bad, every meanness, every cruelty, every lie and every violence. This statement is in the document: "Communistic morality is entirely subordinated to the interest of the class struggle of proletarians."

THE SIGNIFICANCE OF FIFTY MILLION CHURCH MEMBERS.

The United States has fifty-one millions of people actually enrolled in the membership of the Christian Church—Protestant and Catholic—and at least eighty millions are of Christian sympathy and affiliation. In that single statement it is seen, by the very preponderance of numbers, that the Christian Church must assume responsibility and furnish conscience for the great tasks which face the civilization of America today.

The Church of God throughout the world fell down in the facing of its tasks a generation ago, or there would have been no World War. If another dire cataclysm or any lesser evil faces America, the responsibility will lie at the door of the Christian Church. It is in the valor of the individual soul that the whole question of moral and social life must root itself. Professor Jacks says in his latest book, "The Inner Sentinel," "All proofs of the existence of God are worthless unless the valor of the soul is present to sustain them." It is life that counts. We may give ourselves to "rattling our theological swords when we ought to be saying our prayers, so that all belief in God goes off into the contentiousness of arguments, than which no surer means could be found of destroying religion altogether."

We need in our thinking and in our living to stress first of all the possibility and necessity of the inner transformation of the lives of men, that must lay hold of the life of every one who would form a part of the Christian Church. The form in which it will come will vary according to the individual. The experience of a college president may be quite different from that of Billy Bray, the drunken miner, but the fact in each case may be the same. So it was in the New Testament. Paul's experience came in a moment; Peter's came little by little. Different writers use different words. James calls it conversion; Peter says it is like coming out of the darkness into marvelous light; Paul says it is like being raised from the dead, and John says it is being "born again."

Since this is true, the fifty million professing Christians must give themselves, first of all, to the task of bringing this good news to "the least and the last and the lost," as well as to those who sit in places of culture and opportunity and power. It has been the scandal of the Church in the last few years that its membership has done so little in this regard. Is it because its own sense of duty to God and men has grown less, or because its own joy at the transformation of the new birth has faded out little by little until it has become only a memory; or is it because amid much discussion of secondary things we have come to feel that the great essential is not as imperative as once we thought it to be? The call of the Church must be sounded afresh from every pulpit by lips which have been touched themselves with a coal from God's altar.

Some one has been interested to figure out that even if there had been as many people in the world two thousand years ago as there are now, if each one converted on the day of Pentecost had gone out to win one more during the entire year, and those so won had continued that work, twenty years before the gospel of John was written the whole world would have been won to Christ. No man can be a leader of others who has not felt God himself. If he goes to his task without it, the veriest tyro would cry after him, "Sayest thou this thing of thyself, or did another tell it thee?"

The world needs applied religion, but we must get it before we can apply it. Now the fields where men need to apply it are manifold. In the field of social service, in the relation of man to man as employer and employed, and as citizens of a republic, the principles of our religion must appear in every-day life. Labor and capital are standing over against each other armed with strike and lockout. Jesus Christ would not have it so.

In the great problems in which we are interested as a nation, the responsibility for every issue must depend upon the Christian Church. Only a warless world will satisfy the Prince of Peace, but how shall we have a warless world with the Church warring with itself? How can the Church say to nations, "Cease your strife!" when its own strifes are being multiplied on every side? In the first century of the Christian Church, the outsiders said, "See how these Christians love one another." Would it not be a shame if in the twentieth century the outsiders said, "See how suspicious these Christians are of one another?"

Perhaps no question is at present of greater moment to the Church in America than the question of temperance. If it is a matter of votes, the Christian Church has votes enough and power enough to keep the eighteenth amendment in its place and to see that it is enforced. If there is need for a clearer understanding of the principles involved, it is the province of the Church to see to it that those principles are unfolded to her youth and to those who are in the stress and strain of daily life. If there is a willful, wicked propaganda whereby the same millions that were behind the saloon are behind the effort practically to bring it back, there is need that the Church should see to it that this false position is made plain and that the whole country shall unite with such great leaders as Edison and Ford, and our own President, and hundreds of thousands of godly men in pulpit and in pew, in bringing the great facts home to the consciences of men.

All this constitutes a task big enough to strain our sinews, if it does not break our hearts. But in all this we go to our work, not at our own charge. He whose we are and whom we seek to serve is our Leader, and He has said, "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth. Lo, I am with you alway."—World Call.

"Satan is constantly on the lookout for idle hands into which he may place his evil commission—work which never fails to bring forth a full crop of misery and disappointment. He does not look for the busy hands."—Selected.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Secretary.

A PRAYER.

O God, our heart's desire and prayer for the nations is that they might be saved. Saying so, may the Lord's redeemed give their first and best to make it so. We pray, Father, in the Spirit's power, send out Thy Church to succor and save. Why its being, if not to advance! Thou, Father, who givest life and opportunity, reveal unto us Thy holy will and bestir within us the sense of our own high privilege; thus, confidently, loyally, shall we carry forward our Lord's compassionate quest for souls until His judgment fills the earth. In His precious name. Amen.

THE HOLY SPIRIT AND MISSIONS.

Two things appeared to be most on the mind of Jesus during the last few days of His resurrected walk with men. One was the world viewpoint in sympathy, service and salvation; the other was that the leader in that kingdom program is the Holy Spirit.

Such seems to be the import of the closing scene of Matthew's biography of Jesus. In it, the Master leads His disciples apart, and in a few sweeping sentences utters the great commission. He first stated His authority, and then issued His command. It was that they set up a world program for the diffusion of His message and life.

He issued that command to men of provincial race in a provincial time. One of their hardest problems was to forget the imaginary barriers they had set up between themselves and other parts of the human race. Probably the two most startling things Jesus said were that a man must be born anew and that the kingdom would be a world kingdom.

The command was to baptize the nations into the name of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit. Jesus had in mind the completeness of the Divine personality, even as He had in mind the completeness of the gospel program. In that moment, the Trinity was born into human thinking. In that moment the Holy Spirit was definitely announced. And it was announced in connection with a missionary program. The spiritual omnipresence of God was to supply the dynamic for the world conquest of the cross.

Jesus finished His statement of the great commission by reminding His friends that they would not go to face the responsibility alone. He would be with them, He said, even unto the consummation of the age. What could He mean? In bodily form, He was soon to vanish. In that form, He has not since been seen. But in the manifestation of the Holy Spirit, He has been with His people, and in that form He has gone before them into every new field of need. How vain and futile would be any attempt at world conquest for Him without the recognition of the one sufficient dynamic—the presence and power of the Spirit.

That power would not make them the soldiers of an empire, but the heralds of a name, a life, a salvation. The power to keep the necessary strength, courage, and fortitude; the power to be faithful to the end, though it involved so great a task as the winning of a world, He said they should have—when the Holy Spirit had come upon them. That was the secret of missionary success then. It is the secret of it still.

Jesus went. They waited. Then came Pentecost. The power that fell upon the waiting company that day was international in its reach. We have laid great and proper emphasis upon the subjective effect of that experience, and the deeper consecration and more thorough-going transformation it brought about. But there was more to its results than that. The first fruit it bore was that of personal transformation. The second was the overflow of that torrent of spiritual power across inter-racial and international barriers.

The tongue of fire symbolized a message that was to run like a leaping flame, and burn its way around the world and into its heart. With it came loosened tongues, and these people began to speak.

How strangely different were their words! They had been so accustomed to the use of a racial vocabulary that no one else could commune with them. Now they had suddenly acquired an international vocabulary. They spoke with such a spirit of sympathy, fraternity and spiritual force that men of many nations caught the deeper note in their language and understood them.

Parthians, Medes, Elamites, dwellers in Mesopotamia, Judea, Cappadocia, Pontus, Asia, Jhrygia, Pamphylia, Egypt, Libya, Rome, Crete and Arabia—all were there, and each understood. Another middle wall of partition had been broken down. In that assembly a man was no longer a national, but a man. Jesus had emphasized the world viewpoint, but formerly these people had only partially understood, if at all. That day they understood. Their Teacher was the Holy Spirit.—Nashville Christian Advocate.

THE ROAD FORWARD.

To give up is to go forward. Throughout our great brotherhood there is being created a genuine wave of self-denial. These are days in the United States when the more fortunate are denying themselves in the interest of the less fortunate. That is a genuine reflection of the Christ spirit. These are days in the kingdom when the more fortunate must really deny themselves for the less fortunate millions of the earth.

If we could transfer the self-denial spirit that has sprung up under this depression in the United States, to the needs of the kingdom, we would revolutionize the world. As Christian men and women, why not be as concerned of the spiritual needs of mankind as we are of the physical wants of the unfortunate? By faith, Abraham gave up all he had and obeyed God's command. He made of himself the most universally known character of those far-away days. By faith, Moses refused the sonship of the Pharaohs, choosing rather to suffer the affliction of the children of Israel than to enjoy the treasures of Egypt. By doing this, Moses put himself at the head of a list of the five greatest men of the world. Through self-denial, Moses has written his laws into the constitution of every organized government.

Christ gave up everything He had, emptied Himself of all material riches, and, through suffering, became perfect. Through self-denial the Master became the only Saviour of man. Through faith, Paul surrendered everything, resigned a high official position, left the source of all family traditions and made for himself the most worthy record in the annals of time. Having given up everything for the kingdom, Paul lifted on his fingers of faith the continents of the earth and the isles of the sea. By faith, Carey gave all that he was and all that he had and became the father of modern missions. By faith, David Livingstone gave all that he was and all that he had and opened up the Dark Continent. By faith, John Patton gave all that he was and all that he had and banished cannibalism in the New Hebrides. By faith, Susan Rijnhart and Dr. Shelton gave all that they were and all that they had to lift the bright horizon on the roof of the world. By faith, young Zena Loftis gave up all that he had and all that he was to make for himself a crown that will shine throughout the centuries.

The need of the present hour is for a people who have faith in God. A people who believe in the authority of Jesus Christ. The need is a people who stand willing to give themselves in everything to make the great commission effective throughout the world.—Christian Evangelist.

TEN THOUSAND VILLAGES LACK CHURCH.

The Home Missions Council of North America, in a statement published recently, says that America has 10,000 villages without Churches, 30,000 villages without resident pastors, and 13,400,000 children under twelve without benefit of religious instruction.

"These facts constitute a definite and unescapable challenge to the Christian Churches of America," the statement says. "A nation may exist without religion, but it cannot live without religion. Until its religious need is supplied, a nation is not secure and cannot be free." The Home Missions Council is a Protestant organization, claiming 23,000,000 members in its affiliated agencies.—Chicago Tribune.

MISSIONARY PROGRAM FOR APRIL.

By MRS. W. M. JAY.

Women's Societies.

Topic: "Why a Society?"

Opening hymn: "O Master, Let Me Walk With Thee."

Scripture reading: Rom. 14:7-12.

Poem: "Will You Open to the Master?"

Will you open to the Master?

He has trod a weary road.

Will you give your best as to an honored guest?

He has helped you with your load.

Will you open to the Master?

Will you give Him welcome sweet?

Will you give Him food of gratitude?

Will you bathe His tired feet?

Will you open to the Master?

Dare to keep your door tight locked?

Ah, think of your rue if it comes that you

Never answered when He knocked!

Will you open to the Master?

He comes in many a guise.

Will you welcome all who on you call,

Lest your Master you despise?

Will you open to the Master?

Thrice blest who none denies,

But who for love of Him above,

Shares His sweet charities.

—John Oxenham.

Now, let the president, or the one appointed to take charge of the questions, begin at once without interruption. She might say that in the light of what has just been said, the following question will be discussed. She may introduce them by reading the list or one question at a time. She should intersperse the discussion with some thoughts of her own. Try to have each person present express herself on at least a part of the questions.

Questions for discussion:

1. What organization within the Church is best fitted to promote the spirit of friendliness?

2. Why does our society exist, and are the purposes given legitimate ones?

3. By what activities of the past year would you wish your society judged?

4. Is there an intelligent interest throughout our entire group, including the younger women of the Church, or is the missionary interest confined to a few?

5. Is it possible for any organization connected with the Church to be truly Christian and not missionary in the broadest sense of the term?

Closing consecration prayer: "And now, dear Father, as we have glimpsed a larger service for our woman's society, may we each one dedicate our lives anew. Keep us steadfast in Thy fellowship. Use us as Thou wilt, our hands to do Thy work, our lips to speak Thy truth, our lives to be gospels of Thy mercy; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen."

(Have copies of the above prayer prepared and in the hands of each member, so that all may pray together.)

II. Study period:

1. Leader's summary of foregoing lessons:

(1) Star of India.

(2) Difficulties of the cutcasts.

(3) Village life in India.

(4) The development of Hinduism and its curse upon the people.

(5) Geography of India.

(6) Buddhism and other religions.

(7) Islam in India and the conflict existing between Mohammedans and Hindus.

(Approach today's lesson with the November, 1927, National Geographic Magazine, if possible. The special supplement, "Vasco da Gama at the Court of Zamorin of Calicut," is a copy of a beautiful painting which would repay one for a diligent search, especially in connection with this lesson.)

2. Leader's introductory to the appearance of Christian missionaries in India (pages 82-85).

3. (1) The Spanish Xavier, a member.

(2) The German Schwartz, a member.

(3) The English Carey, a member.

(4) The American Judson, a member.

4. Leader's conclusion: "Who follows in their train?" (pages 94-95). This paragraph is a good preparation for the worship service.

III. Worship service:

Theme: "Who Follows in Their Train?"

1. Hymn prelude: "The Son of God Goes Forth to War" (members sing stanza "Noble army," etc.).

2. Call to worship: "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself and take up his cross and follow me" (Matt. 16:24).

3. Hymn: "Holy Spirit, Faithful Guide."

4. Scripture: Luke 9:57-62.

5. Prayer.

6. Offertory: "Follow the Gleam." (Following the offertory prayer, sing.)

7. "Follow the Gleam," or "Ye Christian Heralds."

8. Benediction.

Willing Workers' Societies.

Theme: "Serving Jesus."

Call to Worship: And whatsoever ye do, do it heartily, as to the Lord, and not unto men.

Song: "Lift Your Glad Voices."

Scripture: Christ's resurrection (Luke 24:1-12).

Prayer (by leader): Thanking Jesus for the Easter season, and asking His blessing on the boys and girls everywhere.

Offertory.

Recitation (a recitation for seven members, each bearing the letters that spell "Victory"): "Victory Through Jesus."

(V) "Victory through Jesus! That's the note I hear

When the bells of Easter ring cut sweet and clear.

(I) In the morning of the Easter Day,
In a quiet garden, very far away,
Jesus rose victorious from the rocky tomb:
Rose to bring believers life's immortal bloom.

(C) Christ is risen from the dead;
Blessed words the angels said.
Let our lives the message give,
Praising Him in whom we live.

(T) Triumphant faith now smiles and sings,
Rejoicing in the King of kings.

(O) Over death and evil, over sin and pain
Jesus gained the victory, evermore to reign.

(R) Risen Redeemer, we also will use,
And live to Thy glory beyond the blue skies.

(Y) Yet a little while, we'll see Him;
Yet a little while we'll meet
In the house of many mansions,
Where our joy will be complete."

Solo: "Christ the Lord is Risen."

Talk (leader): Briefly tell about Easter in other lands.

Song: "Give of the Best to the Master."

Benediction: Now, the God of Peace, who brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus, the Great Shepherd of the sheep, make us perfect in every good work to do His will, through Jesus Christ. Amen.

ADVENTURES IN YOUTH FELLOWSHIP

"Youth at Work in the Church."

JEWEL TRUITT, Editor, Waverly, Virginia.

EASTER MATERIALS.

These suggestions for the observance of Holy Week have been written by Prof. A. R. Van Cleave, of Elon College, for use in young people's groups in Christian and Congregational Churches in the Southeast. The events of the last week of Jesus' life on earth have been outlined and suggestions made for the building of a worship service around each. Scripture, hymns and pictures may be used to make these events more real.

Other suggestions for worship will be given from time to time, and we shall be glad to know what you need and want, to enrich this phase of our work.

PATTIE LEE COGHILL,

Chairman of Worship and Devotional Life of the Youth Fellowship.

SUGGESTIONS FOR OBSERVANCE OF HOLY WEEK.

The Lenten season is being used by countless Christians throughout the world as a time for an enrichment of the spiritual life. This is a time essentially of worship and meditation. Not only is "mankind at the cross-roads," but many of us now, and all of us sooner or later arrive at the cross-roads of life. In the words of Rev. Archibald Black, "Life is too strenuous and big and too actual to risk thoughtlessly. . . . With Jesus, we require a period in the wilderness of solitude, where we can think and decide, meet God and the devil."

As a part of the Lenten program, especial attention should be given to Holy Week. A great many Churches are now using this period for a series of special services. No more appropriate time could be chosen for a deepening of the spiritual life and for a program directed to the end of bringing many into the fellowship of the Christ. It is with the thought that many young people's organizations will want to hold daily worship services during this week that these suggestions are being prepared. It should be understood that the few ideas that appear here are to serve only as suggestions. Many organizations will be able to work out programs of their own, rich in music, thought and worshipfulness.

PALM SUNDAY.

The first meeting of the series may well serve two purposes. In addition to conducting the worship program, the leader may desire to create an interest in the remaining services of the week. He may do this by calling attention to the dramatic intensity and to the influence of the events of this week. Here it is—just a little week, scarcely a moment of time in comparison with the ages through which the world has passed, yet that moment of time has changed the course of history and determined the destiny of nations. Here it is—just a little country, apparently insignificant in area and resources, yet from it there developed a kingdom that is world-wide. Here they are—just a little group of ordinary people, apparently, yet from them has gone out an influence that has touched the lives of millions and transformed the social life of man. Where could a similar period be found?

The worship service on this day may lay emphasis on the triumphal entry. We may picture the scene that is given us here. It is the time of the great Jewish feast, and the streets are crowded. Into this city comes Jesus, riding upon an ass, the beast of burden of that day. He is greeted with great acclaim! They spread palm branches, and even their garments, in the way. Small wonder that the Jewish leaders feared the multitude when they sought to destroy Jesus!

The entrance of Jesus has been contrasted with the entrance that might have been made by some war lord. Jesus came in meekness and riding upon a beast that symbolized humility. Whatever acclaim He received came from the affection of the people, and not from any desire for pomp or any self-aggrandizement on the part of Jesus.

Many hymnals in use will indicate the songs appropriate for this day. They should be songs of praise and triumph. Among the older songs, such songs as "Come, Thou, Almighty King," "Oh, Worship the King," and "All Hail the Power of Jesus' Name" would be appropriate.

MONDAY.

The event most often associated with this day is the cleansing of the temple. Jesus found surrounding the temple, and even in the outer court, a crowd of money-changers and traders. These exchanged secular money for the temple shekel, and sold animals for sacrifice. It is generally assumed, from the acts and words of Jesus, that these people were not only guilty of bringing the noisy din of trade into the quiet of the temple, but were also guilty of avarice and greed and abundant trickery. At twelve years of age He had resolved to be about His Father's business. At this time we find Him still concerned with it. He was known to have spoken "as one having authority." Here He acts as one having authority.

Perhaps we can do nothing better on this day than to ask ourselves what there is in our own lives that has not been brought under His authority. If Jesus came even to the inner temple of our own hearts, how much that is there would have to be driven out before it could really be the temple of God? We shall do well, too, to look at our Christian religion today.

Songs for this day may emphasize either power or reconsecration. The following might well serve: "Oh, Zion, Haste," "Lead On, O King Eternal," and "My Life, My Love I Give to Thee."

TUESDAY.

This was a day of conflict. Apparently Jesus was making a final attempt to win to Himself the Jewish nation. On the other hand, the leaders of the Jews were in search of means to have Him destroyed. They challenged His authority, but He in turn asked them concerning the authority of John the Baptist, and they were afraid to answer. They attempted, with various questions, to catch Him in some statement that could be used against Him. Jesus, in turn, produced at this time the great parables of warning found in the twenty-first and twenty-second chapters of Matthew.

Many thoughts of value are suggested by the events of this day. We are reminded that there is a real battle on between the forces of evil and of righteousness. Old wrongs do not give way easily. Every program for social improvement will be fought bitterly by those who make profit from the old conditions. A recent writer has said that the greatest malady in American life is that of "spectatoritis," as he calls it. We, as a people, are merely spectators, rather than participants in the struggle for a more Christian nation. We may well ask ourselves how courageous and how consecrated we have been in this task of building the kingdom. Then, too, we may take to ourselves the lesson contained in these parables of warning, "What shall I do with Christ?"

The songs for this day can very appropriately sound a call for a greater allegiance and a greater zeal in Christian service. "Rise Up, O Men of God," "Onward, Christian Soldiers," "True-Hearted, Whole-Hearted" are songs of this type.

WEDNESDAY.

According to many authorities, Jesus spent this day in retirement at the home of Martha and Mary. Judas makes the bargain to betray his Master, and the Jewish leaders mature their plans against Him.

In connection with this study, we can make the friendship of Jesus our theme. We are reminded of the friendship that Jesus had for every man, and also of His appreciation and desire for human companionship. At this time of trial, He sought refreshment in a circle of friends. The picture we have of Jesus here in the heart of a friendly home stands greatly in contrast with the picture of Him on Tuesday on the busy streets of the city, surrounded with many enemies. We are reminded of the humanity of Jesus. In time of trial in all of our own lives do we not find a chief source of comfort in the ministry of friends? How much of a friend does He find in us today?

Many songs can be found that emphasize the friendship of Christ. Among them will be found "I've Found a Friend," "I Think When I Read That Sweet Story," "Oh, for a Closer Walk," and "What a Friend We Have."

THURSDAY.

The Last Supper is the outstanding event of this day. The earthly career of Jesus was drawing near the close. Very soon upon His disciples must fall the responsibility for the success of His program. He could foresee the dark days of sorrow and despair ahead. The bonds of faith that had held the disciples to Him had to be made as strong as steel to hold them steady in the days that were to come. What was more natural than that He should want this farewell meal with them? There is something psychologically significant about this matter of eating together. According to the unwritten laws of hospitality among primitive people, if a stranger enters a house and is given food, he must be protected even at the cost of the owner's life. Jesus knew the significance of this last meal together.

Suggestions come to us from this scene of the love of Christ. By the action of Christ in breaking the bread and pouring the wine, we are reminded of His sacrifice for us. We, His followers, still break the bread and drink the cup in remembrance of Him.

Appropriate songs would be: "Break, Thou, the Bread of Life," "Oh, Love that Wilt Not Let Me Go," and "Oh, Master, Let Me Walk With Thee."

FRIDAY.

The thought and meditation of this day will be centered on the crucifixion of Jesus. The events of the day may be traced from the scene in the Garden of Gethsemane, through the pretense of a trial and the scourging of the soldiers to the crucifixion on Calvary. So many of the events of this day catch the attention, that one scarcely knows which ones to choose. To the Romans, this event was just another man who might cause trouble put out of the way. To the Jewish leaders, it was the fulfillment of their plans. To the disciples, it seemed the end of their dreams. But to us it has come to mean the revelation of the heart of God. We may well give our attention to the attitudes of Jesus as exemplified in this time of crisis. These would include His resignation to His Father's will, His self-control under persecution, and His willingness to pray for those who did the wrong. The "seven last words," or the sayings of Jesus on the cross, would make a valuable study. The types of people present at the cross also deserve some attention.

Sunday School Lesson

JESUS TEACHES HUMILITY.

LESSON I—APRIL 5, 1931.

GOLDEN TEXT: "Every one that exalteth himself shall be humbled, and he that humbleth himself shall be exalted."—Luke 14:11.

LESSON: Luke 13:1-14:35; 18:15-17.

The Lesson Committee has been making some big assignments in the Gospel of Luke as material to be covered in one lesson, and the best that one can do with today's lesson is to select such portions of it as deal with humility.

JESUS AND THE WORD "HUMILITY."

When Jesus came into the world, humility was looked upon as a vice and a weakness. Force, aggressiveness, self-assertiveness, pride of race and nationality were thought to be desirable virtues, but there was no place in the Roman world for humility and meekness. One of the most amazing things that Jesus did was to take this word which symbolized a vice and a weakness and make it symbolic of one of the fundamental virtues of a truly great and good life. Humility in its true sense is noble and Christ-like.

It should be said, however, that humility on Jesus' lips and in Jesus' life did not mean self-abasement, cringing, self-pity, discounting one's capacities or worth. No man ever brought more of dignity to life than Jesus. No man ever held his head higher. No man ever believed more intensely in himself. Humility on Jesus' lips and in His life meant a joyful recognition that God had given Him gifts and capacities; but it also meant that He recognized that all that He had and was has been given Him by God, and was not of Himself. The thought of the dignity and the possibilities of life made Him humble, as it made Him grateful.

And of course the word humility took on new meaning because of the life of Jesus. Dr. Jefferson calls attention to the fact that the only quality to which Jesus calls attention in His life was humility. He said, "For I am meek and lowly in heart."

HUMILITY AND THE LIMITATIONS OF OTHERS.

A group of people intimidated in Jesus' presence one day that the reason dire disaster had come upon some of their fellow-men was because they had been sinners above all others. Jesus bluntly told the group that unless they repented they should likewise perish. He intimated that those who have looked at their own lives will have a sense of humility that will prevent them from thinking of themselves more highly than they ought to think. It is reported that a saint of other days, when he saw a man being led away to pay the death penalty for a crime, said: "There, but for the grace of God, goes Richard Baxter." That exclamation was born out of a sense of gratitude and humility. We all need this spirit of humility in passing judgment on others.

HUMILITY AND THE UNFRUITFULNESS OF OUR OWN LIVES.

The parable of the unfruitful fig tree was an indictment against the unfruitfulness, both of the individuals to whom it was spoken and of the nation as a whole. When any man thinks of the limited output of the fruitage of Christian graces in his own life, it ought to make him humble. And, as a matter of fact, those who do most for God and who are most fruitful in His service are those who have an inspiring spirit of humility. All such not only frankly recognize that what they have done has been due to the gracious working of God's spirit in their lives, and they also frankly recognize that even at their best they have been unprofitable servants in a way.

HUMILITY AND OUR SELF-SEEKING.

Jesus was a keen observer of life. As He stood watching the action of those who had been invited to a wedding feast, He saw the principle of self-seeking and pride flaunting itself unashamed. It seemed that there were certain folks who wanted the chief places at the table. They wanted the "front pages" and the headlines on the front pages. They wanted to be "it." Jesus suggested—and there is a fine touch of irony in His suggestion—that true worth will be recognized, and that a man is to allow recognition to seek him rather than to seek it in the wrong way. He laid it down as a fundamental principle that if a man exalted himself, the time would come when he would be abased. The spirit that seeks to exalt a man at the expense of others has within it the factor that inevitably and eventually will bring the man down. Jesus also stated that the true spirit of humility would always bring about true exaltation. Not necessarily fame or fortune, but God has a way of exalting those who preserve a meek and humble spirit. "Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth." Let every man take heed to himself that he embody in his life and express in his conduct the spirit of humility. But, as has been suggested, this does not mean that one should not be ambitious to be the best he can. It does mean freedom from pride and arrogance, lowliness of mind, a modest estimate of one's own worth.

SUGGESTIONS FOR HOLY WEEK.

Whatever incidents we may choose for our study will lead our thoughts to "the old rugged cross" and the Christ who suffered there. The cross has maintained through the centuries its central place in the Christian religion. Here is the love of God revealed! Our Master would make no compromise with evil and would give up none of His ideals, even to save His life. He followed the will of the Father even to death on the cross.

Many songs would be suitable for this service. Among them will be found "In the Cross of Christ I Glory," "When I Survey the Wondrous Cross," and "The Old Rugged Cross."

EASTER SUNDAY.

So much material will be available for use in this service, and from such a variety of sources, that it need not be given extensive treatment here. This is the great day of triumph! The disciples were living in a night of gloom, but this day brought back the light. It was the inspiration from this day that called them anew to the task of bringing in the kingdom of God. It was a belief in the companionship of the risen Christ that gave them the strength to endure. There is no day in the Christian calendar that can exceed this one in importance.

Joy and exultation will find its place both in our thought and in our song. The hymnals usually carry a group of Easter songs, and much special Easter music is available. "Christ the Lord is Risen" and "Crown Him With Many Thorns" are found in almost all song books.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Sunday, April 5, 1931.

TOPIC: "Easter Message in Literature."

SCRIPTURE: Col. 3:1-4; also Luke 24:44-51 and Psalms 24:7-10.

A great deal of poetry and many beautiful songs have been written about Easter and the Easter message. Members of the society who are in charge of this particular program should have no difficulty in securing quantities of materials from which they choose in building a program for this meeting. Or the material given on this page for Easter Sunday, written by Prof. Van Cleave, may be used.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE
One of our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy.

"If thou wilt make the Almighty thy treasure . . . then shalt thou delight thyself in the Almighty . . . and thou shalt make thy prayer unto Him and He will hear thee."—Job 22: 25-27.

MONDAY.

ALL NATURE HELPS US.

"For the earth bringeth forth fruit of herself."—Mark 4:28.

Jesus has a great deal to say about our bearing fruit. He expected results. The story of the barren fig tree illustrates the stern demand. So we ask ourselves if we are profitable servants. But how shall we tell? The product of a useful life is slow in appearing and very shy of showing itself at all. We observe, too, that people intent upon doing good to others often make themselves objectionable, and defeat their own ends. We will not torment our souls over this thing. Of course, we must be faithful and diligent; but we need not be obtrusive or impatient. Straining effort is likely to be futile. When the seed is planted, the rest is left to nature; the fecund earth will not fail us. A good life, filled with unselfish service, will not be in vain. Results may safely be left with God.

Prayer.—O God of the seed-time and of the harvest, who alone dost give the increase, we give ourselves to Thee, and pray that Thou wilt use us in Thy wide field to bring forth fruit unto life eternal. Amen.

TUESDAY.

OUR DUTY.

"Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."—Mark 12:31.

Self love is assumed. It is made the norm by which is measured and tested all my human relations. Of course, we must love ourselves. To hate one's self would be the sign of a diseased mind. Do we love our neighbor equally? That is not inevitable, nor is it easy. But it is necessary if we would solve our own life and find joy and peace. It is also necessary if we would find the satisfaction of being useful. We cannot do much for ourselves; selfishness always defeats itself. We can do much for others, forgetting ourselves for their sakes.

Prayer.—Heavenly Father, who hast called me into the fellowship and service of Thy Son, grant that the same spirit which was in Christ Jesus may be in us. Put the law of kindness in my heart, that with good will and eager feet we may follow where the Master leads. In His name. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

LOVING REMEMBRANCE.

"This do in remembrance of me."—Luke 22: 19; Luke 22:1-20.

The scene of the Lord's Supper in the upper room is the despair of all art. Paint, nor music, theologians nor poets can express its meaning to us. After grasping all we can of it, by faith, love and sympathy, simply enter the mystery and glory of its thrall and worship. Here we can remember and hope. Here all the bitterness of sin and sorrow is dissolved in comfort. Here love fills the world.

Prayer.—Heavenly Father, who dost make us sit down at Thy table, and who dost break unto us the bread of life, refresh us with Thy eternal waters this day, of which if one drinks he shall never thirst. Through Jesus Christ, our Lord, we ask it. Amen.

THURSDAY.

SILENT DEVOTION.

"I have yet many things to say unto you, but ye cannot hear them now."—John 6:12.

This day in our Lord's last week is a day of silence, so far as the records inform us. The surmise that He spent the day in seclusion with the disciples or in the home in Bethany is plausible. It would be in keeping with His serene, untroubled spirit. He had many things to say, but it was not necessary to say everything. He was going away, but the Holy Comforter was coming, and in the future they would have divine guidance.

Are we still looking for the unsaid things? There is more truth to come yet. There is enough for us for our guidance in our day. That guidance will not fail us.

Prayer.—Almighty God, who didst make all provisions for Thy Son and for our coming, through Him, into the kingdom, we beseech Thee to make ready our hearts for the brightness of Thy glory and the fullness of Thy blessings in Christ Jesus our Lord. Amen.

FRIDAY.

LOYAL DEVOTION.

"Whosoever will come after me, let him deny himself and take up his cross and follow me."—Mark 8:34.

It was with a true appreciation of its significance that the Church made the cross the symbol of the Christian religion. In a comprehensive and eloquent gesture, it both tells a story and announces a program. So it is very dear to me as it reports sacrificial life behind me, by which I benefit; and it is alarming as it summons me also to the life that is heroic, unselfish and sacrificial. On this Good Friday I must challenge my soul to an accounting. Am I seeking "safety first"? consulting my own ease and comfort? choosing the path of least resistance? This is not to follow Christ. It is not even good living; for all great living is sacrificial. We rise in strength and stature by self-denial.

Prayer.—O God, I thank Thee for that great witness of love in Christ, whereby He endured the cross, despising the shame of it. And I pray that Thou wilt deliver me from the bondage of fear, that I may encounter perils and embrace privations faithfully. In Christ's name. Amen.

SATURDAY.

SHINING HOPE.

"For we are saved by hope."—Rom. 8:24.

Another silent day in Passion Week! It was the pause between the cross and the resurrection. The Church early named it the "Day of Darkness." For we remember that the disciples were without expectation that day. All was at an end, so far as they could see. Many of us have had such dreadful pauses, when despair sat heavy on our hearts. There are those who live and suffer in this gloom, without God and without hope in the world. Alas for them! We can endure anything if only we have hope.

Prayer.—O Comforter Divine, we commend to Thee those from whose path in life flowers have faded and song has ceased; and to whom life seems but a weary, joyless road. From all their dependencies deliver them, and out of their darkness and gloom lead them into the light and hope and joy of Christ. Amen.

EASTER SUNDAY.

IMMORTALITY.

"But I would not have you be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep, that ye sorrow not, even as others which have no hope. For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even to them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with Him."—1 Thess. 4:3.

This is our day of life's comfort in both material and spiritual things. It is not a day to be interested in one another's new clothes; simple and humble dress would be more conducive to the soul's enrichment. We are to think of those in white raiment, and we are to look to the whiteness of our own souls.

There is not so much in loud noises, either. Comforts are spoken in a whisper. We ought to hear these voices today. Today we are told that the loved ones who sleep in Him are not dead. Somewhere in God's country they live and wait for us. They will not return to us. We will go to them. If this is not so—

"Earth is dark at the core,

And dust and ashes all that is."

These realities are our highest intentions, and they confirm our hope, assuring us that "Love can never lose its own."

Prayer.—Almighty God, our Heavenly Father, who hast brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus Christ, and hast promised that whosoever liveth and believeth in Him shall never die, we thank Thee fervently for the cheer and comfort of this day, for the precious memory of those near and dear to us, and for the blessed hope of finding them again when we are released from this bondage of mortality. Give unto us patience while we wait under the clouds and through the dark places. Overcome all our doubts and fears, and with faith unflinching and hope growing brighter, help us to go on our way toward Thee. In Christ's name we ask it. Amen.

WHAT SELF-DENIAL WILL DO.

The observance of "Self-Denial Week," as suggested by the United Christian Missionary Society, will do two things. It will enrich the life of the whole Church by enriching the lives of these members of the Church deny themselves some luxury, pleasure or even necessity to the end that the kingdom of God may be advanced.

The giving of the average member of the Church today is so meager, so small, that individually, it neither hurts nor helps. We do not give to the point of sacrifice with the result that no helpful spiritual reaction comes of it. What we give we do not miss, and giving on this plane we have no fellowship with Christ in His sufferings. Our small giving may build in some measure the kingdom of God, but it does not build us. To actually sacrifice something for the cause of Christ will bring an increase of spiritual power and a happiness in Christ we have not known. It will lift us out of paganism. To very, very many it will be an absolutely new experience. Then, it will spread. Giving, like everything else, is contagious. Those who do not join in the observance of "self-Denial Week" will be compelled to think about giving. And thinking will finally result in action. Many people who do not join in the observance of the week will be led to increase and enlarge their regular giving.

I suppose most of us are thinking about the situation of the United Society and the absolute necessity of carrying forward the work without increasing the deficit. That is tremendously important. But the larger benefit and blessing of this week of self-denial will come in an enlargement of our souls, in our closer fellowship with Jesus and in the larger, finer interpretation of disciples held up before you.—Christian Evangelist (Disciples).

THE CHRISTIAN SUN'S PULPIT

REV. JOSEPH W. FIX, Preacher.

THE PERSONAL AND HUMAN FACTOR IN MISSIONS.

BY REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE
Pastor Suffolk Christian Church.

"Go ye, therefore, and make disciples of all nations."—Matt. 28:19.

This is the most astounding utterance that ever came from the lips of man. Here was a man, apparently without power, and certainly without prestige or material resources, commanding a small group of eleven, rather ordinary men, who were also without prestige or power or wealth, to go out and to make disciples of all the nations of the earth. It was, from the human standpoint, an impossible and, therefore, a fantastic thing.

And yet the men who heard these words believed that the Man who uttered them meant just what He said. They obeyed Him literally. They waited until they had received the power which He had promised, and then they went everywhere preaching the gospel and teaching the nations. It is to be noted, too, that they found confirmation of what He had told them in what they were able to do, for the record says, "And they went forth and preached everywhere, the Lord working with them, and confirming the word with signs following (Mark 16:20). There is no more thrilling story in history or literature than the story of what these men and their successors through the centuries did.

Now, that which they began in a small way, has become a great enterprise. Modern missionary activity involves a great organization, a great staff of workers, a great and varied program, and a great budget. Because of this fact, there is a subtle danger that we may lose sight of the personal and human factors in missions. This sermon seeks to emphasize these personal and human factors.

I. The personal and human factors involved in the peoples to whom the gospel message is carried. We are prone to look upon things in the mass, and thus to overlook the individual. This is true of things close at hand, and it is still more true of things afar off. At a distance, a crowd appears simply as a mass of people. Individuals do not stand out. When we think of missions in their so-called foreign aspects, we, therefore, usually think in terms of nations and races, great masses of people, rather than in terms of individuals. To some extent, of course, this is inevitable. But it is at the same time unfortunate. In the ultimate analysis, the gospel becomes an individual and human problem. The men and women, the young people, the boys and girls, the babies of other lands and of other races are individuals, and personal human beings. They are flesh and blood just like us, with the same hopes and fears, the same temptations and trials, the same joys and sorrows, the same weaknesses and strength, the same sense of guilt and sin, the same hunger and capacity for God. And God sees them as individuals. It will help us to keep this fundamental principle in mind. Only thus can missions become really vital.

II. The personal and human factor involved in the people who carry the gospel message. We have a tendency to think of missionaries as being different from ordinary folks. We feel that somehow or other an ocean trip transforms them and makes them different from Christian workers, and especially ordinary Christians here at home. Now it is not aside from the point to say that, in many respects, many missionaries are different from us. They have practiced a measure of self-denial which many of us are unwilling to practice. They have made prayer a greater reality in their lives. They have a more vital faith than many of us possess. But in the basic things of life they are just individual, human beings. They have our same limitations and our same weaknesses. They live our kind of life in basically the same kind of world that we live in. Fundamentally, they are like us. It will help us to keep this in mind. We will be more constant and careful in our prayers in their behalf, and we will be able to help them to better advantage if we keep this fact in mind. And the same principle will apply, of course, to native workers. The gospel ultimately becomes a personal matter, both in respect to those to whom it is carried and those who carry it.

III. The personal and human factor involved in the people who administer the missionary program. The words "home" or "foreign mission board" conjure up in many minds a group of people who are different. For many, they mean a group of men and women with fat salaries, and with practically no business sense, sitting back in richly furnished offices, racking their brains in trying to invent some scheme, or in trying to make some new plans, and always demanding of us more money. There are many people who never think of members of the mission boards, or mission secretaries, in terms of individual, human beings. Such people ought to be reminded that mission boards and mission secretaries are men and women who are rigidly honest and tremendously sincere, and who carry on their minds and in their hearts the burden of the work, always intensified by the contrast between what ought to be done and what their meager funds will allow them to do. They are men and women who seek to do the best they can with what they have. They sometimes make mistakes—they would be the first to admit it—but they have a high sense of their responsibility and they try to be faithful in discharging it. They need and welcome our prayers.

IV. The personal and human factor involved in the people who support the missionary enterprises. The Church is the only agency that is giving the gospel to others. But when we think long enough of the Church, we come eventually and inevitably to the individual. The Church universal, the denominations, the conference, the local Church, the individual member—this, in brief, is the process. In other words, this matter of sharing the gospel with others comes back ultimately to you and to me—it is an intensely personal and human factor. The Church cannot do what it ought to do in carrying out the command of Jesus unless every member of the Church does what he or she ought to do. In the final analysis there can be no proxy in the matter. The missionary enterprise of the Church depends upon you and upon me and upon every individual follower of Jesus Christ. Dare any of us to disobey the one who is not only our Saviour, but our Lord!

STEWARDSHIP AND THE CHURCH.

IV.

GOD'S PORTION AND PLAN.

A reserved portion by which to support His kingdom is one of God's pre-ordained purposes which never ceased to gather force and validity until at Pentecost its wholesale recognition made it a permanent principle of the new-born Church. From earliest time, God made reservation unto Himself of a portion of each thing He put here for man's use and benefit, to be forever "holy unto the Lord." The sum or estimate of that portion hardly can be questioned. The Scripture confirms the tithe is of general acceptance. Most people are ready to say that not less than one-tenth of one's own, be it little or much, should be given for kingdom uses. The gravest feature is that Churches are unresponsive to the divine plan for fixed and regular paying to the Lord's work—a training in Christian education, the practice of which usually leads to sacrificial giving, and which, if not for their own sakes, older Christians should put into effect for sake of the young and the future.

Christ and His Church yearn for souls and for that which most expresses soul-interest—a part of our means; not that a gift is desired, but that, in us, fruit may abound. And members want to give, but they need the impetus of push and plan. Abraham's tithe signified a pre-ordained principle which, if practiced by leaders, would evolve, for any Church, irresistible push. Paul, in 1st Cor. 16:2, delivers a veritable exegesis of plan, the favor of which still grows with use. With a means of grace so practical and tested as is regular, proportionate giving, the management of a Church cannot, with impunity, long delay providing its constituency with some plan for individual participation.

OBITUARIES.

KNIGHT.

On September 10, 1930, God, in His infinite wisdom, sent His death angel and carried home our dear pastor, Rev. J. W. Knight. We, the members of New Lebanon Church, wish to express our appreciation of him in the following resolutions:

1. That we hold a grateful remembrance of his faithfulness in serving our Church for nine years. We commend to all the examples of his Christian life, trusting that his life may draw us nearer the Lord.

2. That while we realize that we have lost a faithful pastor, we deeply mourn our loss, and bow in humble submission to Him who doeth all things well.

3. That we extend our deepest sympathy to the bereaved family, praying that our Heavenly Father will comfort them.

4. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, one put on the secretary's book, and a copy be sent to The Christian Sun for publication.

CARPENTER.

In memory of Bro. S. E. Carpenter, who departed this life at the home of his son, Rev. W. B. Carpenter, near Tifton, Ga., on March 5, 1931. He was born July 12, 1851, and was married to Miss Harriett Williams in the year 1880. To this union were born six children. One child died in infancy. His first wife died in 1898, and that same year he was married to Miss Bettie Roberts, who, with three children, survive him. He leaves to mourn his departure a faithful wife and eight children, two aged sisters and many other relatives and friends. He was largely known and highly esteemed by everybody who knew him. At the time of his death he was senior deacon of our First Christian Church in Roanoke, Ala. He was stricken with paralysis some two years or more ago, and this rendered inactive his Church duties.

A large crowd attended the funeral at Midway M. E. Church Sunday, March 8th. Seven ministers were present, five of whom spoke at the funeral. All that tender hearts and loving hands could do for his comfort was willingly done. His loving wife gave him all attention possible, and, as a faithful sentinel, stood guard by his bedside until the end came. God will bless her for this faithful service and God will rest his soul in peace.

G. D. HUNT, Pastor.

FULTZ.

Minnie A. Hurst, daughter of A. P. and Nancy Caroline Hurst, was born June 17, 1876, in Fleming County, Ky., and departed this life March 3, 1931, aged 54 years, 8 months, and 14 days. When 13 years of age she was converted and baptized and united with the St. John Christian Church, Muses Mills, Ky., under the ministry of Rev. R. B. Conley. She was united in marriage to Charles W. Fultz September 26, 1893, and to this union thirteen children were born, seven of whom died in infancy, while the other six survive their mother. Those who are left to mourn her departure are her husband, C. W. Fultz, and six children—A. P., Floyd M., Verna B. and Gladys M., of the family home at North Branch Station; Mrs. Iva F. Hastings, of Neshanic, and Route 2, New Brunswick—her father and stepmother, Rev. and Mrs. A. P. Hurst, of Elon College, N. C.; four brothers and one sister—W. B. Hurst and J.

P. Hurst, of St. Joseph, Mo.; A. G. Hurst of Holton, Kan., and A. W. Hurst and Mrs. C. James Velie, of Elon College, N. C.—and a host of friends.

From childhood she lived a consistent Christian life and was ever ready to give her life in practical Christian service, especially for the sick. She gave her life for her family with that fine self-abandon so characteristic of true motherhood. Her work here is ended, but her joys are untold in the beautiful home of the soul.

ELON COLLEGE

AN ACCREDITED COLLEGE

of the

CONGREGATIONAL CHRISTIAN CHURCHES OF THE SOUTHEAST

ELON was founded to train Christian leaders for the New South.

ELON has done its task well—one graduate in seven being in the Christian ministry. The other six express Christian leadership in the various professions and vocations. Experience teaches that spiritual leadership must be indigenous.

The South is now a New South ready for an inclusive Church, the type of Church for which Elon has stood for forty years and for which she is prepared to produce capable leadership.

With no Church in the community, save the College Auditorium, ELON has practiced Christian Union for faculty, students, and community for four decades.

Its contribution to Christian Education is nationally known and approved.

Its Christian Education Building, providing laboratory facilities for religious leadership training, is unique and is the first college building of its type in the world.

ELON confines itself to undergraduate liberal arts work with that religious emphasis which befits the Christian College.

In ELON the Congregational-Christian Church has an asset of marvelous hopefulness.

The South needs her Yale, her Oberlin, her Carleton, her Pomona for the intellectual leadership of the United Church. Many regard ELON as strategically located and spiritually endowed to become such a center of illumination and leadership training.

MISSIONS IN INDIA.—

Bishop McConnell has just returned from India, where he delivered the Barrow lectures and will receive a dinner in his honor at Commodore Hotel, April 13th, in New York City, and give his first public address, in which he will interpret the situation in India and its bearing upon the Christian movement there. He will have some interesting information concerning the mission situation in India which will be hailed with great concern by those who are interested in the missionary situation in that country.

TO TEACH MISSIONS.—

Basil Matthews, until recently one of the secretaries of the World Y. M. C. A., and now attached to the staff of John R. Mott, of the International Missionary Council, has accepted an invitation from Boston University to become its professor of missions, which post is to require but four months' residence in this country each year. Dr. Matthews delivered a series of lectures in Boston a few weeks ago, but has now returned to England. The great mission of the Church is missions, and it is a good omen when universities establish departments of missions.

THE SMALL CHURCH.—

Dr. Norman Milliron, graduate of Drew University and of New York University, left a Church of 1,000 members and went to Pittsburgh, Pa., to accept a call from a struggling Church of 200 members. He has built up the Evangelical Church to a solid membership of approximately 400 members. He does not agree that a large Church, with a large staff, best conduces to the development of individual spirituality. His theory is that a pastor should gather around him a congenial group, every member of which he can reach and impress by his own personality. That was the way Christ worked in His ministry among the twelve, and the world has felt the impact of His personality.

DAVIS PASSES.—

Dr. Ozora Davis, president-emeritus of Chicago Theological Seminary, died March 15th. Ordained to the Congregational ministry in 1896, between the years 1896 and 1908 he held pastorates at First Church, Springfield, Vt.; Central Church, Newtonville, Mass., and South Church, New Britain, Conn. In 1909 he accepted the post of president of Chicago Seminary. Many books have come from the pen of Dr. Davis, among them "Evangelistic Preaching," "Preaching the Social Gospel," "Principles of Preaching," "Credentials of the Church," and "Preaching on Church and Community Occasions." Some of these books would be good and valuable reading for young men preparing for the ministry.

NEW OLD-TESTAMENT TEACHER.—

Rev. John Paterson, of Dunbarton, Scotland, has accepted the invitation to become a professor of Old Testament exegesis and Hebrew in Drew Seminary. Dr. Paterson taught at Drew during the first seminary of the present school year, and during that time won the high esteem of students and faculty. He will make a strong accession to the faculty and draw patronage to the institution. America is becoming awakened more and more to the preparation of candidates for the ministry, and young men preparing for this calling are necessarily becoming better prepared to meet the demands of the times.

MISSION PERIOD.—

The last session of the Southern Christian Convention redefined the Church calendar and designated March, April, May and June as the mission period during which no other Convention call should be made to the Churches. There is great need for concentrated effort to be made during this period to raise the necessary mission funds to meet the urgent needs in our mission fields. Every member of the Church should make special effort to make a contribution to missions by "self-denial," by tithing, or by free-will offering during this period. The work of the kingdom for others, in foreign fields, is the most Christ-like, the most unselfish work that a Christian can undertake, and it should be done for the love we have for Christ.

EDUCATION FOR MARRIAGE.—

The general assembly of the Presbyterian Church, North, to consider the report of a commission, working on the problem of "Marriage, Divorce and Remarriage." The recommendations of the commission will propose four avenues of approach: First, the general education of those preparing for the ministry will include studies of moral control, due to changing conditions of life. Second, adequate sex instruction in the seminary itself, with particular attention to home adjustment. Third, education of parents, particularly with a view to safeguarding the children from unwholesome home experiences, and impartation of scientific sex knowledge. Fourth, education of young people for parenthood. The trend of modern times is toward loose divorce laws; the Church should be wide awake to this growing evil.

UNEMPLOYED.—

Rev. J. A. McCalland, of New Bedford, Mass., Federation of Churches, chairman of the committee on evangelism, in an appeal, says: "The worst unemployment situation today is not in industry, but in the Church. There are men and women, members for years, who have never spoken to any one about their relationship to Jesus Christ." Many of our Churches are supporting their pastors poorly, contributing very little to missions, doing very little evangelistic work, attending Church services irregularly, neglecting the Sunday School and Bible study, and spending much of their time complaining about economic depression as an excuse for all this neglect. When financial depression comes, as it has come now, Church members should endeavor to use the wealth of spiritual values, enriching their spiritual life, contributing to the spiritual well-being of others, and building up the Church. The worst kind of unemployment is Christian unemployment.

SYRIAN CHURCHES IN INDIA.—

It is not generally known that on the west coast of South India there has been in existence from the early centuries of the Christian era a Church which owes its origin to the missionary labors of the Churches of Asia Minor. This ancient community of Christians, whose Christianity is older than the Christianity of most of the European nations, now numbers only about 800,000 members. Part of these Churches are under Roman Catholic control, but the majority of them are Evangelical, and are generally known as the Syrian Church. About sixty years ago an evangelical movement started in this Church, and this branch broke away from the old Syrian Church and organized themselves as an independent Church, with its own bishop and Church council free from control by any foreign ecclesiastical authority. The old Syrian Church, also known as the Jacobite Syrian Church, has for centuries been recognizing the spiritual authority of the Jacobite patriarch of Antioch, though from early times they have had Indian bishops.

JOHN DEWEY.—

An ovation was given to Prof. John Dewey, of Columbia University, when he rose to speak at Boston in the interest of better political and economic conditions in America. "Two years ago," he said, "with the new administration, business took charge and guaranteed prosperity. There is no need to point to the contrast in the situation today. The issue is this: Shall the agencies of government be used for the people or for the few? In previous depressions, voters have put 'the outs' in office and hailed panaceas. The fact that neither of these remedies is proposed today shows that the public is thinking. A new movement must grow slowly; it took labor forty years to rise to power in England. What are the problems? Unemployment is only a phase of the general question of a system of employment which will assure well-being. A national income of $90,000,000,000 is enough for all, if justly distributed. What is the cause of such unequal distribution? That is the question. It will require much thinking to settle it."

NOTES-PERSONALS

We never build up ourselves by tearing down other people. Repeat all the ugly things you hear of others, but that does not help any one to think nice and pleasant things of you.

"Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which, according to His abundant mercy, hath begotten us again unto a living hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead" (1 Pet. 1:3).

Pre-Easter services are being held each night during the present week at our Richmond Church. Dr. Ryan is doing the preaching, and the music is under the direction of the various activities of the Church, a different group having charge each night.

Beginning April 12th, our Wakefield, Va., Church, of which Rev. C. E. Gerringer is the pastor, will hold a two weeks' revival. The services will be conducted by Rev. H. C. Caviness, of Portsmouth, Va., and the pastor asks that all join in prayers for a most successful meeting.

Let him take that busy life and put it in the Easter light. What is there left of all the labor the morning after death? What is there left? The laborer is left. All that is left of the labor is found in the laborer. And, therefore, the Easter light reveals this to me—that the supreme purpose of work is to fashion the worker.—J. H. Jowett.

Now, Jesus was certain of personal immortality, of the persistence of the individual soul after death. About this matter He spoke with confidence. He was sure of the future—can we not follow where He leads? If we find all of His practical teaching wise, reasonable, and true, does it not help us to believe that He was not mistaken in other things?—William Lyon Phelps.

It is, however, the glory of our Christian faith that out of the darkness and depths of discouragement comes the light of hope. In His triumph over death and His resurrection to life immortal, the Master has opened for us the gates of heaven. The joy of Easter lies in the revelation and perpetual message which it brings to mankind of new faith, new hope, new courage, and new strength.—Frank G. Allen.

The annual Summer Conference of the Missionary Education Movement, Dr. W. Knighton Bloom, Washington, D. C., chairman, will be held at Blue Ridge, N. C., July 29th to August 7th. Announcements say that the program for 1931 is stronger than ever and is being prepared under the direction of Mrs. M. E. Tilly. The Blue Ridge Conference is always a feature and an opportunity for great helpfulness to all who attend.

Rev. H. S. Hardcastle, Suffolk, Va., under date of March 27th, writes: "Please send 250 more envelopes for our special missionary offering. Any that are left over we will carefully put away for another year. I am leaving no stone unturned in my effort to 'uncover' all the money I can for our missionary offering." Every Church should see to it that each and every member receive an envelope for the offering.

Rev. E. Stanley Jones seldom if ever wrote lines more beautiful and comforting than these: "Life's last word is not a cross, but an Easter morning. What are scars, if at last they become radiant? What is a cross, if at the end it lifts me? What is pain, if my pain becomes a paean? What are separations, if I come back more completely and fully than before? What can winter do, if spring beats in my veins? What of Calvary, if just beyond it lies an Easter morning?"

Rev. J. Cleveland Barrett, of Portsmouth, Va., has accepted the call to the Hopewell Christian Church and began his pastorate there March 29th. Bro. Barrett is an Elon College and a Defiance College man and has had some years of successful experience both as pastor in Ohio and Pennsylvania and as secretary of Y. M. C. A. He carries to the Hopewell Church a well-prepared and consecrated life. Hopewell is one of our promising younger Churches, and some of the most consecrated of our workers are there.

Rev. G. C. Crutchfield, Lynchburg, Va., writes, under date of March 27th: "We have made our plans to observe 'Self-Denial Week,' as suggested, and to make our offering for missions just as large as possible. For some time past we have been preaching on the line of missions. We trust that the entire Convention may reach its goal, for this old world of ours is certainly now in need of the gospel and its redeeming power. Elsewhere we are printing a letter, a copy of which Bro. Crutchfield sent to all of his members.

According to the St. Petersburg Times, a four-day prohibition convention of the Anti-Saloon League of America was held in St. Petersburg, attended by 12,000 visitors and delegates from practically all States of the Union. The Times gave pages to the report of the convention and to great addresses delivered by the most competent and outstanding temperance leaders of America. If one thinks prohibition is dead or dying, let one read the proceedings and catch the enthusiasm of some of these conventions held for promoting and preaching prohibition.

The women of the Eastern Virginia Conference anticipate largely attended and interesting missionary rallies next week as follows: At Rosemont, Rev. J. F. Morgan, pastor, April 7th, Mrs. H. C. Caviness, district superintendent; Liberty Spring, Dr. I. W. Johnson, pastor, April 8th, Mrs. B. D. Jones, district superintendent; Windsor, Rev. E. B. White, pastor, April 9th, Mrs. W. D. Harward, district superintendent; Waverly, Rev. F. C. Lester, pastor, April 10th, Miss Louise Pittman, district superintendent. The theme of these rallies is "Missions and Changing Conditions." The full program appeared in THE CHRISTIAN SUN March 19th.

One pastor of rural Churches, deeply interested in soul-winning and kingdom enlargement, writes, under date of March 25th: "I am insisting that my Churches make 100 per cent missionary offering this year. This can be done even with a little money. God is pleased with a small gift given in the right spirit. I am insisting that our ladies give all the eggs they get the first Sunday in April. This plan is taking well. I feel that God is able to magnify small gifts. I pray that we will soon see a better day. God is trying His Church, or is permitting it to be tried. I have faith to believe that the Church will survive and come out victorious."

In the death of Dr. Ozora S. Davis, on Sunday, March 15th, not only did Congregationalists and Christians lose a great friend and co-worker, but the Christian world lost a great life and noble leader. Dr. Davis arose from the most humble walks of life to trusted leadership and an illustrious career. Serving various pastorates in New England from 1896-1909, he was called then to the presidency of the Chicago Seminary, and by the power of his consecrated intellect and Christian leadership made that seminary noted throughout the country. He was at one time moderator of the National Congregational Council, was the author of many volumes, and a contributor both in prose and poetry to his own Church paper, the Congregationalist, and to other papers through which his facile and favored pen reached the eye and captivated the mind and heart of thousands in every walk of life. His visit to Elon College and the service he rendered here are recalled with delight by all who had the privilege of meeting and hearing him, and his memory will be cherished as one whose life was dedicated to high purpose and noble pursuits. For two years prior to his death, the doctors having pronounced his disease incurable, he worked on and fought bravely to the last moment in the name and service of Him to whom his great life had been dedicated. The end came to Dr. Davis quite suddenly on March 15th while on a train near Kansas City, returning from California. The world is richer for his living in it, and will long remember him as the poor boy who came to be a mighty power indeed for strength and righteousness in the world.

A PASTOR WRITES HIS MEMBERS.

Dear Members:

The Lenten season is here. It is the season of the cross, of love and sacrifice and self-denial. It is also the season of hope. The cross is fruitful like nothing else in life. Every great and good thing comes forth out of suffering. "I sometimes think that never blows the rose so red as where some buried Caesar bled." This may be the fancy of some pagan poet, but this pagan is abreast of the best Christian thought. The cross of Lent means the dying of what we gladly would see die, and the living and flowering of the spiritual in us. The cross is emblematic of the things that shall be. It gives color to our hope that the world is going to be immeasurably better than it now is, that this old sad world shall one day see "the light that never was on land or sea." There is only one golden age—the one that is yet to come. The strongest, finest men, the men most nearly like the poised perfection of Jesus, the purest, most gracious women that the world can know, will possess the future.

And this is the sacred task committed to us by heaven, that when we "wrap the draperies of our couch about us and lie down to pleasant dreams," to sleep the last sleep of death, we shall have done something to make easier of accomplishment, to make more real this hope of a better, brighter world. And what is there that we can do? We can pray. Prayer is a dynamic, a power. We can go to Church. It is helpful, restful and a fine investment of our time. Others see us and find it easier to be strong and to believe. We can help create an atmosphere. Nothing is more helpful during Lent than this. In Nazareth Jesus found Himself powerless to do any works because of their unbelief. Every member who can come and can pray is in part responsible for the spiritual atmosphere in the Church. Jesus often spent the whole night out in the rocky wilds of a mountain-side, under the silent stars, because He felt nearer to God when away from the habitations of man, lost in the noiseless shadows of an Oriental night. He sought the right atmosphere for prayer. There is a time for everything—a time for laughter, a time for love, a time for tears, and there is a time to look with steady gaze into the heart, to realize its needs, and then to look to Him who supplies all our needs. Shall we not all help to make this Lenten season one of real reconsecration for the whole congregation?

CONGREGATIONAL NEWS

REV. E. C. GILLETTE, Editor; REV. F. P. ENSMINGER, and REV. M. J. SWEET, Associates.

COLUMBUS CALLS PASTOR: Loyal waiting four months for the recovery of their beloved friend and pastor, Dr. McQuarrie, the United Congregational and Christian Church of Columbus gave a unanimous call to Rev. C. C. Hamilton to assume the pastorate of this Church. He will begin service April 1st.

UNITED, THORSBY, ALA.: The beautiful Church building near the attractive plant of the Thorsby Institute continues to minister not only to the village and surrounding community, but under the able leadership of Rev. Joseph E. Each, is the meeting-place of the student group in a strong inspirational way. In this way the Church stands for a three-fold ministry of worship, instruction and service, and reaches out into a large number of neighboring communities.

UNION, DEMOREST, GA.: Rev. Henry B. Mowbray, who ministers not only to the people of the community, but also takes a large interest in the college group, is leading an effective work, has received a number of new people into the Church, and throughout the entire North Georgia Association is rendering a helpful service. As moderator of the State Conference, Mr. Mowbray is visiting the various Churches, hoping to cover the entire State during the year of his office.

GOD'S ACRE: No, not a cemetery, but the liveliest thing you ever saw. It is an acre of the best soil in Georgia, devoted to the Lord's work. At the Union Hill Congregational Church, Pearson, four fine farmers are this spring planting one acre of land each, the proceeds of which shall be given into the Church treasury for missions or whatsoever the trustees may think best. Not to be outdone by men, the Christain Endeavor Society of this Church has accepted the challenge, and they are planting an acre themselves to be devoted in the same way to the life of the Church.

"WASHINGTON WINDOW" MOVES: As a matter of fact, movement is constantly characteristic of "Our Washington Window." But in this instance we have actually changed our location and are now to be found at 933 Woodward Building, at Fifteenth and H Streets, Northwest. Then, too, we can now see the dome of the Capitol Building, and our rooms adjoin those of the Federal Council and Federation of Churches. A welcome always awaits the large and growing constituency of the Southeast Convention of Congregational and Christian Churches. A group conference, a chat, a nook, a book, the Congregationalist and Herald of Gospel Liberty, THE CHRISTIAN SUN, and many other informing and inspirational contacts here find expression. (We are pleased to present in this issue another of the interesting articles prepared by Dr. W. Knighton Bloom under the title "Our Washington Window."—EDITOR.)

COUNTRY LIFE ACADEMY closed its year of service April 1st. The faculty declare it has been the best year they have seen in this interesting institution. The president, Dr. E. F. Green, has had a successful year financing the work, and the assistant treasurer, Mr. Jefferson Canoy, reported a balance in the treasury. The trustees were pleased with the showing and are planning an enlarged and vigorous program. In connection with their meeting Saturday, March 21st, Dr. W. R. Kedzie, who had been on the field two days, gave his reaction, which was exceedingly thought-provoking and searching. After thorough discussion of the problems and opportunities of this school as it reaches out into the districts where under-privileged young people are calling for such work as being done in this academy, the trustees unanimously voted to appoint a strong committee which would work out a stronger program than had ever been attempted here and have power to elect the faculty and to enlist men of high standing into the work of the board of trustees. The following were elected on this committee: Dr. W. Knighton Bloom, president; Prof. E. W. Boshart, Rev. W. T. Scott, and Dr. Shamburger, M. D. They are yet to select another who is to be a lady of the Christian Church. This committee, together with any of the other trustees who may choose to come, will meet at Greensboro the afternoon following the closing of the Congregational Conference of the Carolinas, Thursday, May 7th, at 2 P. M.

OUR WASHINGTON WINDOW.

By DR. W. KNIGHTON BLOOM.

An old seaman on the "Adriatic," en route for Great Britain, was discussing some vital issues with a group of passengers bound for the International Congregational Council. He was really conducting a forum, but he did not know it. The discussion centered at one point on relative life values, and the old man of the sea spoke words of wisdom and understanding. Said he: "What really hurts a person is to give him too much. It is like a diamond on a lady's hand. If it counts for more than the woman, it does not amount to much. So if gold means more than the man, it has little, if any, value."

This message is one of relative values. It is based on things the writer has seen, heard or read, as he has sought to do his part in the great and growing program of service with and for others. For we are all delving into that something that makes us want to go deeper into this work of ours; that gives us increasingly the feeling that we have only been scratching the surface of life; that leads us to understand what David Livingstone meant when he said "The end of the exploration is the beginning of the enterprise."

If one had "eyes to see," it is remarkable what is in evidence. On the "Wayside Pulpit" announcement outside of Calvary Church, New York City, where Rev. Samuel Shoemaker, Jr., is leading in a great religious movement, this message recently faced the passers-by. "Mr. Shoemaker once asked a Princeton graduate, 'How many people avoid the issues of Christ, not from doubt, but from want of courage?' The man said, 'About 80 per cent, and I am one of them.'"

Over at the Swanick Conference, in England, last summer, my attention was drawn to a notice-board, and as a result I listened in while missionary educators, who for many years have been ministers of the evangel of the Master to those in spiritual need in India, China, Japan and Africa, told their stories of digging down into the lives of folks and lifting up the souls of folks. One of the group gave expression to the experience of all when he said, "You cannot raise a community a quarter of an inch without the living Christ."

In a beautiful Welsh city by the sea, some road-making was in progress. As I watched the workers, those men poured the hot, tarry, sandy substance on the ground and then knelt down on thick pads and, with molding, straightening iron tool, created bit by bit a new highway. They spoke but few words as they worked, but with mind and body united, eye and hand in co-operation they went straight ahead and made a new road.

In northeastern England a stone-breaker faced his share of the privileged task of the laborer. It was a hard job, and a passer-by spoke words of well-meant sympathy, to which the man of the hammer responded, "Yes, sir, the hammer is heavy, but it breaks up the hard rocks, and the road is made stronger and safer for the traveler." And the passer-by went to his pulpit in a great city Church and found he could preach understandingly from the words, "What is That in Thine Hand?"

I turned over the pages of my "Intercollegian" and then noted some significant contrasts in contacts dealing with teaching and preaching. Very gratefully should we record our conviction that teachers are living more and more fully in the lives of their pupils, and ministers are not, for the most part, preaching to or at their congregations, but talking face to face with their people. And so the message that especially interested me on one page of the "Intercollegian" was one which stated that the theme of one summer conference of the "Friends" was "Quakerism as a dynamic religion in the present age." How thrillingly true are the words, "In quietness and in confidence shall be your strength."

Before me is a pamphlet containing 101 excerpts compiled from the reports of that inner circle of kindred souls who radiate good cheer in hot summer days, known all over the country as "S. S. S." Here are a few of their messages:

"Commenced the Church vacation school with an enrollment of 100 pupils. I carried on the school five hours per day to be able to give more attention to the handwork, spending two hours a day on it, and still the children wanted more."

"A successful Church vacation school has just been closed. This was 'Mission Week,' and Sunday night, after a presentation of 'Living Pictures,' which every one enjoyed, a collection was taken toward helping on our mission gift. Our model Sunday School was very well attended and quite a success. I have also had the very interesting experience of speaking at the convict camp."

"To me, the most interesting event of the week was the first day of vacation Bible school. I stood at the end of a long table surrounded by seventeen youngsters from two and one-half years to six years of age, and each was so eager to catch every sound and move I made. This first day of school to them was also the very first day of Church vacation school for me, too; this fact made the day doubly interesting."

"Two of the girls got off from work in the mill and went to the young people's conference with me. Such conferences are always an inspiration, especially the vesper and candle-light services. After attending Florida conferences, I was very glad to be at one with the young folks of Georgia and Alabama."

"The most unusual thing this week happened in the home in which I was staying. As only the family and one or two others came to Church for vacation Bible school that morning, we sang a hymn, had prayer, and adjourned. I was sitting on the porch studying when one of the little boys said, 'Let's have Sunday School here now.' I said, 'All right; do you want me to tell you a story?' Two or three gathered around and I told stories. Then I said, 'Of course, you have heard the story of the Baby Jesus.' They said, 'No; tell it to us.' I found myself trying to tell the whole story of His life in five minutes or so. I cannot believe that they had never heard those stories. Still, there has been no Sunday School here for about four years and the boys were eight to ten years old. There is preaching here once a month."

"Every day the beginners are served a light

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

GREATEST EVENT OF TIME.

The world does not stop and make merry at Easter-time as it does at Christmas. This, however, does not detract from the wonder and the worth of Easter. It celebrates the most important event that ever transpired in the annals of man. Unless our Lord had arisen from the dead, all that He had said and done would have been in vain and, in all probability, would have long since been forgotten. In life He had said, "I am the resurrection." Again He had said, "Destroy this temple and in three days I will build it again." Again, "Whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die." So much of His teaching looked toward, and could only be verified by, the resurrection, that unless this event had occurred the world would have put Him down as one of its false teachers. But Easter means more than this.

Up till the time of the resurrection, the world had solemnized and celebrated the creative act. Now, there is something more imposing than creation. That something is salvation. It may matter very little as to whether you and I were born, created, or not. The world would have gone along without us. We had nothing to do with, and could take no part in, our creation. Having been created, however, the one important thing for you and me is that we be saved—saved from ourselves, saved from our weaknesses, saved from our faults and frailties and sin; saved, that we may show the world the best that is in us, and do the best that we can for the world. Now, in His resurrection, our Lord forever sealed and certified the redemptive act, His sufficient and saving power. Neither death, nor the grave, nor evil of any kind, even at its worst, could have dominion over Him. He conquered them all, and in His resurrection proved to the world that He is what He had declared Himself to be—an all-sufficient Saviour, Redeemer, Lord and King. The resurrection completed the redemptive act, and revealed beyond question His sufficiency and His saving power. We repeat, the greatest single event of all time is the resurrection of our Lord, because, through that act, both His birth, His life, His works and also His death are verified, fulfilled, completed, so that none can doubt Him and His power to all He said He would do.

Out of the voice of a deep, dark past, ancient Job, from the anxiety of his soul, had cried, "If a man die, shall he live again?" On the resurrection morning, our Lord answered that ancient cry in terms and tones that cannot be mistaken nor denied: "I am the resurrection and the life. Whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die."

"Lord of this Eastertide,

Over the whole world wide

Come with Thy glad 'All hail!' to every heart,

Bidding sin's discord cease,

Waking harmonious peace,

Till in Love's anthem we may take our part."

J. O. A.

THE LIVING CHRIST.

Those who went to the tomb of our Lord very early on the first Easter morning made the same mistake that many of us are making to this day. They were seeking for the living among the dead. The angel rebuked them, and said: "He is not here; He is arisen. Why seek ye the living among the dead?" We need not go back to Joseph's tomb, nor the first century, to find Christ. He is alive, as no other person is who ever came to earth. He composed no songs, and yet millions of Churches, with choirs, anthems, sweet musical instruments, will resound at this Easter-time with hallelujah choruses and praises to His name. He wrote no books, and yet from millions of volumes, selections and pages will be read at this Easter-time to comfort the heart and cheer the soul. He penned no poetry, and yet more poetry has been inspired by Him than by any other or all other men or angels known to man. He had no wealth, not even where to lay His head, and yet millions of treasure have been spent in His name, that men and women might have houses dedicated to His service and consecrated to His cause. He had no flower garden to gladden His heart, or with which to cheer His friends, and yet at this Easter-time more flowers will be gathered and sent by friend to friend—Easter lilies, carnations, hyacinths, tulips, sweet and fragrant breaths and tokens of spring and of love—will be sent than at any other single season or because of any other single event in the annals of time.

The heart of the Christian world is glad at Easter-time because it dares to take fresh courage and to hope again. The veil has been lifted, the gloom has been penetrated, death has been vanquished, the grave has been robbed of its terror. Our Christ did this for us; is doing this for us now. No dead person, no cold, slumbering form could give such breath and life and hope and love to the world. Many of our hopes have been blasted. Many of our cherished dreams have died. Many of our best plans and highest aspirations have perished. They, like the leaves that wither with the winter, are of the past and are dead now. But as the dead leaves have fallen to enrich the soil from which other and more tender leaves and blossoms shall grow, so likewise out of our dead past, and decaying plans, shall come other hopes and plans, revived and living again, because once for all our truest and best Friend, the Son of God, our one eternal hope, has arisen from the grave and lives forever more.

Surely the gladdest event and season of all the year is Easter Day, when, through triumph and victory over all foes, we are bidden to put tears and sorrow away and live again in newness of life, new hopes, new courage, new strength, new aspirations for the tasks that yet abide us.

J. O. A.

EASTER.

There are three distinct periods in the history of Jesus Christ in His incarnation. His birth, into which entered divine and human elements. He was "conceived of the Holy Ghost," and "born of the virgin Mary." His crucifixion, which was the work of man only. They nailed His body to the cross and He died by the will of man. The third period was His resurrection from the tomb, and that was a divine act and independent of man. Easter celebrates this third event in the history of Jesus in this world. It is, therefore, the most spiritual celebration in history of His Church, and it is most widely recognized by those who follow Him. His birth and His crucifixion would mean little to mankind without His resurrection. His resurrection not only reveals His power over the grave, but inspires our faith that He will raise all who die in Him from the grave unto eternal life. As He arose, He will raise us, and we shall enter with Him into eternal life and enter into heaven as our eternal home.

The festival of the resurrection of Jesus Christ probably derives its name from Eastre, a Saxon goddess, whose festival was kept in the spring. On Easter Day the people saluted each other with the Easter kiss, and the exclamation "Surrexit"—He is risen; and the reply was "Vere surrexit"—He is risen indeed; and that custom still prevails in the Greek Church. But at the present time, Easter falls on the first Sunday after the full moon that happens upon or next after March 21st. The history of Easter and the Church divisions and discussions that arose between the Eastern and Western Churches may be interesting study, but the main thing is the celebration of the great fact of the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the tomb. The controversy was ended in England by the adoption of the Roman usage at the Council of Whitley, in 664, and that has been the time observed by Protestantism for 1267 years.

There is no sweeter Church service than a Christian service on Easter Day that brings together the entire congregation of grown people and children, with music and flowers, and a whole-hearted hour of worship. It is heaven upon earth, angels in human form, songs that well up from the soul, memories of victory, and hopes of eternal life in the heavenly home. It is the divinest occasion, the most spiritual lesson, the most lasting impression, and the one historic event that touches not only the Church but the world. Easter! Everybody gets ready for it, pauses to observe it, and feels the inspiration of it. Show-windows brighten up for it, business uses it, Churches observe it, Sunday Schools feel it, homes recognize it, and presents honor it. Cemeteries wait for the hope it inspires, the gospel proclaims it, Church bells chime it, mothers and widows brighter in their hopes in it, and the world is better because Easter is observed by the celebration of the Resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead and the hope of resurrection through Jesus Christ, who said: "I am the resurrection and the life; he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live" (John 11:25). W. W. S.

OUR EASTER OFFERING.

We shall enjoy the Easter services more if we prepare for it by supplying an offering, even from our need and our want. Our Southern Convention has wisely arranged that the period of Easter shall be consecrated and dedicated to the service of missions. That is most fitting. Through missions, we are trying to win this world to our Christ, and through our offerings we are simply seeking to show our love and consecration to Him who at this season came forth from the grave triumphant and victorious.

If we would really show our love for Him, let us come at Easter with a liberal offering that His name may be glorified, that His love may be made known, and that His life may be declared to those far and near who need Him. "For where your treasure is, there will your heart be also."

He requires something more than lip service. He requires something more than even a song or a poem or a reading, or a few moments of worship and adoration. He wants us, our heart's devotion, our love, the symbol and the seal of our friendship. This we can give by an offering of our substance in His name and for His sake.

Our money costs us something. It means and is the price of service, self-denial and sacrifice. It means and signifies that we are thinking of Him and of His needs in preference to ourselves and our needs. It signifies that we are devoted, in a measure at least, to the cause for which He gave His life on the cross, and on account of which He arose from the dead.

Every member of every Christian Church and Sunday School is called upon at Easter-time, or at the service nearest thereto in the Church, to make an offering in His name, to make a contribution for the cause of missions. He has not failed us. Let us not fail Him in this time of His need, and of His want and of His lack, as well as the time of our need, our want, and our lack. If we would share His fellowship and commune in heart and soul with Him, we shall have to share the burden and bear the cross and, through sacrifice, consecrate our substance and ourselves to Him.

ON TO SEATTLE!

The National Council of the Congregational Churches and the General Convention of the Christian Churches will both convene in Seattle, Wash., June 25th to July 3, 1931. The two bodies will also meet jointly.

This is a long jump for us of the Christian Church, but the meeting is of such importance that it is earnestly hoped that we may have a full delegation. Aside from the significance of the meeting, the fine fellowship and the great spiritual privileges that those attending will have, the trip will furnish an occasion for travel and sight-seeing that no national gathering of our people has ever offered.

The Southern Convention is entitled to the same representation in the General Convention at Seattle as it has always had. Our delegates were elected by the Convention at Raleigh, N. C., last May. Representation in the United Church will be on a different basis.

For us in the South it looks like an expensive trip, and it is more so than we are accustomed to on similar occasions. The railroads, however, are very generous in their offers. They will give to all delegates and visitors the lowest rates possible. I am here inserting the schedule and prices as submitted by the N. & W. Railway. The Norfolk and Western Railway comes pretty nearly reaching all of our people in Virginia and Carolina.

The cost of the trip from Norfolk and return, you will observe, is $134.50. Pullman, one way, lower, $32.63; upper, $26.10—which will make the combined travel expense for each each person $199.76, or $186.70 if you have upper berth. Additional expenses will be meals on train and lunch and dinner at the Convention. The Convention Church will furnish lodging and breakfast to all delegates. It is estimated that the actual cost to a delegate attending the Convention will be from $236 to $250.

I am venturing to make this suggestion to the Churches of our Convention, as this is such an important session, that they help in bearing the travel expense of the delegates. They go to represent the whole Church, and the service that they render will be for the whole Church. Should they be expected to bear the entire expense?

Now, local Church, if your pastor or one of your members happens to be a delegate, won't you arrange in some way to help with expenses? If your treasury will not stand the contribution, can't a number of your members come together and pay at least one-half of the travel expenses? If the Churches will take this step, it will mean a great deal to the Seattle Convention.

It is hoped that all delegates going from the South at least will arrange to go together. If we can get as many as fourteen we can have a private car all the way through.

Train leaving Norfolk at noon on June 21st will arrive at Seattle Thursday, 8:50 P. M., the day the Convention opens. If you have not written me of your intention to go, as soon as you decide will you please do so?

Fifty Thousand Dollars for Missions!

A CALL TO SELF-DENIAL

Through self-denial, the Kingdom of Heaven is built on earth. The cattle upon a thousand hills are His; likewise, the gold and the silver, and the world's wealth. Yet, in financing His Kingdom on earth, Jesus, the Son of God, saw fit to adopt and use the method of self-denial. He gave the great example and denied Himself of even a place on which to lay His head. He gave all for our sake. He calls upon us to give something for His sake, not out of our abundance, but out of our need.

The greatest task conceived by the mind of man, or the wisdom of God, is that of giving the whole Gospel to the whole world, and this task has been, and is being, borne and achieved solely through self-denial.

It is a spiritual challenge, and must be accepted, if at all, through self-denial. If CHRISTIAN SUN readers shall reap the benefits and enjoy the blessings of spiritual enrichment, they will do so by following their Lord in denying themselves of some real value in His name and for His sake.

To this end, the Mission Board, in trying to carry forward the work assigned to it by the Church for which $50,000 is called for this year, is inviting all SUN readers and Church members to deny themselves of some valuable thing, or indulgence, and give the price of it to Missions. Only through self-denial will our own lives be enriched and will our goal for our Lord be achieved. Jesus proved Himself our Friend by the supreme sacrifice. Now He wants us, and needs us, to be His friends, and we can only prove that friendship by making a sacrifice for His sake. This we can do through self-denial.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

An idea is thought worked out in the mind as knowledge. The architect conceives a plan for a building, works it out in his mind, and sees it complete; that is an idea. The architect then works that idea out into reality, a real building. An ideal is a picture in the imagination, and may or may not be worked out into a real result. Ideas are workable; ideals may or may not become realities. Educational institutions, outside of technical schools, in this day, dwell largely on ideals. There is placed before the students positions, remunerations, and these often beyond the capacity of the students to attain. Ideas stay within the capacity of students; ideals often rise above their ability to achieve. That is one reason why so many educated people do not succeed.

The function of schools is to develop the talent possessed by the student. This can be accomplished best by general education. The harder the subjects taught, the better qualified the student will be to decide for himself what course in life he should take and what particular vocation he should follow. Too many people undertake to do what others suggest instead of making a special study of their own tastes, gifts, and convictions. There is a place for every person in the world; and in that place he can succeed. The easiest road does not always lead to the place one wants to go. A dirt road may lead to the place one ought to go, rather than the finest concrete road. For some people, the plow may lead to better results than the desk; and the broom for others better than the violin.

The easiest and best occupation for any person is the one to which he is best adapted. A blacksmith might not succeed on a piano. An orator might not succeed in business; a mathematician as an editor. But one thing is plain, and that is that all lines of work are essential and, when thoroughly understood, as equally honorable. The track man is as important as the engineer, and the engineer as the superintendent. The bass cannot look down upon the alto, nor the soprano upon the tenor. Each in its place is a part of the music, and all must work in harmony. It is even so in the world of business, education, and social life.

There is nothing more to be avoided than classifications that lower people because of their work. The street cleaner is as useful as the policeman, and the janitor as the clerk, and the Church member as the preacher. The best worker is the one who is best in the work he is doing. The bricklayer is as important as the painter, and the plasterer as the paperhanger. Wealth should make no distinctions, profession should make no distinctions, descent should make no distinctions; character is the only thing that should make distinctions in human society. That is the only thing that will separate men at the judgment. "These shall go away into everlasting punishment; but the righteous into life eternal" (Matt. 25:46; read verses 31 to 46).

ELON LETTER.

Recently, in addressing his youth audience of America over the radio, Rev. Daniel A. Poling, D. D., said that of the thousands of questions that come to him in a year from the youth of America, the majority of them related to vocational choices. "The uppermost question in the mind of American youth today," declared Dr. Po-ling, is "how should I invest my life that it will count for the most?" Dr. Poling regards this statement as a sufficient answer to the traducers of youth who consider that the young people of today do not have a serious purpose, and that they are lacking in the fundamentals of character.

The question of vocation will always be an important one. We have but one life to live, and it is proper that we should approach the investment of this life in a spirit of service and devotion to the interests of mankind. Nor must we neglect the interests of the kingdom of God as it relates to our life.

Broadly speaking, there are two types of persons in the world from the standpoint of vocation—those who are interested in things, and those who are interested in ideas. It is possible that any calling or vocation or profession may be viewed from these two standpoints so that this distinction does not necessarily mean that the one interested in things should enter upon a calling that involves mechanics. A lawyer, for example, may be interested in the mechanics of law, by which is meant the prosecution of criminals or the defense of law-breakers, in accordance with laws already enacted. Or a lawyer may look upon his profession as involving the great fundamental ideas of the social relationships of man. This latter type of lawyer will be a man of ideas, and his aspiration will be to improve the legal system under which we live.

It is of primary importance, however, that in deciding on our life-work we should be sure to classify ourselves properly with reference to our fundamental interests, whether they be in the realm of things or whether they be in the realm of ideas and ideals, because the preparation we will need to make for our vocation will be essentially modified in terms of our primary interest.

Another consideration which we will need to keep steadily in mind in the choice of life-work is as to whether we are interested in initiating projects or in fulfilling and realizing the projects that have been initiated by others. There is need in the world for each type of mind. Not every person can be a creator, and those who are endowed with the creative ability cannot possibly do teamwork according to blueprints and specifications supplied by others. We need to exercise great care in assessing our ability and aptitude according to this important category.

A special word of caution needs to be spoken to college students at this time because we are restless in these days of tremendous energy to begin our life-work at once. We must consider whether we are interested in quick returns in our vocation or whether we are willing to take a long look and to be patient, confident that ultimately satisfactory results will accrue from our efforts.

At this point I may say a word in respect to technical schools and liberal arts colleges. These two types of education have always collided with each other more or less, and the conflict between them is keen at this particular time. If, when we have finished high school, we know without doubt what we expect to do in life, perhaps it would be best for us to select a technical institution. In this case, we have what has been described, with no intention to disparage, as a "single-track mind." Such a mind finds an uncongenial intellectual climate in the liberal arts colleges. But if, when we enter college, we are open-minded with reference to our future, we will find that the educational outlook which it fosters will be the very tonic which we need in order to qualify ourselves for effectual service in any vocation which we may later decide to choose and prepare ourselves to enter. The graduate of a liberal arts college should be able to select any one of a dozen or more vocations and to build upon the foundation of his liberal education a super-structure of professional training which will fit him for a large success.

In conclusion, I would like to speak a word for religious motivation and purpose as it relates to vocational choices. Is our religion concerned for ourselves or others? We can prostitute any calling to selfish ends, and when I say "prostitute" that is exactly what I mean. I have known ministers of the gospel to prostitute their sacred calling to selfish ends. Whatever we do, we should do it to the glory of God and for the happiness of our brother-men. Our aspiration should be to make the world in which we live a more wholesome environment for the development of Christian character.

PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE LETTER.

IDEALISM VERSUS MATERIALISM.

We have been given a partial and incomplete view of nature in this age of science. This view has been carried over into the field of education, sociology, philosophy and religion. The result is a materialistic age. The field of religious education has been invaded; our task today is to keep religious education religious. A naturalistic humanism is sweeping, almost unimpeded, through education and religious circles and the concept of a personal God is on the defensive.

The issues today are the age-old issues of idealism versus materialism, and these are clearly defined: psychology—self-psychology or purposive psychology versus behaviorism; philosophy—personalistic idealism versus positivism, pragmatism, realism, maternalism, humanism, naturalism and instrumentalism; logic—synoptic logic versus analytic logic. On the ideal side we have such men as James Ward, W. R. Sorley, Hocking, McDougal, Calkins, Brightman, Knudson, Withers, Horne, Yocum, Leighton, MacIntosh, and Bagley. On the side of materialism are the disciples of William James, John Dewey and John Watson. This group dominates the academic centers of America today. It has revived anew the emphasis of Voltaire, Rousseau, Herbert, Robert Owen, and Hume. Among its present-day popularizers are Dr. Kilpatrick, Dr. Edward Scribner Ames, Dr. Durant, Drake and Vasser.

Through idealism, a moral and religious education can be built on self-psychology, personalistic idealism and synoptic logic, which will save the basic Christian concepts of a personal God, immortality, prayer, divinity of Christ, and lead to a theism for the Church and democracy for the State. But a moral and religious education built on behavioristic psychology, will eventually end in atheism, or at best agnosticism for the Church and anarchy for the State.

In philosophic circles there is a movement for a recall to idealism. The Protestant Churches owe it to themselves and to the moral life of the democratic state once more to become the flaming champions of a personal God, who is both imminent in nature and transcendent over nature; to give all persons whom it touches a religious view of the world; a person as the goal of moral aspirations; to support whole-heartedly the system of public schools in the interest of general intelligence and social solidarity of the democratic State, and to build and support a system of supplementary religious schools and colleges in which it undergirds the moral life of its students with a Christian view of the universe and a concept of personal perfection as exemplified by the life and teachings of Jesus Christ.

SHOULD CHURCH COLLEGES BE ENDOWED, AND WHY?

By A. P. F.

(An experienced insurance man proposes this unique plan for endowing our colleges. Will it work?—Editor.)

I have been trying to think thoughtfully for several years on this perennial question of the endowment of our Church colleges. Often, in my study of this project, I have been baffled in trying to reason out a plan upon which all thoughtful men and women could take their stand.

In order that this country may in future meet and successfully grapple with the complex conditions arising from moral and social changes presented for adjustment (or I should have said thrust upon us), it becomes absolutely necessary that the girls and boys of the present and the future be well educated in the arts and the sciences of the higher curriculum, but above all, and in addition, trained to observe and to hold up before the world the finest moral and social gifts possessed by good women and good men. It is into the hands of these young women and young men of today that we older people must soon place the burden and responsibility of statecraft—all political, moral and social problems; and they must be prepared to accept the trust reposed in them.

It is my candid judgment that it is the denominational colleges that must take the lead and accept the challenge to bestow that silent leavening power that will preserve the moral and social life of the young women and young men of America; and when this is done, the political life of the nation will solve itself.

Now, it takes big money to accomplish large undertakings. It takes talent well applied, and a long time, with enduring perseverance. A firm or a corporation just beginning business would not for a moment discuss with you its possibilities for next year, or the next, but mention, if you please, what its hopes and possibilities twenty-five or thirty years from now may be, and you will see that you have stirred up a very interesting conversation. Such is the case with all great enterprises; they cannot be built up in a day, or a year, or a decade—it takes time, talent and perseverance.

It is a lamentable truth that our Churches and Church schools have long been taught (and so accepted) to live and endure on a hand-to-mouth procedure. This is wrong. In my somewhat long experience, I have seen worthy schools and colleges fight out their almost super-human battles for existence year after year for many years, with big red question marks (???) staring at them at every mile-post along their journey. Is this right? Is it right to lay a withering hand on the future possibilities of our colleges, into whose care the well-being of youth is entrusted? Is not the youth of today the flowers which ripen into manhood and womanhood for tomorrow? Then, why not prepare them for this future trust? Then what is the remedy?

The remedy, as I see it, is that our Church colleges should be well endowed, so that the income from this endowment, well invested, would produce a liberal income for use and benefit of every needy boy or girl who aspires to a higher education. I think I hear the voices of ten thousand boys and girls say, "What is your plan?"

The plan is simply this. In this Conference there are 1,000 good and true men and women whom God has blessed with abundance, who have $500 they could spare cash down or in their will at death. This would supply $500,000. There are also 100 good and true men and women who could spare $10,000 cash down or in their will at death. These two items would supply a total of $1,500,000 cash. But I would advise that this money be not used at its face value as endowment, but allow it to buy life insurance made payable to the trustees of the college as beneficiary. The above donations or bequests would buy $4,500,000 life insurance on 150 lives at thirty years of age, each policy for $10,000.

Now, death is as much a part of God's plan as life is. Some of these policies will soon begin to fall due under that inevitable law of mortality—some soon and some later. As these fall due, the college would invest the proceeds in 100-year government bonds at $4\frac{1}{2}$ per cent interest. Thus you see you have your first nucleus to build from. Then, under that inexorable table of mortality, "like the mills of the gods, grind slow but sure," within thirty-five years every one of these 150 policies are due to become a claim under the American experience tables. Total of all claims, \$4,500,000. This amount invested in 100-year government bonds at $4\frac{1}{2}$ per cent will net the college \$202,500 annually forever.

In writing up these policies from these cash donations or bequests, it should be plainly stipulated in the policy that the proceeds from the insurance claims must be invested in government bonds or other like securities. As an example, we will suppose a $10,000 donation or bequest is in hand. Then the trustees of the college would select three applicants for life insurance, say age 30, for $10,000 each, have them stand the usual insurance examination and policies issued for $10,000 each—total $30,000 insurance—the college treasurer paying the insurance company the premium on these policies annually. These three policies can be carried up to twenty years for approximately $9,400. But the law of average will not allow these 150 policies to stand for even twenty years. By that time, at least fifty of these policies will have become claims, and a revolving insurance fund is in full motion, while the endowment fund is increasing from year to year as the claims on policies fall due. By this means, the donor, or benefactor, sets up a fund for a little over $3.00 for each $1.00 donated as his or her part of this endowment fund. Had you ever thought of this before?

A firm or a corporation entering business would not for one day go without adequate insurance to protect them against all kinds of disaster—fire insurance, life insurance, storm insurance, public liability, property damage. It is with them a purely cold-blooded proposition to guarantee against disaster. Then, why not inaugurate the same cold-blooded business scheme to protect our colleges as we would in any other business enterprise? Or why would we expect our colleges, on whom we lay heavy cares, to go on and finally hope to succeed on a hand-to-mouth program? I wish some one would explain to me why, if the position I take is wrong.

This is not a fly-by-night proposition. To accomplish large undertakings, as I said in the outset, it takes talent well applied and a long time with enduring perseverance. Then, why not begin? I am appealing directly to the heart and soul of a few thousand good men and women whom God has abundantly blessed to come liberally to this rescue. When you have accomplished this, you will have assisted in building a monument that will stand and pierce the sky 1,000 years hence, and the under-privileged girls and boys, now and in the future, will hold you close to their hearts in their memory. And your name will stand written at the top of the list like Abou Ben Adam, "because he loved his fellow-man."

The writer is an insurance man of thirty years' experience, and should know pretty well of the things stated, but has no personal motive, as an underwriter, in laying this matter before you.

A PRAYER.

Forever, O Lord, Thy word is sure. We know it will not return unto Thee void. Depending upon Thy word, the nations shall not fail, but find therein the way of peace and security. Give to Thy servants understanding. Teach us good judgment and knowledge. It is time, O God, for the organized Church to let Thy Spirit rule. Dear Father, keep Thine own true, sensitive to discern evil, diligent to fortify Thy Church against the insidious tendency to absorb and assimilate the ways of the world. Cleanse Thy temple and make it a place where communion shall be real and fellowship unrestrained. In Jesus' name and for His sake. Amen.

THROUGH SELF-DENIAL THE KINGDOM COMETH.

(James 2:5.)

When our Lord said, "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself" (Mark 8:34), He did not pronounce a penalty; He promised a blessing. The real joy in this life is not in getting, but in giving. This is why He founded His kingdom on self-denial. He wanted His followers to be blessed while they built. All earthly kings, and rulers, build by self-getting, and their kingdoms perish. Our Lord is building His kingdom, and He Himself set the example for us, through self-denial. He inspired His followers to undertake the greatest task the mind of man or the wisdom of God ever conceived—that of giving the gospel to every creature. To this one task He gave Himself while here on earth; for it alone He laid down His life; through His resurrection, took it up again; then (in the possession of all power) commanded His followers to "go . . . preach."

No mission board, however ancient or modern, wise or otherwise, instituted missions. Our Lord did that, and He alone is responsible for missions. He is seeking, through those who love and obey Him, to reveal Himself in saving power to all the world. That is why He came to this earth.

Now He proposes to carry on this work, finance this stupendous business, solely through the self-denial of His followers. It is not the abundance we give, but the sacrifice we make in order to give, that counts most in His sight and means most in His work. This was why He said of the widow who cast in her two mites: "This poor widow hath cast more in than all they which have cast into the treasury: for all they did cast in of their abundance, but she of her want did cast in all that she had, even all her living." Self-denial for our Lord does three things—has permanent value in three directions:

1. It deepens the spiritual life. Every command of our Lord is the demand of our conscience. When we obey the teaching of our Lord, we are only obeying the voice of our conscience. The call of the Christ from without, and the call of the conscience from within are one and the same. When our Saviour commanded that His followers give the gospel to all the world, every good conscience demands that this be done, not because our Lord said it, but because our conscience calls us to it. In this way only do we quicken and deepen the spiritual life within us. God is a Spirit, and they that worship Him must worship Him in spirit and in truth, and we worship God by obeying His Son, following the voice of our conscience. There is something within, as well as the voice of our Lord without, which commands us to the practice of self-denial. We know full well that only through self-denial do we quicken and develop that which is best within us. As we deny ourselves of that which our physical nature would indulge in, do we meet God face to face, and realize that we have sweet fellowship with Him? He saw fit to call us to self-denial, that He might beget in us the holiest and the highest to which we could ever hope to come, and thus fully satisfy the demands of our conscience. We never know the joy and the gladness of the spiritual life until we have attained these through self-denial for our Lord. Poor and shrunken indeed is that soul that is not rich toward God through self-denial!

2. The kingdom of God is built on the self-denial of man. Jesus said His kingdom was not of this world. If it had been, He would have built it on self-getting—worldly riches, prestige, power. Since it was a spiritual kingdom, He sees fit to finance it, not as men finance their business, nor as the kings of the earth have built their kingdoms, but on the wholly different principle of self-denial. When we really deny ourselves for the sake of our Lord, in that act we make a permanent contribution to the kingdom of God. This kingdom will never perish, and is to cover the whole earth, for the sole reason that it is a kingdom founded on sacrifice, and built throughout with deeds of self-denial. Thus an act of self-denial is treasure laid up in heaven, a stone in that building not made with hands, a vital part of that kingdom which God is building on earth. If we are to have a part in building that kingdom, we shall have to do as our Lord did, viz: deny ourselves. Through self-denial only do we make a contribution to that kingdom which our Lord is building on earth. Truly is the kingdom of God built on the self-denial of man.

3. Self-denial for our Lord glorifies Him and saves our fellow-man. The highest tribute our Lord ever paid any one while on earth was that to a woman who denied herself solely for His sake. She was seeking to show her love for Him. She put this love for her Lord above every human love, and every consideration for herself. She brought the alabaster box of very precious ointment and poured it on His head. The disciples were indignant and called it a waste. The Lord called it the highest and the holiest act of human endeavor, because it was an act of love for His sake, and a pure act of self-denial on her account. It was poured out on her Lord. It was an act to glorify His name through denying herself. Immediately our Saviour begins to talk about a world-wide gospel and the imperishable memory of this woman and her deed.

We perform many deeds, even of benevolence or of charity, which are self-denial in part only. We expect some praise, or visible returns, or honor, or approval of man. When we deny ourselves for our Lord, as this woman did in the house at Bethany, we glorify His name and, through Him, make a contribution to others. This is why orphanages, benevolent and charitable institutions spring up in the wake of missions. This we do in denying ourselves to give to missions. It is for the glory of God that missionary work is carried on; not the glory of man. It is for the glory of God, not the praise of man, that, through self-denial, we give to missions. We are trying in this act to share the life and love of our Lord with others. There are thousands of Churches and tens of thousands of men and women in mission fields today dedicated to the service of winning souls to Christ. How came one Church out there, or one missionary? They are there for the glory of God, sent there and supported, through self-denial, by those who are seeking to build up a spiritual kingdom on the earth.

If we are willing, in benevolence and charity, to give our means to help feed a hungry body, or an individual starving for material bread, how much more willing should we be to give, through self-denial, our gift to carry the bread of life, the gospel message, to those whose souls are perishing, to the millions who are starving for the knowledge of Him who said: "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." Self-denial for our Lord is sharing the joy and glory of His love and life with others. Through missions we deny ourselves, that our Lord may be glorified, and that the world, through Him, may be saved.

MISSIONARY RALLIES.

The missionary rallies of the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference will meet as follows:

Norfolk District—Mrs. H. C. Caviness, superintendent; Rosemont Church, Tuesday, April 7th.

Nansemond District—Mrs. B. D. Jones, superintendent; Liberty Springs, Wednesday, April 8.

Franklin District—Mrs. W. D. Harward, superintendent; Windsor, Thursday, April 9th.

Waverly District—Miss Louise Pittman, superintendent; Waverly, Friday, April 10th.

The pastor of each Church and the president of each society are urged to be present, with a large delegation. Each entertaining Church extends a most cordial invitation.

Mrs. Y. C. Byrd, superintendent of the Young People's Society of Liberty Spring Christian Church, is a wide-awake promoter of the missionary cause. These young people are intensely interested and are doing a fine piece of work. They gave a supper recently for the benefit of their society, to which Dr. W. M. Jay, of Holland, was invited to be the speaker of the evening.

News comes from the Liberty Spring Woman's Missionary Society of a most pleasant and successful year thus far under the capable leadership of Mrs. J. Leonard Byrd. Recently they gave a supper for the benefit of their society, and success crowned their efforts. Dr. Roland Wagner, of Norfolk, was the speaker for the occasion, and he delivered a fine address. The attendance was good, the supper was excellent, the address was great, and a nice sum was realized for missions.

MISSIONARY PROGRAM FOR APRIL.

BY MRS. W. M. JAY.

Women's Societies.

Topic: "Why a Society?"

Opening hymn: "O Master, Let Me Walk With Thee."

Scripture reading: Rom. 14:7-12.

Poem: "Will You Open to the Master?"

Will you open to the Master?

He has trod a weary road.

Will you give your best as to an honored guest?

He has helped you with your load.

Will you open to the Master?

Will you give Him welcome sweet?

Will you give Him food of gratitude?

Will you bathe His tired feet?

Will you open to the Master?

Dare to keep your door tight locked?

Ah, think of your rue if it comes that you

Never answered when He knocked!

Will you open to the Master?

He comes in many a guise.

Will you welcome all who on you call,

Lest your Master you despise?

Will you open to the Master?

Thrice blest who none denies,

But who for love of Him above,

Shares His sweet charities.

—John Oxenham.

The playlet to be used here, entitled "Why a Woman's Society in the Local Church?" is found in the February News Bulletin, which can be secured from Mrs. Emma S. Powers, C. P. A. Building, Dayton, Ohio, or from any of your Conference or Convention officers.

Now, let the president, or the one appointed to take charge of the questions, begin at once without interruption. She might say that in the light of what has just been said, the following question will be discussed. She may introduce them by reading the list or one question at a time. She should intersperse the discussion with some thoughts of her own. Try to have each person present express herself on at least a part of the questions.

Questions for discussion:

1. What organization within the Church is best fitted to promote the spirit of friendliness?

2. Why does our society exist, and are the purposes given legitimate ones?

3. By what activities of the past year would you wish your society judged?

4. Is there an intelligent interest throughout our entire group, including the younger women of the Church, or is the missionary interest confined to a few?

5. Is it possible for any organization connected with the Church to be truly Christian and not missionary in the broadest sense of the term?

Closing consecration prayer: "And now, dear Father, as we have glorified a larger service for our woman's society, may we each one dedicate our lives anew. Keep us steadfast in Thy fellowship. Use us as Thou wilt, our hands to do Thy work, our lips to speak Thy truth, our lives to be gospels of Thy mercy; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen."

(Have copies of the above prayer prepared and in the hands of each member, so that all may pray together.)

Program of Chapter VI: "The Unseen Cargo."

I. Business.

II. Study period:

1. Leader's summary of foregoing lessons:

(1) Star of India.

(2) Difficulties of the outcasts.

(3) Village life in India.

(4) The development of Hinduism and its curse upon the people.

(5) Geography of India.

(6) Buddhism and other religions.

(7) Islam in India and the conflict existing between Mohammedans and Hindus.

(Approach today's lesson with the November, 1927, National Geographic Magazine, if possible. The special supplement, "Vasco da Gama at the Court of Zamorin of Calicut," is a copy of a beautiful painting which would repay one for a diligent search, especially in connection with this lesson.)

2. Leader's introductory to the appearance of Christian missionaries in India (pages 82-85).

3. (1) The Spanish Xavier, a member.

(2) The German Schwartz, a member.

(3) The English Carey, a member.

(4) The American Judson, a member.

4. Leader's conclusion: "Who follows in their train?" (pages 94-95). This paragraph is a good preparation for the worship service.

III. Worship service:

Theme: "Who Follows in Their Train?"

1. Hymn prelude: "The Son of God Goes Forth to War" (members sing stanza "Noble army," etc.).

2. Call to worship: "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself and take up his cross and follow me" (Matt. 16:24).

3. Hymn: "Holy Spirit, Faithful Guide."

4. Scripture: Luke 9:57-62.

5. Prayer.

6. Offertory: "Follow the Gleam." (Follow the offertory prayer, sing.)

7. "Follow the Gleam," or "Ye Christian Heralds."

8. Benediction.

Willing Workers' Societies.

Theme: "Serving Jesus."

Call to Worship: And whatsoever ye do, do it heartily, as to the Lord, and not unto men.

Song: "Lift Your Glad Voices."

Scripture: Christ's resurrection (Luke 24:1-12).

Prayer (by leader): Thanking Jesus for the Easter season, and asking His blessing on the boys and girls everywhere.

Offertory.

Recitation (a recitation for seven members, each bearing the letters that spell "Victory"): "Victory Through Jesus."

(V) "Victory through Jesus! That's the note I hear

When the bells of Easter ring out sweet and clear.

(I) In the morning of the Easter Day,
In a quiet garden, very far away,
Jesus rose victorious from the rocky tomb:
Rose to bring believers life's immortal bloom.(C) Christ is risen from the dead;
Blessed words the angels said.
Let our lives the message give,
Praising Him in whom we live.(T) Triumphant faith now smiles and sings, Rejoicing in the King of kings.(O) Over death and evil, over sin and pain
Jesus gained the victory, evermore to reign.(R) Risen Redeemer, we also will use,
And live to Thy glory beyond the blue skies.(Y) Yet a little while, we'll see Him;
Yet a little while we'll meet
In the house of many mansions,
Where our joy will be complete."

Solo: "Christ the Lord is Risen."

Talk (leader): Briefly tell about Easter in other lands.

Song: "Give of the Best to the Master."

Benediction: Now, the God of Peace, who brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus, the Great Shepherd of the sheep, make us perfect in every good work to do His will, through Jesus Christ. Amen.

ADVENTURES IN YOUTH FELLOWSHIP

"Youth at Work in the Church."

JEWEL TRUITT, Editor, Waverly, Virginia.

LET US WORSHIP.

"Alone with Thee amid the mystic shadows,
The solemn hush of nature newly born;
Alone with Thee in breathless adoration,
In the calm dew and freshness of the morn."

Worship is coming in for a good deal of discussion in most Churches. A consideration of what it is, and what it may mean, in the lives of Christian Church young people should not be out of order in these columns. Because young people are at work in the Church all the time at various tasks this article may be something of guidance and inspiration for some who are facing the problem of how to secure worship in their particular Sunday School.

Undoubtedly some will be shocked to know that some of the purposes for which Churches and Sunday Schools have worship programs are that people may: "(1) Be still and know that I am God"; (2) realize the presence of God; (3) express the spirit of devotion, and (4) dedicate their lives to God's will. To be sure the above "aims" for worship sound like it is a serious subject upon which we have stumbled. And it is! We have forgotten the seriousness of the art of worshipping God and have been content for too long a time to drift along. But, wit hall its seriousness, the planning, or building, of a worship program is a fascinating piece of work. A completed program is a beautiful work of art. It is to guide the thoughts of the group for whom it is planned. Hence, the seriousness of the task, the fascination it affords the worker, and the joy of the completed work.

The Sunday School attempts definitely to create the proper attitudes toward God and fellow-man. Through its class period it gives knowledge which should function in conduct. More and more we are coming to see that worship plays a big part in creating right attitudes. Worship, more than anything else, can control and direct our feelings, or attitudes, toward God and toward our fellow-man. If the worship program is to do that, it must be a well-planned program.

Planning worship programs for the school where adults and children all meet in one room is hard to do. But it can be done. Earnest endeavor in this field will well repay the one who undertakes it. Usually the task of planning for this phase of the school work falls upon the superintendent. In some cases, he may select one or more people to plan opening or closing worship programs for the school. In planning for the one-room school, care should be taken to include some parts of the program, aside from singing, in which the children may take active parts. This may be the Scripture lesson, read from a "Child's Story Bible"; it may be a "Thank You" song to the Heavenly Father, a story told by a child, or, with proper guidance, children may be allowed to pray short prayers in the Sunday School. In no case should the leader encourage children to take part in the program in order to show off. They should be taught to take their parts on the program in order to contribute to the value of the program for the group and for themselves.

There must be unity in the service if it is to create feelings or attitudes strong enough to affect the conduct of those who participate in the service. Suppose a particular service should begin with "Onward, Christian Soldiers." The singing of that song will make those who sing it feel like being soldiers. People will stand a bit straighter. They take on the attitude of those who are striving to win. The next song may be "Give Me Thy Heart." This song makes those who sing it feel submissive to the Father, of whom they sing. At first, the group does not feel very submissive. In the previous song they were conquerors marching to war; now they are surrendering. But as the song continues they lose the spirit of the soldier. The spirit of sternness and determination is gone. The final feeling, after singing these two songs, cannot be anything very definite. The singer is all mixed up. If, however, the one who has charge of the program has thought this matter all out beforehand and has planned his worship program, he can make the people have any spirit he wants them to feel from worshipping together. The power is in his hands. He does this by choosing one theme that he wants to get into the minds and feelings of the people who are going to worship together. Then, every song, the Scripture, the story, the poem, the prayers, everything used in the program is on that one theme. As a result, there will be one strong impression left on all the worshipers. That one impression may be strong enough to produce further results in living.

Unity in worship does not limit one; on the other hand, it seems to give one a broader field. The same hymns may be used with a multitude of themes. Numberless themes can be found, and they can be developed in many different ways. That brings us to say that variety in worship programs is one of the most sadly needed of all things. Having the same form of worship program, doing the same thing every Sunday morning, is one of the most deadening things that can ever happen in a Sunday School. Do something different. But be sure, with all your doing, that it's the right thing. Variety may be secured by having one or more people assist the leader. It is very seldom that the leaders of the worship program should do everything on the program. Variety of material is secured through the use of themes which are different every Sunday. With some thought, variety of form may be had. For example, one Sunday the Scripture may be read in concert; on another Sunday, two leaders may read it; on another, Scripture verses may be given voluntarily by the worshipers; on another, it may be read responsively; on another, some one may tell the story given in the lesson, especially if it is a long lesson or is connected with a long story, viz: the story of Ruth or Esther. Music, prayers, and other worship materials may be used in similar fashion.

Music plays an important part in worship. It may be used for preludes, for congregational singing, solos, duets, to accompany prayer, played while a picture is observed, and for quiet meditation. Instrumental music is often used to advantage when it is of the worshipful type.

There is a big difference between "Will There Be Any Stars in My Crown" and "O Master, Let Me Walk With Thee." The worth-while hymns of the Church should be used, and not the cheap songs. Too many of the songs we use deal entirely with the hereafter. Of course, we should use occasionally the ones dealing with the life beyond. "Faith of Our Fathers" challenges to a life of service for the Master much better than "When the Roll is Called up Yonder, I'll Be There." Many of our songs are "self-centered" instead of being "others-centered." "Will There Be Any Stars in My Crown" and "Oh, That Will Be Glory for Me" are self-centered. "Faith of Our Fathers" takes in other people. It expresses brotherhood, and if we are ever to have a real brotherhood of man, we must include it in our worship.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR NOTES.

TOPIC: "How Far Dare We Practice the Brotherhood of Man?"

SCRIPTURE: Matt. 23:8-12.

"So, I say, let me walk with the men in the road;
Let me seek out the burdens that crush;
Let me speak a kind word of good cheer to the weak

Who are falling behind in the rush.
There are wounds to be healed, there are breaks we must mend,

There's a cup of cold water to give;
And the man in the road by the side of his friend
Is the man who has learned how to live."

—Walter J. Gresham.

The problem of world brotherhood began thousands of years ago with the first brothers. Since the time Cain killed Abel, men have been prone to kill their brothers. Even so-called "Christians" kill their brothers. Not all of them do it by shooting, or with knives or with poison—though that is done—but daily men are killing their brothers.

Many men are forced by circumstances to work in factories where those in charge are deadened to the fact that they demand too much of a man's life, in the form of work, for the wage the worker receives. Allowing men to work themselves to death in the effort to support themselves and families at too hard work for too long hours is brother-killing. Paying such wages that a man with a family cannot possibly hope to provide for his family is brother-killing. Not only can the physical life of a man be crushed, the spiritual life of a man can be killed.

If the statement that my grandmother makes to the effect that people are doing the same kind of things they've always done is true, no wonder Jesus could use such strong expressions and make such startling statements about the conditions of His day! He would doubtless do the same today. As Gandhi reminded his fellow-country-men, we, too, owe more to Jesus Christ than to any other person. Let us pay our tribute of love and respect to Him by living His way of life. We can be brothers, even as Christ treated all men as brothers.

How far dare we practice the brotherhood of man? I'll tell you how far. We dare practice it as far as the farthest man, and as close as the nearest man; we dare practice it to the man in the lowest position and the man in the highest; with the man whose burden we share and with the man who shares our own burden. We dare practice brotherhood toward all men. Not only do we dare—we must!

"When to the last reckoning the lives I meet go,
Shall this wee, fleeting touch of mine have added joy or woe?
Shall He who looks their records o'er—of name and time and place,
Say, 'Here a blessed influence came,' or 'Here is evil's trace'?"

"Does love in every handclasp flow in sympathy's caress?
Do those that I have greeted know a new-born hopefulness?
Are tolerance and charity the keynote of my song
As I go plodding onward with earth's eager, anxious throng?"

—Strickland Gillilan.

Sunday School Lesson

LESSON II—APRIL 12, 1931.

THE PRODIGAL SON.

GOLDEN TEXT: "There is joy in the presence of the angels of God over one sinner that repenteth."—Luke 15:10.

LESSON: Luke 15.

The Master had a crowd of publicans and sinners around Him. The scribes and Pharisees, the self-righteous, religious leaders "murmured" because He not only talked with them, but actually ate with them. The Master proceeded to tell them a story, or rather three stories, and every one of them had a point. It is to be doubted whether the stories made any change in the attitude or the conduct of the scribes and Pharisees, but they have exerted an incalculable influence on unnumbered multitudes ever since Jesus told them. And one of them—the story of the prodigal son—contains in essence the major phases of the gospel. It might be added that it contains but five hundred and ten words, most of them monosyllables, and it can be read in three or four minutes. The Master was a Master indeed.

THE LOST SHEEP.

The story of the lost sheep presents in a graphic way the Father's care for the individual, the Father's concern for the individual, the Father's joy in the recovery of the individual. Heaven is interested in even the worst sinner as he turns toward the Father.

THE LOST COIN.

The story of the lost coin emphasizes in another way God's care for the individual, and the joy in the Father's heart and in the heavenly circle whenever one wayward one is found; that is, is restored to his rightful place and function. God has made us for fellowship with Him, and a man who is a sinner is lost in that he is out of place and failing to function as God has planned.

THE LOST BOY.

As has been suggested above, this parable contains, in essence, the fundamentals of theological belief. The list given below is an adaptation of a list given by Dean Brown in his inspiring treatment of this lesson under the head of "The Parable of the Father," which is not an inappropriate title.

Here is the doctrine of the divine Fatherhood. This man had two sons, and the emphasis throughout the story is the parental attitude toward both sons.

Here is also the idea of sonship in the family of God. The prodigal son was still a son. When he returned, the father greeted him as "My son." God's love takes in all.

Here is our dependence upon God, and the unescapable responsibility that springs from it. The son must say, "Give me," to get the very means employed in doing wrong.

Here is sin. It is an act of the will, the refusal to take any higher direction, or to share any diviner form of fellowship, to the end that being freed from all sense of obligation, he may go into a far country. And a far country is not to be measured in terms of miles, but in terms of ideals and conduct. Many a young man or young woman is in a far country, although he or she may be living right at home.

Here is retribution. It is suggested in the famine, the sense of wasted substance, the gnawing of unrelieved hunger, the refusal of one's surroundings to give the wrongdoer what is so sorely needed.

Here is conviction of sin. The young man knew that in the final analysis he was to blame.

"I have sinned," he said. He knew that his condition had been the direct result of the things he had done.

Here is the first intimation of a coming salvation. "He came to himself." Salvation is really coming to our true selves—self-realization, self-recovery—through the grace of God. The self that makes a sinner do the things he does is not the true self.

Here is faith. He remembered that he still had a father, who had enough and to spare. He still believed that if he could get back to the father he could at least get a place as a servant. And his faith moved him to action. It got him to his feet and started him back home to the father. He was saved by his faith.

Here is repentance. It took more than his remorse. It took definite, heroic action—it takes an "about face" morally, a getting out of the country, a getting away from the debasing associations, a getting back to where he belonged. The prodigal son truly repented.

Here is forgiveness. The father ran to meet the boy. He did not give the boy an opportunity to speak. The boy's looks, his need, the very fact that he had come back made the father know that there was a change of heart within, and he freely forgave everything.

Here is the open confession of sin, demanded by the Word because of its actual value and function. The son had no rest until he stood out in the open, laying the blame nowhere save upon his own perverted will.

Here is consecration. "Make me as one of thy hired servants." He is willing to take the humblest place. It is to be noted that when he left home he said, "Give me." When he returned home he said, "Make me." There is a world of difference between those two attitudes.

Here is what may be called the "witness of the Spirit." The father made him know that he had been forgiven, that he had been restored. The robe, the ring, the shoes, the fatted calf—all these were tokens of his acceptance.

THE SULKING SON.

The elder son represented the scribes and Pharisees. Instead of rejoicing over the fact that the wayward son had returned, he sulked because special attention had not been given to him. He had a form of religion, but he lacked the spirit thereof.

A TERRIBLE SIN.

Here is a poor man who lives in a cave or a mud-hut. He is penniless, hungry, cold, naked and disheartened. A certain rich man finds this poor Lazarus and offers him food and clothing and a palatial home, with the promise that he shall never, never want again. But the poor man shakes his head at every proffered mercy and returns to his mud-hut to languish and die. What would the world think of such a man? You already know the answer. But, friendly sinner, "Thou art the man," if your sins are separating you from your Saviour and if you are spurning that sweetest of all invitations: "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." But the above picture is weak compared with the gift and the home in heaven that God offers to those who love and obey Him. Satan can offer nothing but carnal pleasures here, and death and despair over there. It is a terrible sin for any man to shake his head at God's great promise of life eternal and then turn again to the old mud-huts of sin and death.—Vinewood Reminder.

In matters of influence, we measure a man by his position. In trade, we weigh that man by his money. In friendship, if we are wise, we estimate that man by his worth—we measure that man around his heart.—Silent Partner.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE
One of our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy.

"If thou wilt make the Almighty thy treasure . . . then shalt thou delight thyself in the Almighty . . . and thou shalt make thy prayer unto Him and He will hear thee."—Job 22: 25-27.

MONDAY.

LABORING ABUNDANTLY.

"Behold the Lamb of God that taketh away the sins of the world."—John 1:29.

This Scripture could be called the autobiography of Paul. It is his own story of his religious experience, and in it we have the sum and substance of the gospel. It is the reflected glory of Christ which John the Baptist pointed out long before. It is the message of life which is still being reflected for our guidance.

There are many incidents in Christ's life which reflect that message, "Behold the Lamb of God that taketh away the sins of the world," and upon which we may build our soul's full confidence. See Him in His temptations, when fidelity to the Father was of more importance than personal well-being. See Him in homes and on social occasions when to minister to human needs was more important than preaching. See Him cleansing the temple when the sanctity of the place of prayer was more important than conveniences. See him forgiving sins, healing the afflicted, and performing miracles, when faith in God and the sanctity of the human heart were more important than compliance with mere laws. See Him facing death and submitting to it rather than surrender to the demands of iniquity.

The discipline of grace preserved Him in humility, and the comfort of grace kept Him unto the end. "Look and live," saith the Word.

Prayer.—God, give us humble and believing hearts, for Jesus' sake. Amen.

TUESDAY.

ERRANDS.

"And He sendeth two of His disciples."—Mark 14:12-17.

Our Lord seems often to have sent His disciples on errands, especially Peter and John—to Sychar after food, to Bethphage after the colt, to Jerusalem to attend to the upper room, and so on. At the time, they may have thought it a bother, but in after years how they must have gloated over every errand, talked about it, been proud that they had done it, and wished they had done it better! No one is ever sorry that he did an errand for Jesus.

While on earth, our Lord did a host of things in His human body, but now that He has ascended, He must use us as His messengers, and every errand is a bit of training in His school. How sad it must make Jesus Christ when He has an errand for us to do, and we carelessly refuse.

Prayer.—Forgive us, our Saviour, if we will not lend Thee our feet and hands, our tongues, our money, our house and home. Thou gavest us all that we have; how little we have given to Thee! Amen.—Wells.

WEDNESDAY.

WHEN THE WICKED ARE PREFERRED.

"Publicans and harlots go into the kingdom before you."—Matt. 21:28-32.

There is not a single instance when a harlot believed and followed the Master that she did not receive His approval and blessing. Parallel with it are the reverse facts. There have been many who appeared to worship God and spread their hands and call upon Him, using solemn declamations, but who were but "warmers of the altar," "wolves in sheep's clothing."

May this judgment never fall on us. The world would have this condemnation fall on us. It has the habit of finding fault with the conduct of Christians and comforts itself in its sins of hypocrisy, pride and covetousness. This fault can be escaped only in the cultivation of holy earnestness and in being careful to see to it that none of it is true, lest it may be true. If we can make sure that such is not true, then God, who is jealous of all good works, will stop the mouths of those who mock.

They who repent of their sins and therefore walk in the newness of life and serve Him, enter into the joys of the Lord.

Prayer.—Dear Lord, help us to be earnest and zealous for Thee. Make us obedient children to enter into the true liberty of grace. Make us rich in charity and a blessing to the world. Amen.

THURSDAY.

NO CHARGE.

"Who shall lay anything to the charge of God's elect?"—Rom. 8:33.

There is perhaps no one who will declare, "I have no sin," but there may be many who will not confess their sins. To refuse to confess our sins is the equivalent of denying them. But if we confess them, he is faithful and just to forgive us and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness.

God has caused this Scripture to be given us, that the devil might not have any claim upon us whatsoever. And there is no need that he should have a claim on any one, for we have Jesus whom to follow not only saves us, but who is our Advocate with the Father always. "Who shall lay anything to the charge of God's elect?" "You walk in the light as He is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth us from all sin."

Prayer.—Give us light, O Lord; teach us to know our sins, and teach us to know Thy grace. Forbid that we shall harbor carnal security; but humble us every day and keep us from falling. Forgive us of all our sins and wash them away with Jesus' blood, and increase us on holiness. Amen.

FRIDAY.

THE WISH OF THE WORLD.

"Sir, we would see Jesus."—John 12: 20-33.

What the Greeks wanted when they came to the temple in Jerusalem, the whole world of seeking men has wanted ever since. "Sir, we would see Jesus" has been, worded or unworded, the heart desire of all men. It is that today.

How and where are men to see Jesus? Only as He is reflected in the lives of His followers. We are the light of Christ shining out among men. What a responsibility this places on every Christian! The ambassador of the United States to a foreign land is the United States in that country. As he speaks, our nation speaks, and our country acts in his deeds. So is every Christian an ambassador of the King of kings, bearing His authority, in charge of His honor.

When people see us, do they feel that they have seen Jesus? Are these suggestions to be taken only in a fanciful sense? No; Christ Himself said that He sends His disciples forth even as He was sent forth.

Prayer.—O Christ, we are so unworthy of our high honor! What can we do beneath our burden of glory? How can we carry our weight of responsibility? Ah, it is not we that are to bear it, but Thou wilt lift it all. Thou in us, dear Lord, and we in Thee. Amen.—Wells.

SATURDAY.

THE LAUGH INSIDE.

"Be of good cheer, it is I, be not afraid."—Matt. 14:22-33.

A man who had been a swearer and a drinker became converted. His comrades ridiculed him. Once they went so far as to hold him and try to pour whiskey down his throat. But no matter what they did, or how much they ridiculed him, they could not force him back into his old evil ways. Some one asked him if the ridicule of his comrades did not make him feel bad. "No," he replied, "I don't mind it, because I have the laugh inside of me."

That is just what Christ meant when He bade His disciples to be of good cheer and not be afraid, but to see Him in all things that might seem unfortunate or hostile. Howls of rage or peals of mockery may be on the outside; but if Christian good cheer is on the inside, we shall not mind what men do to us.

The Christian's fortress is an inner one. Satan's sieges always fall against a Christian. To a Christian, "the inner side of every cloud is bright and shining." What matter the exteriors of life, if the interior is always a laugh?

Prayer.—Holy Spirit of the living God, be Thou at the heart of our home, at the center of our existence. Where Thou art is peace, and all joy is with Thee and with Thy children. Amen.—Wells.

SUNDAY.

"BAYING AT THE MOON."

"God is a Spirit; and they that worship Him must worship Him in spirit and in truth."—John 4:23.

The worship of God in any way is an abomination unto the Lord if the life is not consistent. A Sunday saint who, at other times, is evil, let him hear the Word, it is iniquity. It is no more than "baying at the moon."

We are called upon daily to examine our devotional spirit before the Lord our God. We do not present ourselves unwashed and unkept before kings nor before polite society. We need to put on not only our best attire when we go to meet God; but we need to put on our best soul garments, collected thoughts, attune the mind to the solemn mood, forget the world, concentrate thoughts and feelings, offer up a sincere and contrite heart; then Thy observance is a blessed thing and His Word and our prayers become pearls of great price.

Prayer.—Lord, give us piety, humility, a devotional spirit and an eager hunger and thirst after spiritual power. Amen.

GEORGE WASHINGTON ON PROHIBITION.

George Washington is not considered a fanatic, and we might do well at this time to remember the following words that came from him at the very beginning of our life as a democratic nation:

The government, by licensing the poison-drink traffic for a consideration, "takes a reward against the innocent," "bargains away the public health and the public morals," subverts the fundamental principles upon which the republic was founded, and not only discredits itself of all moral power, but makes itself a potential teacher of immorality and atheism.

"Who that is a sincere friend to free government can look with indifference upon attempts to shake the foundations of the fabric?"—From President Washington's Farewell Address to the American People.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN'S PULPIT

REV. JOSEPH W. FIX, Preacher.

RECEIVING CHRIST.

BY REV. JOHN G. TRUITT.

"But as many as received Him, to them gave He power to become the sons of God."
—John 1:12.

How the beloved John loved Jesus! And love was the best interpreter of this strange, loving Galilean. Seeing Jesus through the eyes of love and inspiration, John relates Him to the whole universe, and divides all humanity into three classes according to the way in which it reacted to Jesus. His divisions are: "the world," "His own," and "as many as received Him." These three groups took in all the folks of Jesus' day. They take in everybody today.

During the changing centuries, the ratio of each of these classes to the other two has changed from time to time, but always there has been the big, needy world of humanity which has not known Jesus. We are told that there are still hundreds of millions of people who have never so much as heard His beautiful name. Then, always, too, there has been that second group of "His own," who receive Him not! Knowing Him, they have not wanted Him; seeing Him, they saw no beauty, that they should desire Him. And then there is that ever-increasing ratio of those who receive Him, love Him, serve Him, and are willing enough to die for Him if necessary. Each of us are members of one of these great classes.

Let us look at that first class for a moment. We read: "He was in the world, and the world was made by Him, and the world knew Him not." There is little, if any, condemnation in that sentence—more of love, and gentleness, and mercy. It was a needy world, with a great Roman Empire becoming tremendously powerful and wealthy, and a few great Romans becoming immensely rich. It was a needy world when the multitudes were bound like slaves, and prisoners of war were multiplied until the galleys were glutted, and dungeons were darkened with the dying of dear ones in great cities. It was a needy world, for religion had gone on a rampage and was too burdensome to be borne. It was a needy world, for the great Jewish race, bearers of the vessels of God, had become, on account of their servitude to Rome, breeders of hate and blasphemers of simple goodness wherever it still reigned supreme in the hearts of humble folks.

Therefore, John again says: "God so loved the world (the poor, suffering, needy, sincere world) that He gave His only begotten Son (that strange, wonderful, sympathetic, understanding, powerful Teacher), that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish (should not be lost in the maze of that mighty wicked world), but should have everlasting life" (that slaves, denied liberty and life, should become free and live forever; that the dying of hunger, and sickness and disease should find new life, and find it to be everlasting). It was love that was to do that to a world that did not know God; it was giving on the part of God to the extent of the supreme sacrifice that was going to do that to a world that as yet did not know Him, but would know Him on account of the sending of His Son. Where has such promise ever been made before or since?

Two thousand years of expansion of John's word "world" should make it large enough now to include all continents and all colors. It should cover every day in the week from Monday to Monday again. It should include every room in a home from the basement to the attic. It should include every child in a family from the infant to the grandparent. It should include every enterprise from the sowing of a seed of wheat to the eating of the loaf, and all enterprises in any way contingent thereto. It should include the hope that a son should be born and the faith that his great-ancestors still live. And when it includes all, we may still read: "For God sent not His Son into the world to condemn the world; but that the world, through Him, might be saved." If you or I are Christians worthy of any name of following this lowly world-Saviour, our hearts, too, will be filled with compassion for such a needy world. For it is still needy; and how needy we have not time to recount now. But there is time to say that this luxurious, rich, free, beautiful America is not half as needy for material things as it is for spiritual rebirth!

The class most to be pitied in these three groups of humanity is that group which may be called "His own," and yet does not receive Him. In Jesus' day it was the Jews, but not so in our day. "The world" could give as its excuse for not receiving Him that it did not know Him. But this the Jews could not do. For many centuries they had looked forward to His coming with their prettiest dreams and wisest prophecies. The world itself is far richer today on account of their songs and psalms concerning His coming. Now, He had been ushered into their world by moving stars and angelic choirs, and yet "He came unto His own, and His own received Him not."

Why did they not receive Him? They needed Him. He was theirs. But He did not bring what they thought they wanted. They wanted governmental power more than God, law more than love, and license more than life. Persecution had driven them to hate, and wherever hate lives, for whatever cause, heaven cannot be! They offered Him swords and he received sinners. They offered Him kingdoms and He preferred simple human kindness. They offered Him gaul, but He chose God. They said, "Away with Him"; He said, "Come unto me." They said, "Heal yourself"; He said, "Heal the sick." And so His ways were not their ways, nor His thoughts their thoughts. "He came unto His own, and His own received Him not."

Is it not still true? Is He not still calling to the so-called Christian world for room for His ways, His words, His works? And what answer is our smug, complacent, Christendom oftentimes giving Him? Selfishness, bitterness, war, lust, strife, indifference.

"When Jesus came to Golgothe,

They hanged Him on a tree:

They drove great nails

Through hands and feet and made a Calvary;

They crowned Him with a crown of thorns,

Red were His wounds and deep,

For those were cruel and crude days,

And human flesh was cheap.

"When Jesus came to Birmingham,

They simply passed Him by;

They never hurt a hair of Him—

They only let Him die.

For men had grown more tender,

And they would not give Him pain:

They only passed Him down the street,

And left Him in the rain.

"Still Jesus cried, 'Forgive them,

For they know not what they do,'

And still it rained the winter rain

That drenched Him through and through.

The crowds went home and left the streets

Without a soul to see,

And Jesus crouched against the wall

And cried for Calvary."

But the glory of this passage from the first chapter of John are these words: "But as many as received Him, to them gave He power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on His name." Can we ever cease thanking God for the few who received Him in those days? What a change has been wrought in the world by the things they wrote, and said, and did! There was nothing remarkable about them at all, save the remarkable Saviour whom they beheld, and believed on, and loved. Peter, a poor, blundering fisherman, becomes an apostle to all ages; Mark, a wealthy widow's son, becomes immortal by receiving Jesus into his petted and pampered life; James and John, fresh young sons of thunder, become sons of God on account of the never-to-be-forgotten fellowship they formed with Jesus; Mary of Bethany becomes a beloved soul of all time because of the sweet perfumery of her devoted friendship; and Paul is changed from a self-centered Pharisee to a Christ-centered preacher of a crucified and risen Lord. Immortals all of them, and many more besides, gathered from every age, and race, and clime! For, "As many as received Him, to them gave He power to become the sons of God."—Broadcast over WSMK, Dayton, Ohio, March 7, 1931.

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

We hardly think anything could add to the beauty of our lawns at the Christian Orphanage more than beautiful flowers or pretty blooming shrubbery. It is our intention now to give some attention to planting flowers and flowering plants. Our good women are beginning to answer our letter in THE SUN last week in regard to sending us bulbs or asking us to come for them. I know if we get our good women interested in beautifying our grounds it won't be long before we will have beautiful lawns full of flowers. Flowers are so beautiful that it just makes one better to behold them in all their beauty and splendor. They carry cheer to the sick-room. They express the love and affections of our friends. If our friends will help us we will appreciate it.

A father and mother died of pneumonia a few weeks ago, leaving nine little children in that home, the oldest being fifteen, the youngest six months. The Christian Orphanage has been appealed to to take at least a part of this number. Income below normal. Some of our Sunday Schools not making a monthly offering. What shall our answer be to this appeal? They ask for bread; shall we hand them a stone? They ask for raiment; shall we withhold our hand. They ask for a home training and an equal opportunity in life; will the Christian Church rise up in its love and make some sacrifice that its orphanage may help at least a part of these little children?

lunch; sometimes during the school session. On this particular morning I asked one little boy of four years of age to lead us in a 'thank-you' prayer for our food. He told us all to bow our heads, and we obeyed. Then he said, 'Thank you, Jesus, for our food'—and every child around the table said the same, one after the other! Recovering from my astonishment and delight, I closed the prayers of grace. Since this day, this has been our daily method of asking grace before our lunch."

"An unusual event of this week was a series of health meetings. Home sanitation, the proper diet and general cleanliness was stressed. Good results have already begun to show themselves in the improved appearance of the pupils."

"The most interesting thing happened in junior play period Wednesday. The referee of the game in progress did not see a foul, and neither did the other children. However, the boy who made it stopped the game and admitted his mistake. Another boy said, 'William is doing just like the good American should. Let's elect him captain of our side.' And so now the children compete to see who can be the best sportsmen of them all."

From many helpful messages already received this year, two are now passed on to you. The first, from Dr. John Brittan Clark, whose ministry at Tryon, N. C., in "The Land of the Sky," is one that reaches out to his own Church folks, tourist visitor, and the people that are sorely in need during these days of financial depression. The cultured and the unlettered all share in the touch that is in evidence in the words referred to above: "There is a secret enabling one to renew the many precious things from which one's hard experiences take the bloom and inspiration. Christ had it, Paul got it, through the ages countless others won it—the secret of a new and living way." And from the study of Dr. Ernest Bournier Allen, of Pilgrim Church, Oak Park, Ill., this story with its deep meaning. "I used to work where my daily journey took me past the window where I could look in on a friend of mine. Very rarely did I have time to open the door and speak to him, but we watched for each other about the same time of day, and then we waved our hands to each other. It did us both good. It said something that could not be put into words. We felt as though we had renewed our contacts and kept our friendship in repair."

And from "Our Washington Window" comes this message like a wave of the hand to those who are sharing the good things of life from the mountains of Kentucky and Tennessee to the tip of Florida, and from the Atlantic to the Mississippi.

OBITUARIES.

DOVEL.

Sister Diana Dovel, wife of L. B. Dovel, deceased, was called home February 25, 1931. She lived her three-score and ten years and three years more. She was a member of the Christian Church for sixty years, and on the Sunday previous to her death told her pastor she was still happily trusting Jesus. On February 27, 1931, her body was interred at St. Peter's Church, near Shenandoah, Va. She leaves two sons, two daughters, and thirteen grandchildren.

B. J. EARP.

McCOLLUM.

On January 30, 1931, God sent His death angel to claim the spirit of our dear brother, Frank Vance McCollum. We, the members of New Lebanon Church, wish to express our appreciation of him in the following resolutions:

1. That we hold in loving remembrance his Christian life, and trust that his separation from us will only draw us nearer the throne.

2. That, while we have lost a faithful member of our Church, we deeply mourn our loss. We bow in humble submission to our Father's will.

3. That we extend our deepest sympathy to the bereaved family, praying that the Heavenly Father will comfort them.

4. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, one put on the secretary's book, and a copy be sent to The Christian Sun for publication.

DUCK.

In loving remembrance of our husband and father, Mills H. Duck, who died February 29, 1920.

A precious one from us has gone,
A voice we loved is stilled,
A place is vacant in our home
Which never can be filled.

Oh, the memory of that morning
God called you home to heaven above!
And ever since that fatal day
The world has never seemed so bright.

Eleven years ago, dear father,
God called you home—it was His will.
But in our hearts we love you still;
Your memory is as dear today
As in the hour you passed away.

HIS WIFE & CHILDREN.

ROSS.

On February 23rd, Mrs. Salina Ross died at the age of 67. She leaves a husband, three sons, three daughters, many grandchildren and friends to mourn their loss. She had been a faithful member of Auburn Christian Church for several years, and only two weeks before her death attended service there and expressed her appreciation at being able to be there again.

In the absence of her pastor, Rev. J. A.

Denton, the funeral service was conducted at Auburn Church by Rev. Paul Caudle, pastor of Mt. Moriah Baptist Church. Interment was made in the Church cemetery.

LUCY E. BRANCH.

KRUNISTER.

Mrs. Martha Ann Krunister was born December 2, 1862, and died at Roanoke Rapids, N. C., March 7, 1931, age 68 years, 3 months and 4 days. Her husband died March 16, 1930. Two children are deceased. Four daughters and two sons are living. Besides these, there are twenty-two grandchildren. Sister Krunister united with the Hebron Christian Church, Mecklenburg County, Va., in the summer of 1918, where she held her membership till death.

Funeral and burial were conducted at her Church on Sunday afternoon, March 8th. Mother will be missed, but the influence of her life will live on here.

CONGREGATIONAL CHRISTIAN CHURCHES OF THE SOUTHEAST

ELON was founded to train Christian leaders for the New South.

ELON has done its task well—one graduate in seven being in the Christian ministry. The other six express Christian leadership in the various professions and vocations. Experience teaches that spiritual leadership must be indigenous.

The South is now a New South ready for an inclusive Church, the type of Church for which Elon has stood for forty years and for which she is prepared to produce capable leadership.

With no Church in the community, save the College Auditorium, ELON has practiced Christian Union for faculty, students, and community for four decades.

Its contribution to Christian Education is nationally known and approved. Its Christian Education Building, providing laboratory facilities for religious leadership training, is unique and is the first college building of its type in the world.

ELON confines itself to undergraduate liberal arts work with that religious emphasis which befits the Christian College.

In ELON the Congregational-Christian Church has an asset of marvelous hopefulness.

The South needs her Yale, her Oberlin, her Carleton, her Pomona for the intellectual leadership of the United Church. Many regard ELON as strategically located and spiritually endowed to become such a center of illumination and leadership training.

SEATE.

Person County, N. C., lost, in the death of W. R. Seate, on Friday, March 6th, one of her oldest and most highly respected citizens. He was born April 15, 1845, in Halifax County, Va., but lived practically his entire life in Person County. On November 21, 1875, he married Miss Mary Smith, daughter of Dr. C. A. and Caroline Holloway Smith, who survive him. To them were born nine children—seven boys and two girls. Two sons died before their father. There are thirty-six grandchildren and ten great-grandchildren.

The funeral was conducted at the home Saturday afternoon, March 7th, and the burial was in the Smith family cemetery. A large crowd of neighbors and many from a distance attended the service. The deceased was a man who possessed many fine traits of character and had numerous friends.

BALL.

Mrs. Agnes Sutherland Ball, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Napoleon Taylor, was born in Caswell County, N. C., September 25, 1846, and died at her home, near Semora, N. C., Sunday, February 15, 1931, age 84 years, 5 months, and 10 days. When young, she united with Lebanon Christian Church, and was a consistent member till death. In 1877 she married Mr. Green Ball, who died about twenty years ago.

Sister Ball had no children of her own, but reared several in her home and was a real mother to them. She is survived by five brothers and two sisters, a large number of nieces and nephews and many other relatives.

The funeral and burial were conducted at Lebanon Church on Monday afternoon, February 16, by the writer and Rev. Mr. Coggins, of the Baptist Church. A large crowd of relatives and friends was present. The songs were impressive and the floral designs numerous and beautiful. A faithful and unselfish servant has gone to her reward. Many in the spirit land will call her blessed because of her loving devotion and sacrifices for them.

SHERWOOD EDDY.—

Mr. Sherwood Eddy, noted missionary, has turned Socialist, and is now turning his attention to socialistic work. At the annual luncheon of the United Neighborhood Houses' Association a few days ago, the speaker was Mr. Eddy, on the subject, "Religion and Secular Idealism and the Social Movement." This was one of the most gripping pleas for genuine religion that had been heard at the association, and it made a deep impression upon the four hundred settlement workers and their boards. Who knows but that Mr. Eddy is doing a great service in guiding the activities of the socialistic association by the spirit of the Master for human uplift.

JAPAN DEPRESSION.—

The prices of commodities and wages in Japan are just now settling from their war-time inflation, and the process is bound to be slow and painful. The depression in the United States, as seen in its effects on silk trade, is having considerable influence on Japan. Conditions are worse among the farming classes. It is stated conservatively that 10,000 small land-owners become tenant-farmers every year, and that in certain agricultural prefectures over 80 per cent of the farmers have refused to pay their taxes on account of the prevailing low price of rice due to over-production. Over-production of luxuries and under-production of necessities is the cause of financial depression in America today.

GANDHI MOVEMENT.—

When the terms of agreement between Mahatma Gandhi and the British viceroy were published, Unity, published in Chicago, cabled Gandhi congratulations, and also enquired of him the bearing of the terms announced upon the ultimate objects sought in the campaign for independence. In answer, Gandhi sent the following cablegram to Dr. John Hayes Holmes, editor of Unity: "Thanks. Nothing on important issues you mention was settled, but the door kept open for raising these questions. Congress enters conference with determination to gain these points. The settlement is provisional, and if congress position cannot be reached through conference, congress might have to readopt method of suffering and civil disobedience."

MINISTERIAL ETHICS.—

A tentative code of ministerial ethics has been drawn up by the conference of the younger churchmen of New York and vicinity. While the idea that ministers have any need for such a code may be resented in some quarters, we believe that this attempt at formulation will be welcomed rather wisely. There are some ministerial practices which, though they are fairly general, are, nevertheless, open to question and our complex civilization has made it more than difficult to know what conduct really is Christian. Copies of this code may be obtained by writing to the Rev. E. F. Kloran, 802 Broadway, New York. If there is a better way to exercise ministerial courtesy and clerical ethics than we have, it should be had and practiced. Nothing is too good for the kingdom promotion.

DEFEAT GAMBLING.—

The Church Federation has persistently opposed legalized gambling on horse and dog races. At every recent biennial session of the State legislature, in St. Louis, a bill or some discussion of ways of approach to bring back gambling has been before the public. Aided by other metropolitan, religious associations and civic organizations, the bill was again opposed and defeated this year. A committee of 100 representative citizens also gave aid. A publicity man kept the agitation hot and another worker spent ten days in the capital city watching proceedings and enlisting opposition. The bill was cut to pieces by amendments and failed of engrossment by a vote of 87-30. Christian people should be on the alert on such moral and ethical questions at every State legislature to prevent the passage of such laws.

DISTRESS INCREASES.—

Early in December a citizens committee on relief and unemployment was appointed by Mayor Victor Miller, of St. Louis, to disburse the city appropriation of $300,000 for relief. Through six established social agencies, this fund has been distributed. Now the increasing and multiplying needs call for another like sum. More than 15,000 applicants for jobs and relief, some needing both, have been supplied. It is estimated that more than 10,000 families are under the care of these agencies. A survey made January 1st showed probably 75,000 men out of work in St. Louis, which was about 50,000 more than normal at the season. The services of the participating agencies and of 3,300 individuals have been voluntary. Such experiences should make people more provident when times are good, but too frequently people do not look ahead and prepare against that day.

"RALPH CONNOR."—

Dr. C. W. Gordon, probably better known by his pen name, "Ralph Connor," pastor of St. Stephen's United Church, Winnipeg, Manitoba, was the speaker at the Sunday evening club, March 15th, in Chicago. Interviewed by a newspaper reporter, Dr. Gordon asserted that Church union in Canada had exceeded the expectations of its most ardent proponents at the time of its inauguration. As one proof of that contention, Dr. Gordon pointed to the financial record of the United Church. Despite the present economic depression, he said, the treasurer of the United Church reported an income for the past year which doubled the combined income of the three uniting Churches (Presbyterian, Methodist and Congregationalist) in their best year prior to union. More significant, however, Dr. Gordon felt, was the progress made throughout Canada in the fields of industrial and social ethics during recent years.

WORSHIP AND MUSIC.—

A group of Sunday School officials and workers met during the week in St. Louis to arrange for the coming of Prof. H. Augustine Smith, of Boston University, who will spend three days, April 24-26, in the city delivering addresses and holding institutes for instruction in the use of music, pictures, and pageantry in the development of the spirit of worship in young people's and congregational service. The committee in charge purposes the enrollment of 1,000 interested Church workers. It seems strange that other institutions with music departments do not provision to instruct people in the promotion of music in worship and Sunday School work. Our Churches are greatly in need of instruction in congregational singing. Why could not a course for the preparation of teachers and leaders in congregational singing be given in connection with the Chautauqua this summer? Such a course for leaders in music in our Sunday Schools and rural Churches would be of great service to the Church.

STUDENT CHRISTIAN FAITH.—

A comparison has been made by a hand not hard to detect, between the mission which stirred Oxford University, England, in 1905, and the mission which recently was conducted by the archbishop of York. The earlier one was considered rightly to have been remarkable in its range and results. The preacher then was Dr. John R. Mott, and from 300 to 800 undergraduates attended the meetings. Today, when critics have assured us that the modern students have no use for religion, never less than 1,000 and sometimes 2,000 members of the university were present day after day for eight days, listening to the preaching of Christ and learning the way of prayer. It would be too much to declare that these facts are characteristic of what is happening everywhere. There is a rebellion, seething in the heart of youth; there is a readiness to try experiments which can only end in disillusion and despair—but it is altogether an unreal picture of youth which leaves out the companies who have entered upon the way of faith. One great trouble with youth is that older people do not put faith enough in them.

NOTES-PERSONALS

"God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life" (John 3:16).

"It is more blessed to give than to receive." Jesus though so, and gave Himself, and the Christian world crowns Him Lord of all. Our Saviour passed through trial to triumph; through defeat to victory; through crucifixion to resurrection; through death to life.

Have you an automobile? Why not ask a number of your friends to be ready at the proper time, with the understanding that you will call for them and bring them to Church with you? In place of the automobile's making empty seats, let us see that it makes full ones.—Our Friendly Visitor.

Dr. W. A. Harper, president of Elon College, was the speaker for the Easter Sunday morning sunrise service in the churchyard of the Episcopal Church, Burlington, N. C., at 7 o'clock last Sunday. We are sure Dr. Harper gave the audience a fitting and worth-while message on this unique occasion.

Many Churches took their initial offering for missions last Sunday, but no Sunday finds all members of any congregation at Church. Certainly very many are away at Easter time. There should be follow-up efforts until the membership of Church and Sunday School have had an opportunity of making a contribution to the cause and call of missions.

Rev. J. H. Warren, pastor, reports five additions to the Ocean View, Va., Church in March, with an average attendance of 112 in the Sunday School, with Sunday School offering averaging $7.45 per Sunday. This in spite of quite inclement weather three Sundays during the month. In proportion to membership, we doubt if many of the older Churches show a better average. Bro. Warren is finding an open field at Ocean View, with large opportunities and splendid prospects.

The woman's missionary rallies next week are: Palm Street Church, Greensboro, Tuesday, April 14th, for the Guilford District, Mrs. O. H. Paris, Greensboro, superintendent; Mebane, Wednesday, April 15th, Alamance District, Mrs. J. W. Patton, Elon College, superintendent; Durham, Friday, April 17th, Durham-Wake District, Mrs. W. H. Boone, Durham, superintendent. The women are making an effort to present a good program, and they desire good delegations from all the Churches of their districts.

Dr. I. W. Johnson, Suffolk, Va., writing under date of April 1st, says: "Am holding pre-Easter services at Berea (Nansemond) this week, 7:30 each evening. Am speaking on the Passion Week experiences and teachings of Jesus. I believe it is one of the best series of services I have undertaken of a devotional type." Many of our pastors have found it opportune and timely to have a series of services leading up to and including Easter. This is a period of year that easily lends itself to services of praise, gratitude, prayer, devotion.

The Duke endowment distributed last week to 144 hospitals and orphanages in North Carolina and South Carolina a total of $861,175. One hundred hospitals shared in the distribution, and forty-four orphanages. The endowment does not confine its benevolences to any denomination, even to Church institutions. The Oxford Orphanage (Masonic) received $10,692; Odd Fellows' Orphanage and Pythias being beneficiaries also. We were happy to note that our own Christian Orphanage at Elon received $2,583 (enough to make Bro. Johnston's heart glad, we are sure, for many days).

In the bulletin carrying the program of the services for Christian Temple, Norfolk, March 27th, the following appropriate announcement was carried: "Does Christ mean anything to you? Does He mean anything to your country? Are you doing anything definitely to give Christ and the Church to those who have Him not? Our missionaries and mission fields are in need. This is mission period for our Convention. Every individual and Church are requested to make a definite contribution. Think about it, pray about it, and ask God to guide you in making your contribution. Envelopes will be furnished you for your contributions."

Dr. Staley, of Suffolk, often says that negroes are more religious and also more liberal in their giving than we whites are. The following statistics would seem to substantiate the claim. During the period of 1916-'26, the negro population of America increased 659,888, while the increase in negro Church membership during that time was 600,682. During that period, the increase in the value of their Church property was $205,872,628, and the increase in contributions to the Church went to 150 per cent. If we white people would give to our Churches and to the Lord's cause in proportion to our wealth as our colored brethren do, the Church would not lack for funds and the gospel would soon be preached throughout the world.

THE SUN's editor had the privilege of worshipping with the pastor and people of our Sanford Church and the Woman's Missionary Society Sunday, March 22nd. Rev. T. Fred Wright, his good wife and lovely family are held in high esteem by the saints of Sanford. They are a real contribution to any people and community. Bro. Wright is consecrated to the task to which he has been called, and is giving it the unstinted devotion and the boundless energy with which he is blessed. The Woman's Missionary Society, under the presidency of Miss Ruth Gunter, whose session we were permitted to attend Sunday afternoon, is a live and a very active society, and, like every good missionary society, is the right arm of the pastor in the spiritual task of the Church and community.

Rev. J. H. Dollar, pastor of First Christian Church, Reidsville, who was laid up in a hospital for a month soon after Christmas, has been busy since in making up lost time. He has recently concluded a series of eight sermons on the "Home," covering four Sundays, during which time his congregations almost doubled, deep interest being manifested throughout. The local paper carried extensive and favorable accounts of the services. The pastor issued a letter February 22nd, announcing the program for the whole year and calling upon his congregation for attendance at the "Home" series and the Church services of the year. His Church is issuing a year-book and directory. Immediately following Easter, Bro. Dollar leaves for two weeks' study at Vanderbilt University. We congratulate this pastor on his wisdom of planning a season from his pastoral duties to further prepare and equip himself by study and research to render a larger service to his people.

President Hoover declares that the American people always give in proportion to human need, and not in terms of prosperity. The facts seem to justify this conclusion, since during the present depression there has been a most generous outpouring of gifts in response to all special appeals for help. The reports from 130 "community chest" campaigns in as many cities show an increase of more than $3,000,000 over the giving of last year to these same chests. If the world responds out of its need to such a challenge for the relief of human want, how much more ought the Church to respond as the work of the kingdom faces suffering all along the line from lack of support and liberal contributions? If we can respond to a call for human relief, surely we should and must respond to the call of our Lord to go forward in the spiritual task of giving the bread of life to those who are perishing without it.

THE SUN's editor spoke half-hour before the Sunday School at Ether, N. C., last Sunday. Bro. W. H. Freeman is the loyal, faithful and true superintendent, and it was a joy and a privilege to face such a group of young people. What a power in this world for good is a live, wide-awake Sunday School! At 11 A. M., the service was at our Biscoe Church. An attentive, patient and inspiring audience was present. Rev. S. A. Bennett, of Elon College, and President Green, of Country Life Academy, took part in the service. At 2:30 P. M., a large company gathered in the chapel of Country Life Academy, at Star, N. C. It was a "Fellowship Meeting" of Congregationalists and Christians. Dr. C. H. Rowland, Greensboro, delivered the sermon. Others speaking and taking part in the program were President Green, Revs. S. A. Bennett, S. W. Penn, E. C. Brady, and THE SUN's editor. The services were interesting and helpful, and seemingly much enjoyed by the large audience present.

EARLY DIAGNOSIS CAMPAIGN.

Children of the Sunday School between the ages of twelve and twenty are urged to read carefully and then to carry home to their parents the circulars now being distributed by the Richmond Tuberculosis Association, calling attention to the third annual "Early Diagnosis Campaign." This drive is now being conducted throughout the city and will reach its climax April 20-24, when a series of clinics will be held. The circulars are also blanks which should be filled out with the name, address, telephone number and age of the boy or girl wishing to be examined, and then should be returned to the office of the association, 1112 Capitol Street, where the clinics for white children will be held.

Dr. E. C. Harper, general chairman; Dr. Kinloch Nelson, head of the clinic department, and your pastor all urge the co-operation of parents in sending their frail and under-nourished boys and girls to be examined. The service is free of charge, for the physicians and the six nurses who will be on duty each day are volunteering their services in order to give Richmond youth a better chance to live.

Clinics will be conducted each afternoon from 4 to 6 o'clock during the designated period, and on Monday, Wednesday and Friday nights from 7 to 9 o'clock for the accommodation of those not able to attend in the afternoon.

This effort to control, and finally to stamp out, the white plague in the youth of this city has the whole-hearted endorsement of the Medical College of Virginia, the Richmond Academy of Medicine, and the Richmond Ministerial Union. Last year Richmond lost from tuberculosis 37 young people less than nineteen years old. Richmond feels that immediate steps must be taken to combat such an enemy.

CONGREGATIONAL NEWS

REV. E. C. GILLETTE, Editor; REV. F. P. ENSMINGER, and REV. M. J. SWEET, Associates.

DR. ELMER W. SERL, of Southern Pines, with Mrs. Serl, are spending a short vacation in Florida following Easter. Dr. Serl used to be pastor of the Tourist Church at Seabreeze.

REV. DON G. HENSHAW, of Coral Gables, Fla., is planning to attend the summer school at Union Seminary, New York, providing no untoward circumstances prevent. This will be a fine privilege.

DR. J. D. KUYKENDALL, the pastor of Plymouth Church, Coconut Grove, Fla., has been ill, but is now back again at his work. Dr. Kuykendall makes many friends through his column of genial human philosophy published daily in the Miami Herald and known as "The Open Road."

MIAMI BEACH: At the Community Church Dr. King recently gave an illustrated lecture on Switzerland to a crowded Church. The interesting thing about this is that he has given it once each year for ten years, always to a crowded house. Dr. King was the leader in starting the Easter sunrise service at Miami Beach, which attracts crowds running as high as 40,000.

UNITED, ATLANTA, GA.: The work of this new Church is making steady progress under the leadership of Dr. W. T. McElveen. During the past year, several have been added to the membership and the pastor has been made chairman of the inter-racial commission of Atlanta and is one of the vice-presidents of the Ministers' Council and is also one of the recognized religious leaders in the city. The membership of the Church includes educational and other leaders. The missionary gifts on apportionment are large, reaching during the two years of the existence of the Church $1,911, and the outlook for the future is most encouraging.

MEANSVILLE, GA., where a new building is in the process of erection, is one of the four Churches under the fine leadership of Rev. L. L. Stanley. This is a rural parish, with a fine class of people and a strong program is in evidence throughout. The apportionment giving during the past year was large, and the people are greatly attached to all that enters into their Church life and are very happy to have a pastoral leadership of so strong a character as is resulting in the building up of the four-fold Church constituency. The total Church membership numbers 363, and the schools enroll 228. The new Church will be dedicated May 3rd.

EAST COAST FLORIDA: The writer, who happens to be superintendent for Florida, has spent the last two weeks in that part of the State. With a vacant Church at West Palm Beach and with other Churches to be visited, he decided to make his headquarters in the region and has found it interesting and profitable. He preached in the West Palm Beach Church on two Sundays, including Easter, and also preached at Palm City, held a conference with the pulpit supply committee at Melbourne, which Church will be vacant when Dr. Hanscom closes his notable pastorate there in June, and also visited the pastors and others in the Miami Churches, also at Lake Worth and Jupiter. He is pleased to report improved conditions and signs of progress in the Churches of this region.

DR. RIGGS IN FLORIDA: Rev. Ernest W. Riggs, of Boston, one of the secretaries of the American Board, is to spend ten days in Florida.

He will attend the State Conference and then will spend the following week visiting Churches in the interest of the missionary program. He will speak before men's groups, meet Church boards, and address general groups. Dr. Riggs not only has had missionary experience in the Near East, but also is thoroughly informed in such special fields as India and Africa. He represented the American Board at the Jerusalem Conference. He has been at the Missionary Education Movement Conference at Blue Ridge for two seasons, and his courses there have been very popular. He will also be at the meeting of the Advisory Board of the Southeast at Nashville.

MIAMI, FIRST: During the winter, this Church has enjoyed the ministry of Dr. Robert MacDonald, and there has been substantial progress during the season. The arrangement with Dr. MacDonald was that he should have charge during the six winter months, ending May 1st. The Church has arranged with Dr. MacDonald to return November 1st, and has arranged with Rev. Helen F. Lanham, formerly of Chicago, to serve as assistant pastor, having full charge during the summer months and assisting Dr. MacDonald during the winter. Mrs. Lanham has been in Miami this winter and has become a member of First Church. Dr. MacDonald's services this season have been especially characterized by his Sunday night forum, at which there were discussed many current topics and received much recognition in the press.

WIDE-AWAKE CHURCHES are enthusiastic over a new plan for instructing their young people in the administration of the affairs of a local Church. Friendship Church, Antioch, Union Hill, Poplar Arbor, New Light adopted the idea to ask an informed, thoroughly live adult to take the leadership in organizing all the young people into a modern Church, up-to-date in every detail. They will adopt their own constitution, elect their own officers, call their own pastor, appoint their own committees—in short, do everything any Church ought to do if it is to function in a strong way. When this work is completed and the young people have thus become well informed as to the duties of Churches and its members, it is planned to present the plan to the whole Church which will, it is believed, organize along the same lines, thus falling in line with the advancing Church of today.

"UNITED WE STAND," exclaimed the large crowd of people representing three Christian Churches and two Congregational Churches meeting at New Light Church, Doerun, March 26th. The occasion was the first visit to these Churches made by the pastor-at-large, Rev. Milo J. Sweet. In his talk, he had made scant reference to the union of these two denominations, directing his message to the Congregational Churches, which he was urging to reorganization, the adoption of new constitution and the inauguration of up-to-date business system in all the work of the Church. He had scarcely sat down when a great big, six-feet-two Christian, who had driven with several others over sixty miles to attend this meeting, was on his feet wanting to know why the pastor-at-large had left the Christians out. "I thought we were united and just one," he said—and much else which made everybody happy and then many spoke. At the end, they insisted the pastor-at-large visit Ambrose, Vanceville and Enigma Christian Churches just as soon as he could, which, of course, he will not forget. And a very significant thing came out of this very meeting. By unanimous approval of this unusually large and fine group from both denominations, it was agreed that steps be taken at once to so unite them that they might call a pastor for all the Churches who could devote his undivided attention to the pastoral life of these Churches. It is becoming more and more apparent that preaching, no matter how good it may be, cannot bring a Church to its highest efficiency. Increasingly, the demand is for well-trained men who can be supported in such a way as to make it possible for them to give up carpentry, farm work, business agencies, bookkeeping, etc., and give themselves unreservedly to the Christian ministry. And it is well.

MISS COGHILL IN ACCIDENT.

Miss Pattie Lee Coghill, well known and loved in all our Congregational fellowship in the South-east, was in the railroad accident which occurred on the Florida East Coast Railroad between West Palm Beach and Miami on March 25th. Several cars left the track, but fortunately no one was seriously injured. Miss Coghill received a sprained ankle and a strained knee, and otherwise suffered from the shock. She went to the Y. W. C. A. at Miami and received medical treatment and rested up after the experience and then went on to Key West, where she is dean of an interdenominational leadership training institute. She writes that she is feeling better and that the institute is well attended and going well. From Key West she goes to Coconut Grove to spend a week with Plymouth Church there.

FLORIDA STATE CONFERENCE.

The forty-eighth annual meeting of the Florida Congregational Conference will be held at Orange City, where Rev. Thomas H. Derrick is the pastor. The date of the meeting is April 21-23. The delegates and visitors will stay at the Orange City Inn, which will remain open beyond the season in order to accommodate the conference.

A very strong and unusual program has been arranged, the general theme of which will be "A Vital Religion for the Needs of the World Today." Instead of having many program addresses there will be two periods of round-table discussion. The first will be on Wednesday afternoon and will be upon the subject which is the theme of the conference. It will be opened by an address by Rev. Lucy T. Ayres. The discussion will be led by Rev. C. C. Lincoln, of Daytona Beach. The other discussion period will take place on Thursday morning and will be on the subject, "Rekindling the Missionary Passion in the Church" and will be conducted by Rev. Ernest W. Riggs, of Boston, Mass., secretary of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions. Dr. Riggs will also give an address on Wednesday evening on "Christ in Our Civilization."

Among other speakers will be President Hamilton Holt on "The Teachings of Jesus"; Rev. W. Knighton Bloom, D. D., of Washington, on "The International Council, an Interpretation and a Contrast," and Rev. H. Stiles Bradley, D. D., of Worcester, Mass. (topic not yet announced). The annual conference sermon will be preached by Dr. A. P. Vaughn, of Avon Park, and the moderator of the conference is Rev. O. T. Anderson, of Fort Myers. Devotional periods will be led by Rev. Robert MacDonald, D. D., pastor of the First Church, of Miami, and Rev. Lewis H. Keller, D. D., pastor at Lake Helen. The annual meeting of the Woman's Federation will be held on Thursday morning, April 23rd, and will be led by Mrs. Robert G. Williams, of Lake Worth, president. There will be a missionary dramatic sketch by the young people of the Sanford Church and project demonstrations by groups from Jupiter, Tampa and Winter Park.

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

"SHOW US THE FATHER."

Phillip, the cool, calm, calculating apostle of the twelve, expressed more than an individual desire when he said to the Christ: "Lord, show us the Father, and it sufficeth." The heart-cry of all ages has been just that—"Show us the Father." Man realizes his own insufficiency, his own inability, intellectually and morally, to deal with life as he finds it, and explain the mysteries about it and the powers above and beneath it. Out of his heart of helplessness, man cries, as did the intellectual Phillip, "Show us the Father." This paragraph from an editorial of the Western Christian Advocate leads our hearts to the real issue:

"If we were able to express the cry of the human heart today, it would be in the words, 'Man of God, tell us something about God.' Men want to know what God is. Men yearn to know where God lives. Men are ever searching to solve the problem of how God deals with mankind. Of all the outstanding features of present-day intellectual life, those activities of the mind in search for ultimate truth and reality are most evident. In other words, we are seeking to say that men want to know about God. Has not the Church been speaking of Him? Yes, it has taken God for granted. It has said a good deal about Him, but it has not said enough; neither has it expressed the right words concerning Him."

Not only the intellectual life of the present is searching to find out God, pressing its quest for ultimate triumph and reality, but the man of business wants to know also the character of the one who is over all and beyond all.

Civic clubs have sprung up everywhere, and every week thousands of men gather in these clubs, not only to discuss business and questions of reform and ethical uplift, but to discover the persons and the powers beneath business and beyond and above business. They are seeking, through contacts with "the better," to find "the best." These civic clubs have grown out of the morality and the ethics preached, taught and revealed through the Church and the Christ, and they are seeking to emphasize the best in honorable and legitimate business. But even at their best and with all their numbers and enthusiasm, they do not equal the Church, even in the numbers who attend them, or in the programs and activities that engage them.

It is safe to say that more men here in our Christian land gather every Sunday at Churches than gather any week in their civic clubs and societies. This in spite of the fact that the Church is old and the civic clubs new, and have the pull of novelty and initiative. The Church is old, but it still draws as no other organization on earth draws, and it holds for the simple reason that the heart of man cries out, "Show us the Father." This is the specific work of the Church, that of seeking, through worship, prayer, song and pulpit, to show the world the Father. Whenever the Church loses its voice in this regard, it puts itself on a level with a civic club, or a political organization. The Church is trying, and should ever try, to answer the deepest and most universal need the human heart ever feels, "Show us the Father, and it sufficeth."

The Church is doing this because its Founder and Head answered that question: "He that hath seen me, hath seen the Father." In Jesus Christ we have God revealed incarnate in flesh. When the heart is hungry, and the soul thirsts for that which gives and sustains life, the Church is ready with the answer, "The Lord, He is God, and Jesus the Christ is the Son of the living God." As such, He is not "a way of life." He is "the" way of life; as such, He is not a problem, but a Person; as such, He is not a potentiality, but a power. He it is who alone of all the beings that ever came to earth can answer the deepest and profoundest inquiry of man and the heart-cry of the most hungry soul. He came that we might have life and have it more abundantly.

FRIENDS.

One of the very sweetest and most potent words of our language is "friendship." Our Lord Christ realized that while here on earth, and put the word very high, even far above that of service or servant. After He had long cultivated the acquaintance of His disciples, He said: "Henceforth I call you not servants; for the servant knoweth not what His Lord doeth: but I have called you friends." He was speaking out of the depths of a great love when He said that, for He had just used the words, "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends."

Out of genuine, constant, deep and abiding love comes friendship. It is the fruit of love. It is the crowning glory of love. It is the joy and strength of love. It is the result of love. Only love can give true friendship. In his immortal ode to love, Paul said: "Now abideth faith, hope, love, these three, and the greatest of these is love." Love is the greatest because it fosters and develops and cultivates friendship. To friendship, faith is necessary, and hope is necessary, but neither faith nor hope, nor the two combined, can produce friendship. Faith and hope, saturated and seasoned with love, can produce, and it has produced, friendship.

The highest reaches of love reveal friendship. This is again shown in God's Word, which says that "Abraham believed God, and it was imputed unto him for righteousness; and he was called the friend of God." We think of Abraham as a man of faith. He was a man also of everlasting friendship. In another place where the Lord is addressed, Abraham is spoken of as "thy friend forever." God, who prepares and enriches the heart of man for love, wants and longs for man's friendship. Abraham was permitted to found a family whose name shall never perish from the earth, because in him was developed and grew to great depths a friendship for God. It is not the part of weakness, but of worth and of strength for us to want friends. God wants friends, and He wants us to be His friends.

Then, as a friend to God with eternal love growing in our heart, we may be a true friend to our fellow-man. If one is to be a true friend, one must have true love in one's heart, a love that never fadeth nor faileth.

We little reckon how much our friends add to our lives and of what worth, merit and joy they are to us. On this account we should be grateful for our friends. Frank Dempster Sherman has put this in eight beautiful lines:

"It is my joy in life to find

At every turning of the road

The strong arm of a comrade kind,

To help me onward with my load.

"And since I have no gold to give,

And love alone must make amends,

My only prayer is, while I live:

God, make me worthy of my friends."

Now, Emerson said, "The way to have a friend is to be one" and we will certainly not be much of a friend unless we are grateful for our friends and seek to show ourselves worthy of them. God makes us worthy of our friends.

Such reflections are in season now. Jesus, man's greatest Friend, proved His friendship by lifting from man the load that man could not carry—that load of darkness and of death which no human hand could lift. The Son of God took away that load and made this a different world, and through His resurrection gave assurance that death itself can have no terrors for those who are friends to Him. A friend to Jesus. "Ye are my friends if ye do whatsoever I command you."

THE DEVIL DOES NOT RETRENCH.

Right now, while the Church needs loyalty and support as it never has, we are crying "hard times" and using the same as an excuse to withhold and retrench. The mission period in our Church is on now. The fundamental work of the Church and that upon which the Church life and progress depend, is that of missions. It was to give the gospel to the whole world that the Church was instituted and has been kept alive. No Church or denomination grows, or goes forward, except through its missionary giving, endeavor and activity. To withhold support from our missionary cause now, without a willingness to sacrifice for it, is to acknowledge defeat, retard growth and paralyze our spiritual body and energy. Christians may retrench, the forces of righteousness may hoist the white flag or retreat, but the devil never retrenches, and the forces of evil press harder than ever in times of depression. Unless we press forward now, quit ourselves like men, and make sacrifices for our Lord, the Church will suffer and our individual lives will be the poorer.

The Christian Advocate of Richmond makes this appeal to its constituency, carrying facts and arguments which pertain to the Christian Church no less than to the Methodists:

"We know our people are suffering from hard times and depression, but as Methodists and Christians we do not want these hard times to make us pull down our flag and retreat from the strongholds and turn points we have taken over to the devil. And the devil is not retrenching in these hard times. He works harder in periods of depression and discouragement than at any other time. The Church of Christ ought to do the same. In times of depression, our loyalty is needed more than any other time. This time of greatest need when the whole world, as never before, is hungry for the service Christianity can give, is no time to retreat from any field. There ought to be an advance all along the line."

In order to have an advance along the line to prevent ourselves from spiritual stagnation, we shall have to sacrifice now for our Lord and make our offerings out of our need and our want.

J. O. A.

THE BIBLE IN EDUCATION.

We note from the Sunday School Times that Lord Eustace Percy, minister of education in the British government, recently delivered an address before Church Congress, using as his theme, "The Bible in Education." Evidently Lord Percy has met something of the teaching in England that is quite current, not to say rampant, in America. His lordship is quoted as follows:

"The Bible is the language of the Christian faith, the only common language that the Christian Church has ever used. The Christian Church has a message to deliver to the world, but a message can only be delivered in a living language. A confusion of tongues has fallen on the Church, and her members speak in loose phrases which might fit a dozen meanings, in terms that are indeterminate and in definitions that do not define. We no longer preach Christ crucified, but 'the principle of the cross'; redemption and regeneration are swallowed up in 'a process of spiritual development'; the gospel itself is converted into 'the New Testament ethic.' From this strife of tongues we, and the coming generation, whom we are teaching in our schools, can only escape by returning to the Bible and learning again the free speech that our fathers used."

One is inclined to think that there is much truth contained in the above quotation. It has been said, and may be repeated, that it requires a personal message to reach persons. The power of the gospel is the power of Jesus Christ unto salvation, and when that power is forgotten or ignored in the presentation of beautiful principles and abstract theories, preaching does not carry us far. If the world is to be saved, something more than ethics must save it. The world must have heat as well as light, or its soul perishes. Principles give us light, but personality alone has power and push and dynamic. When our preaching leaves out Jesus Christ and Him crucified, we might as well close up the Church doors and turn the Bible school into a school of literature, mathematics and science.

J. O. A.

PROHIBITION.

The Bible and human law are full of prohibition. Of the Ten Commandments, eight are negative and two are positive. "Remember the Sabbath Day and keep it holy" and "Honor thy father and thy mother," are the two positive commandments. The other eight are negative. "Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain"; "Thou shalt have no other gods before me"; "Thou shalt not kill"; "Thou shalt not commit adultery"; "Thou shalt not steal"; "Thou shalt not bear false witness"; "Thou shalt not covet." Three of these are in our statute law: "Thou shalt not kill"; "Thou shalt not steal"; "Thou shalt not bear false witness." The violation of these three commandments are punishable by law in the United States. But all of these laws are violated by citizens, and, when caught and convicted, are punished. Nobody says that these laws ought to be repealed. Nobody says that they take away personal liberty.

The eighteenth amendment came into the Constitution by the largest majority of any amendment ever passed by the Congress of the United States. It has been upheld by the Supreme Court of the United States, and there is no law more binding upon the citizens of the United States than the eighteenth amendment. No one can be a good Christian who does not obey the laws of God, and no one can be a good citizen who does not obey the laws of his country. It is not a matter of opinion, it is a matter of obedience. To manufacture alcohol, to sell alcohol, to buy alcohol, or to drink alcohol as a beverage is a violation of the eighteenth amendment. Such a violation makes the offender a lawbreaker. To be a criminal is to forfeit the right to be a citizen. The man who buys is equally guilty with the man who sells. "Whosoever shall keep the whole, and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of all."

Prohibition is essential to Christianity, to government, and to society. The eighteenth amendment prohibits the manufacture and sale of alcoholic liquors as a beverage. It does not prohibit its manufacture, sale, and use as a medicine and in the arts. People violate Sabbath laws, but people do not complain; but when prohibition is violated, they cry out against the law.

The Church needs to arise in her might as she did in the days of the saloon, and let society understand that the eighteenth amendment is here to stay. It ought to keep out of politics as a party matter, but it ought to work in politics as leaven, as a moral principle to control thought, conversation and action. It should be kept in mind that the public sentiment that produced prohibition will keep prohibition in this great nation. No amendment to the Constitution has ever been repealed, and the eighteenth will be no exception. Good people believe in it, obey it, and society benefits by its observance and support. W. W. S.

WHY?

Why should people give millions of dollars for a work which they never see and which yields nothing in kind to them? Why should parents give sons and daughters, and why should these sons and daughters give themselves, for life, to people so remote from their immediate concern as those of the non-Christian lands? After all is said of the rich rewards in other coin and the enlargement of life that come with missionary interest, the only secure thing to say is that this giving and dedication are on the same ground that brought Christ here in the first place—it is the way to show love, to forget self, to be of the same heart as Christ.—C. Boyd McAfee, D. D.

Fifty Thousand Dollars for Missions!

A CALL TO SELF-DENIAL

Through self-denial, the Kingdom of Heaven is built on earth. The cattle upon a thousand hills are His; likewise, the gold and the silver, and the world's wealth. Yet, in financing His Kingdom on earth, Jesus, the Son of God, saw fit to adopt and use the method of self-denial. He gave the great example and denied Himself of even a place on which to lay His head. He gave all for our sake. He calls upon us to give something for His sake, not out of our abundance, but out of our need.

The greatest task conceived by the mind of man, or the wisdom of God, is that of giving the whole Gospel to the whole world, and this task has been, and is being, borne and achieved solely through self-denial.

It is a spiritual challenge, and must be accepted, if at all, through self-denial. If CHRISTIAN SUN readers shall reap the benefits and enjoy the blessings of spiritual enrichment, they will do so by following their Lord in denying themselves of some real value in His name and for His sake.

To this end, the Mission Board, in trying to carry forward the work assigned to it by the Church for which $50,000 is called for this year, is inviting all SUN readers and Church members to deny themselves of some valuable thing, or indulgence, and give the price of it to Missions. Only through self-denial will our own lives be enriched and will our goal for our Lord be achieved. Jesus proved Himself our Friend by the supreme sacrifice. Now He wants us, and needs us, to be His friends, and we can only prove that friendship by making a sacrifice for His sake. This we can do through self-denial.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Love is the heart of religion. It is not what one knows, not what one does, not what one believes, not what one gives, not what one suffers, that saves the soul; but what one loves. "Love is of God" (1 John 4:7). "Love covereth all sins" (Prov. 10:12). "God is love" (1 John 4:8). "The fruit of the Spirit is love" (Gal. 5:22). "The love of Christ constraineth us" (1 Cor. 5:14). Love is not of the head, but of the heart. The controlling element in religion is feeling. Feeling controls human thinking more than thinking controls feeling. It is feeling that suggests charity. It is feeling that prompts kindness. It is feeling that prompts the expression of sympathy and the sending of flowers to bereaved persons. Love is feeling and it expresses itself in natural ways. Love manifests itself through material gifts. The lover sends flowers, carries candy, bestows gifts of money, jewels, fruit, pictures, books, or some material gift.

God manifests His love through material gifts. The world is His gift to man. It was man's privilege to dress it and to keep it. Man has been working this gift of God through all the centuries. Man has improved the world, God's material gift. The coal, the gold and silver, the precious stones, the fruits and flowers, are all material gifts from God. God's greatest gift to man was His Son, Jesus Christ, and He came in a material body, "God manifest in the flesh." Man never understood God until He revealed Himself in a human body like our own. But when Jesus came, He said: "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father" (John 14:9), and yet it was said that "No man hath seen God" (John 1:18). And that is true. No man hath seen God, the infinite Spirit; but man has seen God in the material person of Jesus.

Man fails to place the proper estimate on material things. Material substances can honor God when put into His service. Money can do missionary service, and it does. It can send missionaries to heathen lands and proclaim the gospel to pagan souls; and it does. Jesus not only gave men truth, but He gave them bread till they were filled. Many people find fault with the Church for asking for money. They say, "All the preacher is after is money"; but they overlook the fact that if you get a man's money you get his soul, and you cannot get his soul unless you can get his money. As God could not give Himself to mankind until He gave His Son in material form, man cannot give himself to God until he gives God his best material gift—his gold. A new emphasis should be placed on the spiritual value of material gifts to the Church. The financial question is not simply a material question; it is a spiritual question that can be met only by giving from love. "God so loved . . ."

ELON LETTER.

THE MINISTERIAL STUDENT IN COLLEGE.

(An address before the North Carolina College Ministerial Association.)

I can never forget the disillusionment that came to me as a college student when I came into a personal association with ministerial students. In our home, in our Church, and in our community the minister had been placed on a pedestal in our thinking. He was considered different from other men, not deified, but made sacred, and not thought of as capable of the appetites, passions and sins of other men.

When I came to college and was thrown into personal association with ministerial students, and learned that they were but ordinary human beings like the rest of us, my disillusionment was keen. From that day to this I have had a great sympathy for the ministerial student. His position is a most difficult one. The ministerial student grows in grace as well as in the knowledge and admonition of the Lord like the rest of us, but the difficulty is that the average student of the college has such an exalted opinion of the minister that he expects too much of the ministerial student.

I am glad at this time to say a word to a group of young men who have chosen the ministry for their life-work, coming from the several colleges of our State, and as one who appreciates the ministry most earnestly to express a few convictions that have come to me through the years.

The first of these convictions is that a man should not enter the ministry if he can possibly stay out of it. He should have an experience similar to Paul's, "Woe is me if I preach not the gospel." When a man comes to an experience like this, he may well pause and pray earnestly for the divine call. Men may select engineering because they think it will bring them social preferment and an increased bank account. And similarly they may select medicine, or law, or teaching, or business. It may be a sad day for the Church when ministers decide to devote themselves to the Christian ministry on the basis of any such considerations.

And yet, I remember several instances of young men telling me that they had chosen the ministry because they liked the deference that was paid the ministry in the community, and did not believe that the persons whom a minister had served through his life would permit him to suffer in his old age. I have watched the career of these young men. Most of them have dropped out of the ministry already, and those who are still in it have made a practical failure.

My second conviction is that when a man has decided that he cannot be satisfied except in the ministry, he should subject his decision to the most rigid scrutiny and approval of his fellows. If he has been active in the Christian work and his fellows have given him preferment in the way of Christian leadership, that is evidence of fitness for the ministry. However, a great many fine Christian laymen have made shipwreck of the ministry, because they esteemed the fact that they were in the position of leadership in the Church sufficient evidence that they would find a similar preferment and success in the ministry itself. Interest in Christian work and the fact that preferment has come in such work may not be taken indiscriminately as evidence of fitness for the ministry. A young man who has the sense of vocation for the ministry should consult his minister, his parents, the leaders of the Church, and particularly his associates of the same age, both young men and young women. When he has a practical unanimous approval from these several groups, he may reasonably expect success in his work.

My third conviction is that the ministry requires in this day a most thorough preparation. Sometimes the call to the ministry comes late in life, and preparation has to be necessarily curtailed. But a young man in the flush of his manhood who is unwilling to undertake the laborious years of preparation which are necessary in this day of general intelligence for success in the ministry may well conclude that his call is spurious. There was a time when a college education was sufficient for success in the ministry. That was a day when only lawyers, physicians and ministers were educated. But today college graduates are every where. Not only are college graduates plentiful, but laymen in the Churches are holders of graduate and professional degrees in great numbers. I remember a few years ago speaking in a Church in an American city, in the residential section, where the minister informed me that 90 per cent of the congregation held bachelor degrees and more than 50 per cent held masters or doctors degrees. Manifestly, a Church of this kind must have a minister who has made thorough preparation.

After giving expression to these three convictions and to my sympathetic attitude toward the young minister in college, may I be allowed to add a word of advice? Forget that you are ministers in training and just decide to be men, Christian men. Enter into the life of the college in a whole-hearted way. Never sacrifice Christian convictions or principles to be a good fellow or popular. Approval will come to the young minister who thus lives among his fellows.

I have one other thing that I would like to say: that those who decide upon the ministry after they have entered college, according to my observation, have a better chance of impressing their fellows with the genuineness of their decision, and a larger likelihood of success in the ministry, when they have actually entered upon this work. I think this fact is due to a weakness in human nature and not to any weakness in the young man who has decided upon the ministry before he comes to college. The weakness to which I have reference is to rate down any man who aspires to leadership until that man, so to speak, has come up out of the ranks of actual living. After a man has established himself as a real Christian man in the college community and then decided to enter the ministry, his fellows applaud him. However, if he comes to college already decided to be a minister the feeling of his fellows is to rate him down until he has established himself. There is perhaps a further reason for this anomalous situation: that the man who decides after entering college to become a minister does so in full knowledge of the intellectual and spiritual demands upon him, whereas the man who decides before entering college does not have this perspective.

W. A. HARPER.

A PRESCRIPTION FOR A REVIVAL.

In the judgment of Dr. R. A. Torrey, the following prescription for a revival never failed to work: "(a) Let a few Christians get right with God, which is the first essential; (b) let them bind themselves together to pray for a revival until God opens the heavens and comes down; (c) let them put themselves at the disposal of God, for Him to use. Are we willing to pay the price for a revival of the Lord's work?"

The quotation above is from an article in the Presbyterian of the South, written by Dr. S. R. Diehl. In the opinion of Dr. Diehl, the greatest problem of the Church is not doctrinal, not financial, not in the inability to find a forgiving God; the greatest problem is in finding penitent men. No publican cries today: "God be merciful to me, a sinner." Sin, as a defect, does not loom large in the thinking of today. We are all very good fellows for our age when we consider our origin! Yet the most essential condition for fellowship with God rests on an honest confession: "I acknowledge my transgression, and my sin is ever before me."

A good man is the best friend, and therefore soonest to be chosen, longer to be retained; and indeed never to be departed with, unless he ceases to be that for which he was chosen.—Jer. Tayior.

BEGINNING WITH GOD.

II.

In the beginning, God—did what? Created a universe—all things. "All things came into being through Him, and apart from Him nothing that now exists came into being" (John 1:3). This writer likes to gaze at and contemplate a great machine of any kind; and as I stand and look and think, I find myself asking, "Where did it begin?" In some man's mind. And then a second question, "Where did his mind begin?" In the mind omniscient, without limit. And God said, "Let us make man" (Gen. 1:26). Man says, "God, my Maker, made me" (Job 35:10). So, how much more do we like to look and muse upon some part of His creation, especially man, His masterpiece? And as we meditate, we say, "I began with God."

No wonder King David one day, while thinking on his origin, said, with rapture and praise, "I am fearfully and wonderfully wormy substance . . . and members were not hid from Thee when I was made in secret . . . when as yet there was none of them" (Psa. 139:14-16). How sublime and how suggestive such a thought! The king says, "Too wonderful for him is such knowledge" (verse 6). At this climax and with this conception of such a Master Builder (in the beginning God created), let us begin with Him; take Him into our confidence in all of our undertakings. Broad and sweeping application, you say? Yes, but none too much so, I think.

When this thought was first so indelibly impressed upon my mind, never shall I forget the time and place and the dear one who gave birth to this thought to me. I was just a little boy. One bright spring morning our mother said to us, "Children, let us make a garden today." Then began my inquiry. I said, "How can we make a garden, mother, with nothing to make it with?" No tools, not even a garden hoe and unable then to buy one. For we had lost our father and six uncles—all we had—in the Civil War, leaving six widows with orphan children to care for.

My mother was a thrifty woman and a good provider. So she managed by sewing for people to have her garden plowed one time. In my mind I can see her now, and hear her say, as she picks up my father's old shoe hammer, "Come on, children. With this hammer and the Lord to go with us and to help us, we can make and have a good garden." She said, "I always begin with Him as my Partner in all I do, and so far He has never failed me." Sure enough, He did not, for with only the shoe hammer and the Lord, we had one of the best gardens that year in that section, and raised some of the largest cabbages I ever saw grow anywhere, sold a load of the same, and bought for me the first pair of "store" shoes I ever had.

How broad the application! How suggestive! We love to think of good and great mothers, but how many such do we know of apart from not only beginning their life with God, but ending it with Him? Such was true of the good and noble Queen Victoria. When just a child, on learning that she was a princess and would some day be queen upon the throne of England, at once fell upon her knees and, with her little hands uplifted toward heaven, said: "Oh, God, then please help me to be humble, and good, and keep me so, for here and now I begin with Thee. If I am to be queen of so great a people, you must be my King, be with and go with me."

Such was true with the mother of the Wesleys, John and Charles. She began her life with God, and thus began, naturally, theirs—the source of the great Methodist Church. And no less so with the good and noble mother of the great preacher, evangelist, and builder, Dwight L. Moody. How convincing, how touching are his words in his first letter to his mother when just a boy in Chicago. He had gone there to work—a thousand miles away from home: "Oh, mother, please follow me, your son, with your prayers, so that I may never depart from your teaching—the lessons I learned at your knee in my early childhood about trusting God and loving Him. I thank you, mother, and I thank God for such a good mother, who started my life with Him; for, as you know, I am confronted, night and day, here in Chicago with many and various temptations."

Such a "good beginning" is invaluable true, relative not only to the lives of good and great women, but great men as well. Such was the secret of the great and outstanding men of the Bible, viz: Moses, Joseph, Samuel, John the Baptist and Timothy. They began and ended their lives with God. This truth very fittingly applies to each division and period of time. How natural and how important, at the close of the old year, with its opportunities for being good and doing good gone; and while reflecting upon the same, for us, as we stand between the two, the old year and the new year, to make new resolutions.

At this double viewpoint (1930 and 1931), both retrospective and prospective, as we saw our "old friend" die and the "new one" live (for time is a great friend, but like others, we can abuse it and lose it, or wisely use it and keep it). How shall we begin each one of the twelve divisions of this year? How shall we commence each week? How and with whom start the day, and how close it? "As for me and my house, we will serve the Lord." "At evening, morning and at noon will I pray . . . and cast my burden upon Him, and He shall sustain me."

"It is a good thing to give thanks unto the Lord, to sing praises to His name, to show forth His loving-kindness in morning, and his faithfulness every night." "Then when I awake I am still with Him." Then, when and where shall we begin our years and months and weeks and days, and where begin our prayers? At the beginning-place—the throne of grace, where we are invited to come to obtain mercy and find grace to help in every time of need. "But he that cometh to God must believe that He is upon His throne," for without faith it is impossible to please Him. (Heb. 11:6.)

LEADERSHIP SCHOOLS.

A joint leadership training school of the Holland and Holy Neck Christian Churches was held at Holland, March 8th to 13th. This school had an enrollment of about forty and an average attendance of twenty-five. Fourteen were granted full credit for the courses pursued, four from Holland and ten from Holy Neck. The courses offered were "The New Testament" and "The Teacher." The former course was taught by Rev. F. C. Lester and the latter by Rev. H. S. Hardcastle. Miss Jewel Truitt was the dean of the school and kept everything moving in good order, and also had charge of the worship period at the opening of the school.

Dr. N. G. Newman, who was scheduled to teach the New Testament course, was taken ill while on a trip to visit his daughter in South Carolina and was unable to participate in the school. However, the school was very fortunate in having Bro. Lester and Bro. Hardcastle as teachers, and the service which they rendered in this capacity was most heartily appreciated.

The closing service was characterized by a series of testimonies expressing appreciation for the school and its value. Many expressed the hope and the desire that the school would be repeated next year.

A PRAYER.

Forever, O Lord, Thy word is sure. We know it will not return unto Thee void. Depending upon Thy word, the nations shall not fail, but find therein the way of peace and security. Give to Thy servants understanding. Teach us good judgment and knowledge. It is time, O God, for the organized Church to let Thy Spirit rule. Dear Father, keep Thine own true, sensitive to discern evil, diligent to fortify Thy Church against the insidious tendency to absorb and assimilate the ways of the world. Cleanse Thy temple and make it a place where communion shall be real and fellowship unrestrained. In Jesus' name and for His sake. Amen.

THE DAY OF PRAYER.

"The 'Day of Prayer' has come and gone, but February 20th will be long remembered," says the Bulletin of the Foreign Mission Council, "as a day when the women of the world joined in prayer for the advancement of the kingdom of God. Accounts of the observance of the day in various parts of the world are coming to this office every day. Over $5,000 has been received for Christian literature for women and children, and the seven Women's Union Christian Colleges of the Orient."

The women never fail of a program when they undertake a service in sheer love of their Lord. They are leading the men and the rest of the world in missionary education and teaching. This, indeed, is a most happy omen, for it means no let-up in this spiritual task that our Lord entrusted to His Church until that task is accomplished. The women are leading, which means that they will lead others into the light that they have, a light which shines out in their own lives and carries its beams and benefits to peoples and fields afar.

The Bulletin says that the last "Day of Prayer," February 20th, was also "more widely observed by the young people than ever before. One group of young people in Emporia, Kans., counted among its number students of many lands who offered prayer 'each in his own tongue.' The next 'World Day of Prayer' will be observed on February 12, 1932. The program for this day has already been prepared by Miss Helen Tupper, a teacher in Isabella Thoburn College, of Lucknow, India. Miss Tupper is an Indian graduate of this college."

Possibly the 1932 day will have even a more thrilling story to tell than that of 1931. "The kingdom of heaven," said our Lord, "is like a grain of mustard seed which grows to great proportions." In the divine task of linking together souls and societies around the world to pray for world-wide salvation is truly a work of might and magnitude which appeals to the imagination and challenges the heart of mankind. WHERE TO SEE JESUS.

Two years ago last spring, on the afternoon before Easter, I was in the town of Bethlehem, in which Jesus was born. I was sated and disillusioned at the attempts at reverence for "holy" spots in the Church of the Nativity. When we try to walk by sight through the man-made trapings and superficial sanctities of places where our Lord has been, we do not see Him. He is often hidden from us by the very buildings and chanting priests, by the lamps and icons and crucifixes, yes, and by the very places which human longing has fixed as the heaven-marked spots where His bodily presence tarried. This is why Galilee today, with all cities gone, claims no fixed shrine of memory and offers you no holy places marked by man, but satisfies your soul instead with the blue shimmering sea, the fields and God's everlasting hills where Jesus walked and taught and healed.

So I hurried from the Church in Bethlehem which marks the spot where Jesus was born and where men have tried to anchor Him in stuffy halls with stone and masonry, and fled up the narrow declivitous streets of the town to the high crest above Bethlehem. Here I saw Jesus.

With the sun setting behind me, I looked across the strangely domed roofs of the little city, across the great Church, across the hillside slopes where the shepherds watched nineteen centuries ago, across the storied fields of Boaz, beyond the Jordan valley and the purpling mountains of Moab, and in imagination, on to the far-away lands from which I had recently come; to India with its depressed and under-fed millions; to Ceylon and the East Indies with their tropical beauty and their restless, unsatisfied throngs; to China where humanity is cruelly massed and where famine and pestilence and the ravages of war bring stark fear to the people; to Japan with its toilers, its poverty and its baffling transitions; then on to the dear homeland of America where Christ has offered us all and where we have taken Him with so little seriousness.

And as I stood there above Bethlehem, where Jesus was born so many centuries ago, and looked out across the great world and saw Him walking unheeded, in yearning and suffering, among the countless peoples of the earth, with His aching, loving heart, the verses of that searching poem of William Reed Dunroy came to me:

Christ is walking through the streets,
Looking in each face He meets—lovingly.
Not alone in Church He stands,
Where suppliant kneels with folded hands;
Not alone in the closet, where
He lifts the load of human care:
But in the busy haunts of life,
In the midst of toil and strife,
Walks He with His bleeding feet,
Walks He where the people meet;
But they scorn Him—pass Him by,
And in their hearts they blindly cry:
"Crucify! Crucify!"

MISSIONARY MEETING.

The Woman's Missionary Society of Mt. Bethel Christian Church held its regular monthly meeting at the home of Mrs. J. T. Stewart. The program was in charge of the president, Mrs. J. T. Stewart, who called the society to order. Scripture was read by Miss Violet McCollum; prayer by Miss Ethel Friddle; song, "Let the Lower Lights be Burning." The roll was called by the assistant secretary, Mrs. Clara Moricle, and responded to with interesting news of Turkey. Miss Violet McCollum read a paper on "Social Service Work of Turkey"; Miss Ethel Friddle read an original paper on "Mission Work in Arizona"; Mrs. J. W. McCollum read a paper on "Our Guest from Turkey"; Miss Essie Mae Truitt read an original paper on "Religion and School Work in Turkey."

After the program, the society decided to put on a campaign to secure subscriptions for the Christian Herald and McCall's Magazine. The hostess, assisted by Miss Irma Moricle, served delicious cake, pickle and hot coffee. The next monthly meeting will be with Mrs. L. P. Rippy.

ESSIE MAE TRUITT,
Corresponding Secretary.

MISSIONARY MEETING.

Friday night, March 13th, the following program was rendered by the Monticello Missionary Society, Mrs. M. C. Faucette leading:

Hymn, "Joy to the world"; poem, by Mrs. Willie Rudd; Bible reading, Isa. 6:1-8, by Miss Russel McKinney; prayer, Mrs. W. F. Burton; "Work of Paul Nelson in Turkey," Mrs. Dixon; "Paul of Tarsus, an American Missionary in Turkey," Mrs. J. E. Cumbre; "The Changing Attitude of Moslem to the Christian Gospel," Mrs. T. F. Faucette; "Turkey and Greece Abandon War Holidays," Mrs. Oscar Rudd; "Christianity and the Non-Christian Religions," Mrs. W. F. Burton; "The Mohammedan Religion," Mrs. D. E. Michael; "A Medical Missionary in Turkey," Mrs. W. R. McKinney; hymn, "O Zion, Haste"; benediction.

With Mrs. Michael and Mrs. Dixon serving refreshments, a social hour was enjoyed by all.

MISSION NEWS.

The Woman's Missionary Society of the Haw River Christian Church has recently reorganized, with a membership of twenty Willing Workers. The last meeting was at the home of Miss Emma Thomas, with Mrs. Roy Coulter as hostess.

We have a missionary meeting at the Church each fifth Sunday, with an out-of-town speaker. Mrs. J. W. Patton, of Elon College, N. C., was a very able speaker at our last Sunday's meeting. We are always glad to have her with us. We are looking forward to a very busy year, and we ask the prayers of the Christian people.

WHY?

BY REV. WARREN H. DENISON
Stewardship Secretary.

Have you thought why—

1. The United Stewardship Council of the United States and Canada took deliberate action at its last national session, as follows: "It is the conviction of the United Stewardship Council that the time is ripe for a nation-wide emphasis on Christian stewardship, and the council recommends that our respective communions so plan their programs as to unitedly give this emphasis in 1930-'31"?

2. So many of our great Christian leaders are writing so many books on Christian stewardship for all ages and classes—yes, more in the last five years than have been written in several times that many years previously?

3. Our own General Board, in its last session, officially called upon the presidents of our educational institutions, our denominational secretaries and officers, our Conference officials, and our local Church official boards to make a careful and thorough study of several real stewardship books?

4. The International Lesson Committee has placed very definite and frequent stewardship lessons in our Church school curriculum?

5. The United Stewardship Council has urgently requested all theological seminaries to place this subject in their curricula?

It is because—

1. They have come to believe, with a deep conviction, that there is wrapped up in this stewardship message many of the deepest things in the life of the Church and of its individual members; that it is not primarily a method of raising money, nor is its first purpose that of securing funds for Church enterprises, though it involves these, or it would not be stewardship; but it is a matter of spiritual life and power.

2. It is a necessary element in the development of the spiritual life of the Church's members. Christ must be Master of all of one's life, or none of it, for life is a unit and involves all one is and has—personality and possessions, purse and life. One's safe deposit box in the bank is under the same supreme control as one's head, heart and soul. The division of life into spiritual and secular areas has caused the spiritual wreckage of multitudes of lives of professed Christians. A high level of spiritual power cannot be attained while great areas of life are not placed under Christ's control.

3. The life of the local Church cannot be reasonably developed without this message being understood, believed and practiced by its membership. Only a few feel a personal responsibility to give any worth-while time, money, thought, energy to the development of the real life of the Church. Thousands have an attitude of "How little of these may I contribute and get by?" The teaching of Christian stewardship is essential for the better methods in Church work, for larger efficiency in program, as well as for deeper spiritual life. Stewardship has a spiritual dynamic secured from no other source. Giving is worship, not primarily a matter of paying a Church's bills. Stewardship is a high call to place God and the kingdom first in life.

4. It is earnestly believed that there will be no general or widespread revival until the stewardship note is incorporated in the actual life of the Church. When God's people become careless, wander from Him, lose His presence and power, He directs them to return by way, first, of property, their use of things, their payment of the tithe and offerings. The United States is rich beyond computation. Never has any people ever had so much property. Things have been piled in the forefront of our lives, but it must ever be the preacher, and not the promoter, who calls men to be rich.

5. Of the tremendous need for the re-enlistment of the present inactive members in the Church. This is one of our most difficult problems. So many will not give nor do, attend nor accept responsibility. The stewardship message and practice in a Church will re-enlist a larger percentage of the inactive members in service than all other agencies combined. "Where a man's treasure is, there his heart will be," said Jesus. Your non-paying members are your non-attending members. Failure to train the home and Church in regular, systematic, proportionate giving as an act of worship is the principal cause for the inactive lists.

7. Of the tremendous world-wide need, the doors open to the Church. Is not this the day of the Church's visitation? Opportunities never known before are today within our grasp. We have men and money to meet the challenges of Christ and His world. Our resources offer ample provision if the Church can be brought to recognize her stewardship of life, leadership, and money, and use them in the channels of the kingdom. The stewardship message and practice is as imperative as the Christian philosophy of life. It is a spiritual dynamic that will bring untold blessings to your Church and to yourself personally.

These are some of the reasons why every pastor, local Church, and official is called upon to adopt a real stewardship program of sermons, Church classes, Sunday School classes, reading contests, study of literature, pageants, etc.

STEWARDSHIP AND THE CHURCH.V.*MAKING THE CHURCH RESPONSIVE.

Do you and your Church believe what has been set forth in the former messages of this stewardship series? Let me ask just one question on the central thought from each foregoing presentation:

1. How many of your members are agreed that simple Church connection is Christianity but half expressed and realized?

2. How many are agreed that the Church's foremost task is to interpret and practice stewardship as it relates both to soul-caliber and to material Church progress?

3. How many are agreed that, without Pentecostal background, service can be neither effective nor divinely acceptable?

4. How many are agreed that in Abraham's tithe one of God's immutable purposes was signified, and that by Paul it was ratified in the light of Jesus' teaching?

Believing these things, God's "two or three" could win any local Church to the adoption of an every-member-paying-and-giving plan—the every-member-canvass plan, if you please, as officially employed by practically all denominations. To quote from the every-member-canvass manual of our own Church, this plan and what it implies "dignifies the missionary and Church cause. It applies business sense to the work of the kingdom. It has been thoroughly tested. It increases the number of contributors. It increases the amount given. It spiritualizes the Church and supplements the pastor's work. It helps both pastor and Church."

In the face of such a promising and comprehensive outlook for the Church, whose is the responsibility? Not the pastor's, except in an advisory sense! Church officers and leaders, to your task! A Church without the right sort of plans, both spiritual and administrative, and the right sort of boards willing to work the plans, to prove itself consistent with good stewardship, will provide at once this essential asset to a better Church development.

STUDIES IN WORLD FRIENDSHIP.

By JOHN LESLIE LOBINGIER.

In the spring and summer of each year, a number of new course-books come from the press having to do with the theme of missions and world friendship. These are often described as "the books of the year." Their appearance is awaited by leaders in thousands of Churches of various denominations, and they are used in Church school classes of all ages, in world friendship institutes, in vacation Church schools, in women's societies, and some of them as reading books in the home.

Such books are among the many evidences of the essential oneness of the Churches. They are prepared jointly by the representatives of a score of different denominations who work together with as much harmony as can be found within any single denomination. Authors are selected, regardless of denominational affiliation, simply on the basis of fitness for their task. And the books are used by all denominations and by inter-Church agencies as well. Regardless of the imprint that these "books of the year" may bear, they are our own as much as if the imprint had in it the words Congregational-Christian.

Each year at least two themes are chosen, one for homeland books and one for books on Christian work overseas. For the year 1931-'32 (the year is thought of as beginning in the summer), the themes are:

Foreign: "Christianity and the Rural Life of the World."

Home (for boys and girls): "Christianity and Rural Life in America"; (for young people and adults) "The Call to the Churches from the North American Home Missions Congress."

Why these themes? People are beginning to sense the importance of the great rural areas. Often in our thinking they have seemed to be neglected. The Jerusalem Conference of 1928 regarded this subject as of major importance; of the eight volumes devoted to the report of that great meeting, one is on "Missions and the Rural Problems." So much of the world is rural and so vital are its problems that it is fitting that all the foreign courses and some of the homeland courses should be concerned with rural life. One of the outstanding Christian gatherings of recent years was the home missions congress held last December in Washington, D. C. It is important that in some way the interchange of thought and experience and the findings of that gathering should be shared by a much larger number of people than the delegates to the congress. The new homeland study-books for young people and adults will make this possible.

The following descriptions are given for the benefit of readers who will use these books during the coming year and who want to make their plans intelligently in advance. One or two of the books have already appeared. The others, unless otherwise indicated, are scheduled to be published in April, May, or June, so as to be available for use in the various summer conferences and in vacation schools. Any of these books may be secured, when published, from the Pilgrim Press, 14 Beacon Street, Boston.

FOR YOUNG PEOPLE AND SENIORS.

1. "The Rural Billion," by Charles M. McConnell (cloth $1.00; paper, 60 cents), contains many interesting stories of farm and village life the world around. The author's experience has brought him into personal contact with the rural life of our own country and of a number of countries of the Orient as well. With this background of experience, he has given us a vivid picture of rural life and of the work of Christianity in these areas. Although listed also in the section for adults, it should be noted that this is written as a young people's book.

When this book is used for group study, the leader will need to have the "Young People's Course" (paper, 50 cents), based on it, prepared by Roy E. Burt. It includes discussion topics, suggested activities and worship services.

2. "God and the Census," by Robert N. McLean (cloth, $1.00; paper, 60 cents), as the unusual title suggests, tells how home missionaries have been trying to have God counted in new communities as well as old. The author shows how God must be counted also in the various areas of American life. Dr. McLean seems to be able to write effectively for every age; he has already given us splendid books for adults, and also for boys and girls, e. g., "That Mexican" and "Jumping Beans."

"A Leader's Manual" (paper, 50 cents), to accompany this book, has been prepared by Sue Weddell, including discussion problems, service activities and plans for study.

FOR INTERMEDIATES.

1. "Treasures in the Earth," by Fred Hamlin (cloth, $1.00; paper, 75 cents), contains many stories of both missionaries and nationals who have done significant work to bring people to understand the conditions that make for poor crops, poor health, and cramped and narrow lives, and thus to lead them toward better living conditions and the more abundant life. This may be used as a reading-book or as a source in the following course:

"The Church and the World's Farmers," by Mary Jenness (paper, 35 cents), is the type of short unit for intermediates that many have been wanting. It includes discussion questions, worship suggestions, and ideas for activities. It is planned for six sessions.

2. "The Adventures of Mr. Friend," by Harold B. Hunting (cloth, $1.00; paper, 75 cents), is a series of stories of various people in America, each of whom has in some rural situation proved himself to be a Mr. Friend. Most of the characters will be new to the reader. This may be used either as a reading-book or as the basis for a course. If used for group study, the leader will need a copy of the "Course for Leaders," prepared to accompany it. This "Course for Leaders" may not be ready until midsummer.

The new "World Service" program material for schools or for young people's departments is now ready. Its theme is "Our State Work." It includes two programs and suggestions for two others, prepared by Rev. Royal J. Montgomery, director of religious education for the State of Iowa. A copy has been sent to every enrolled world service school. Additional copies may be secured upon request.

Thirty-five "travel libraries," belonging to the Department of Missionary Education and World Friendship, are making the rounds of Churches. Each library contains ten books for various ages, packed in a good fiber box for shipping. It is kept by a Church one month, and there is no charge except transportation one way. Send in your request if you want one.—World Friendship Bulletin.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR NOTES.

Sunday, April 19, 1931.

TOPIC: "How Can Churches Work Together?"

SCRIPTURE READING: Acts 2:36-42, 47.

The remarkable spread of Christianity during the early history of the Church may be attributed largely to the unity of effort, belief and desire which prevailed among the followers of Jesus. Their energies were not divided because of disagreements; nor were their funds used to support a great number of organizations. The history of the rapid spread of Christianity is a story of great triumph for the Church. With the breaking away from the Catholic Church, with its form and power, came the beginning of dissension in the Church. If those great men who broke away from the Catholic Church had stood together, instead of fighting each other, much good would have resulted. The Church has never recovered from the serious handicap of that period of dissension and rivalry which marked the beginning of the Protestant Church.

Today, after hundreds of years of rivalry between Christian people of differing views, we are coming again to see the urgent need for unity among Christ's followers if they are to have power in the earth. The Federal Council of Churches, formed in 1908, is demonstrating the value of united Christian effort. More than twenty-two million people, representing 140,000 Churches of twenty-seven denominations are co-operating in the work of the Federal Council. The Federal Council sponsors religious services and messages by radio. It is interested in, and works in, the fields of education, evangelism and devotional life, the Church and social service, international justice and good will, friendliness between Jews and Christians, and race relations. The Federal Council is an economic advantage to the twenty-seven denominations related to it. It also is distinctive in that the work that it undertakes could not be done by each denomination separately. It is in the spirit of unity that we work in race relations and friendliness between peoples of differing religious views.

Today many Churches in smaller communities are co-operating in union services on Sunday evenings during the summer months. It is wholesome for Methodists ministers to preach in Christian Churches and for Christian ministers to preach in Baptist Churches. Communities that follow this practice of the interchange of pulpits and the co-operation of congregations are finding the way of unity in God's work.

Christian Endeavorers may co-operate with other young people's organizations in a number of ways. Recreational and social activities for all the young people of the town may be planned in smaller communities. All young people's groups may co-operate in sending representatives to State or county meetings of religious interest. Christian Endeavorers may make their ideals for a Christian brotherhood known and felt in Christian ways. They may give encouragement to any projects of community or Church that further the cause of unity and co-operation.

Sunday School Lesson

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE.

THE RICH MAN AND LAZARUS.

LESSON III—APRIL 19, 1931.

GOLDEN TEXT: "Lay up for yourself treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth consume, and where thieves do not break through nor steal."—Matt. 6:29.

LESSON: Luke 16:1-17:37.

TIME: January, A. D. 30, in the last three months of Christ's ministry.

PLACE: Peræa, the country east of the Jordan.

The parables of our last lesson (Luke 15) were spoken to the hostile scribes and Pharisees, critical of Christ because He gladly received the publicans and sinners who flocked to Him. The teachings of today's lesson (Luke 16-17) are mainly for the disciples (Luke 16:1, 17:1, 5, 22); but the Pharisees are in the background, and some of the instruction is addressed directly to them (Luke 16:14-17:20). Indeed, the parable of the rich man and Lazarus would have its special application to the Pharisees, who were well-to-do, rather than to the disciples, who were for the most part poor men, though Judas needed its lesson as much as any man in the world. Last week's parables taught the love of God, ever seeking the sinner and ever eager to receive him on his return. The main teaching of today's lesson is a warning against the one great sin of selfishness.

God and mammon. None of Christ's parables has been more diversely interpreted than that of the unrighteous steward. Its difficulty lies in its seeming commendation of sharp dealing. It is the story of a rascally steward of a rich household, whom his master suddenly required to hand in his accounts for auditing. The steward knew that he would be dismissed as soon as his peculations became known, and proceeded to make friends of his master's debtors by scaling down their various debts, some of them as much as one-half. "Their gratitude," said the steward to himself, "will lead them to take care of me after I am dismissed." Then Christ told how the master praised the unrighteous steward for his shrewdness, and Jesus Himself drew the lesson that His followers should make such a use of money that, when earthly things pass away, they should be received into the eternal homes. Christ bade His followers to be so faithful in the false riches of this world that true riches might be entrusted to their keeping, and warned them that they could not at the same time serve God and money (mammon—the Syriac word for wealth).

Lovers of money. The tenor of the parable of the unrighteous steward is shown by its effect on those lovers of money, the Pharisees, who heard it. They scoffed at Jesus, because He taught the impossibility of doing what they were trying to do, serve God and mammon at the same time. The expression, "lovers of money," gives the key to the problem. We cannot do without money; it is one of the most useful tools man has ever invented; it is concentrated and portable labor. Money is an embodiment of toil, the means by which it is stored up and passed from hand to hand. The only harm in money is when we cease to use it as a convenient agent and make an idol of it. Christians are to get money and use money, but never to fall in love with it, as the Pharisees did. Such idolatry is one of the most deadly forms of selfishness.

Selfishness in the Home. In condemning divorce for the sake of remarriage, and calling it by the plain term of adultery, our Lord struck at the chief cause of unhappiness in homes—that is, sel-

ADVENTUROUS YOUTH. By Charles W. Brewbaker. Fleming H. Revell Co.; $1.25; pp. 126.

A friend of youth writes in this book out of a heart of sympathy for youth. Dr. Brewbaker's long experience as an officer in his denomination has given him a rare opportunity to see youth at its best. In his book he has drawn on his sympathy and his experience to give an interpretation that heartens. Youth are different, but they are better. To them, life is an adventure—an adventure in Christian service, in vocational and avocational pursuit, in home-making, in immortal destiny. You will want to read this book and enjoy a beautiful portrait of the adventurous spirit that keeps the world young and guarantees its progress.

THE HOME AND CHRISTIAN LIVING. By Percy R. and Myrtle H. Hayward. The Westminster Press; 75 cents; pp. 150.

Here is a book that it would be difficult to recommend too highly to parents, Church school leaders, and young people. It is simple, sane, practical, and yet idealistic. Its conception of religion as touching all experience is especially to be commended, and the concluding chapter on what to do when the children have grown up is a gem. Here is a multum in parvo. W. fishness. All passion and licentiousness have their roots in self-seeking. Those who indulge in them are not planning for the welfare of others; they take no thought for the purity and strength of society; they are solely concerned with a transient pleasure that immediately becomes a curse. The foundation of happy marriage and of a blessed home is unselfishness.

Lazarus and Dives. "In none of his parables does the Saviour paint the truth which he desires to impress upon the hearts and consciences of men in more vivid and striking colors than in this one."—Principal Alexander Stewart.

(From Peloubet's Select Notes.)

In the story of Lazarus and Dives, one finds first a rich man, self-centered and self-satisfied—well represented by the Pharisee of the time, for he was clothed in purple and fine linen, such as only the very wealthy could afford. The next person shown in the picture is a very poor man—one so poor that even the crumbs from the former's table would have been more than welcome to satisfy his hunger. What a contrast! What an opportunity for the rich man! Yet he failed to grasp it. Do we always use our opportunities to do good? If we do, we are building happiness for ourselves, both here and hereafter.

If we do not, there is another story to be told. We find that both of these men died. Lazarus went home to peace in Abraham's bosom, while Dives reaped the reward of lost opportunity. Whether hell be a place of eternal fire or eternal strickenness of conscience, makes little difference, for it calls for the water that will quench the fire of anguish.

And last, but not least, is the fact brought out that the opportunity that is lost can never be recalled. Conditions have not changed since the time of this parable. The great gulf which existed between Lazarus and Dives still exists, and "they that would pass" it find themselves unable to do so.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE
One of our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy.

"If thou wilt make the Almighty thy treasure . . . then shalt thou delight thyself in the Almighty . . . and thou shalt make thy prayer unto Him and He will hear thee."—Job 22: 25-27.

MONDAY.

OUR SUPREME TASK.

"David said, One thing have I desired of the house of the Lord all the days of my life, to behold the beauty of the Lord and to inquire in His temple."—Psa. 27:4.

David, no doubt, is thinking about the temple of his own life and soul, of which the earthly temple is a symbol. There is nothing so gracious and satisfying as earnest and prayerful worship at divine services at the sanctuary, and all the more so is there nothing like the calm of drawing near to God in every-day life, resting under a sense of His presence. David tried this, and his testimony was, "I have set the Lord always before me." The poet said:

To love some one more dearly every day,
To help a wandering child to find his way,
To ponder o'er a noble thought and pray,
And smile when evening falls—
This is my task.

To follow truth as blind men follow light,
To do my best from dawn of day till night,
To keeping my heart fit for His holy sight,
And answer when He calls—
This is my task.

And when my Saviour by and by to meet,
When faith hath made her task on earth complete,
And lay my homage at the Master's feet,
Within the Jasper walls—
This crowns my task."

Prayer.—The head of the family leading the Lord's Prayer.

TUESDAY.

THE SUPREME EXPERIENCE.

"One thing I know."—John 9:25.

No one could defraud or cajole the blind man out of the blessing he had. There is a friend in the hospital. Four weeks ago he was almost "stone deaf." The physicians removed his tonsils and now he hears as well as any one. No one can defraud him out of the blessing that has come to him.

We are told that Benjamin Franklin sowed plaster in a farmer's wheat field in a way so as to spell "This has been plastered." When the wheat matured, that portion showed for itself.

Our lives should be so true that what we do and say should stand against all cajoling opponents, unshaken by difficulties, and a fortress for the soul, so that they who see us may read unmistakingly, "He is a Christian."

WEDNESDAY.

THE SUPREME SERVICE.

"One thing I do."—Phil. 3:14.

The blessing of getting things done is the doing of it. We have to bring anything to pass by doing it. Even progress will not be answered unless we set out to answer them as far as we can ourselves.

Dr. Adam Clark was noted for early rising. A young preacher asked him: "Doctor, do you pray about it?" "No," was the reply; "I just get up." Dr. Elliot said, "No one has a right to find life uninteresting or unrewarding who sees within the sphere of his own activity a wrong he can remedy, or within himself one wrong he can hope to overcome."

Prayer.—Our Father in heaven, may we so live this day that we can commend ourselves to others; that we may be such an one as we would wish to choose as a friend. May we cut no standards to please others. May we never make a move we can't approve. May our names never be touched with shame. We like good and true men. May we strive to be like that. In Christ's name. Amen.

THURSDAY.

IDEALS AND ATTITUDES FOR EVERY DAY.

"Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."—Lev. 19:18.

"I have given you an example, that ye should do as I have done unto you."—John 13:14-15.

The teachings and spirit of Jesus clearly show that the effective force for the accomplishment and safeguarding of ideals and righteousness and the kingdom of God within us is the harmonizing of differences between us and our relations and environments, and the overcoming of evil and emanating the spirit of good will to all. Jesus was consistently animated by this principle, and He vindicated the life of love and service in spite and in the face of every circumstance, favorable or unfavorable, and it mattered not how unfavorable. His constant emphasis on forgiveness and charges to love enemies, and His prayer on the cross. "Father, forgive them," is the climax of such an example.

Prayer.—Our Father in heaven, we desire to be the embodiment of Christian love as far as it is possible for us to be. Help us to see the way and love even as Thou hast loved us, and to trust in Thee. All will be well and we will give Thee the praise. Amen.

FRIDAY.

THINKING.

"Think on these things."—Phil. 4:8.

Paul urges us to look for the things that are true, and honest, and just; pure and lovely, and good, and think on these, lest thinking on evil or unprofitable things, we shall miss the mark and be lost. We, without fail, become most like what we think about.

Did you ever think? Try sitting down in your room, all alone, and think for thirty minutes. A son was once a bit obstreperous towards his father and showed thoughtless ingratitude. The father said, "Son, think. Go to your room, lock the door, sit down and think. Think thirty minutes. When the time is up, come out." He obeyed. At first he could think of nothing. Finally he forced himself to think of something, and his father came in mind. He thought on his father—that he was older, that he was good, that he was respected in the community, etc. When he thought thirty minutes was up, he looked at the time, and he had been there only ten minutes. "O Gee!" how could he ever think for twenty minutes; but he tried and he thought on his ways and of some great men that were more or less heroes to him, and how he would like to be like them, etc., and he became lost in his thoughts, only to find that more than his time had expired and he came out with a fired ambition to be something great in life. "I thought on my ways and turned my feet," said the psalmist. I believe that many, perhaps a majority of folks, never stop to think at all, just drift, take things as they come, and act impulsively, therefore without purpose of mine and too desultory. Take time to be alone a while each day and do some real thinking.

Prayer.—Father of us all, whatever we have received, or whatever we have heard, or whatever we have seen, or whatever we know to be good, impel us by Thy Spirit to think on these things and shine for the Master. In His name. Amen.

SATURDAY.

ONE THOUGHT TODAY.

"Seek ye first the kingdom of God and His righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you."—Matt. 6:33.

"To thine own self be true, and it must follow, as the night the day, thou canst not then be false to any man."—Shakespeare.

Prayer.—Dear Father, whatever each day may bring to us of life, give us the spirit, the grace, and the courage to bring to it all that we can. Then when the day is gone, we may say, "Well done," because we have done our best. Amen.

SUNDAY.

WALKING IN HIS PATH.

"He will teach us of His ways, and we will walk in His paths."—Isa. 2:1-5.

The religion of the Sabbath Day is one fact and struggle to do that. How will you spend it?

Jesus produced the gospel of "I am the way," and the ethical content of His message was to "follow me."

We may go to the Church and worship, but if it ends there we are no more than the "temple traders." For such is no more honest, no more amiable, no more generous, no more self-controlled than if one had never gone. A child once said to its father, "Daddie, is the sermon done?" "No, my son," said the wise father; "it is said, but not done." Doing Christianity is our path every day, and Christ has shown us the way.

Prayer.—Dear Father, may our lives show forth His beauty; our lips speak His praise, and what we do each day make faith more beautiful. Lead us into Thy plain paths and Thy more excellent ways. This we ask for Jesus' sake. Amen.

HOPEWELL, VA.

Chief of Police Charles H. Shepherd, who has brought about many improvements in conditions in Hopewell in two years, originated one of the greatest pieces of constructive work perhaps seen in local communities. He rounded up the many boys seen idling in the alleys and lounging on street corners on the Sabbath Day and gathered them in his office in the courthouse and instructed these neglected and oftentimes needy children in cleanliness and decency, and then organized them into a Sabbath School.

The chief tells that he was induced to do this from reading a report of the judge of the juvenile court in New York City, who stated that of the 25,000 boys and girls passing before him annually, he found in one year but two answered his inquiry as ever having attended a Sunday School. The judge of the juvenile court of Hopewell, T. J. Blankenship, donated the funds for the operation of the school, while later, as the number grew, the Salvation Army sent in one teacher and Hoge Union contributes one.

When Hoge Union recently held a medal contest in the Salvation Army hall, with a class of girls from that Sunday School, the chief's school was invited as guests and asked to contribute one number on the program, and it was inspiring to hear this large group of boys lustily singing, "Where There's Drink There's Danger."—From Virginia Call.

REV. JOSEPH W. FIX, Preacher.

PRAYER.

BY REV. J. W. FIX.

"And they prayed."—Acts 1:24.

A more beautiful tribute could not be paid to any people or Church than to say of them that "they prayed." This text is very descriptive of the manner of the early Church. They always remembered to pray, for they had been taught by their master that "men ought always to pray, and not to faint." To those early Christians, prayer was not only a spiritual exercise, but a mode of worship. Indeed, prayer was a vital part of life. They could not live without prayer, for without it they were helpless and hopeless. They felt a pressing necessity to "lift up their eyes unto the hills" from which their help and strength would come. Indeed, the early Christians believed in talking to God and being guided by Him. On one occasion, the book of Acts tells us, when they had prayed, the whole house was shaken and the Holy Spirit came upon them in a powerful fashion and the apostles became witnesses of the resurrection of the Lord Jesus Christ.

But prayer has not been removed from the vocabulary of the Christian, for even today men pray and come to realize the truth of Tennyson's "King Arthur," who said, "More things are wrought by prayer than this world dreams of." On the subject of prayer, the Master had much to say. He taught the disciples that beautiful, simple prayer which we oft pray, saying, "Our Father, who art in heaven." And then he sets forth a method of rightly seeking God in prayer. He sets forth the way of approach by emphasizing a right place. He said men need to go into a closet and shut the door, and there be apart from the world, where all is quiet and peaceful and where the eye cannot see anything save God. He realized that in such a place of holiness, the ear of God would become attuned to the voice of man in a better way than if he prayed without the consideration of the physical environment. Jesus recommended such a place of prayer because He knew the ease with which men yielded to distractions. Man's mind is oft nlike quicksilver, rolling here and there, this way and that way.

A place of prayer, be it at one's desk, behind the door of a closet, kneeling at one's bed or sitting by one's fireside, is of great value in helping one to get into direct relationship with God through prayer. One reason why more of us do not have our closets of prayer is that we do not fully appreciate the value of prayer.

The text from the first chapter of the Book of Acts answers for us certain questions that arise from the statement made about them. "They prayed."

1. Why did they pray? They prayed because God invited them to pray. The writer of Proverbs says, "In all thy ways, acknowledge Him, and He shall direct thy paths." "Men ought always to pray, and faint not." "Ask, and ye shall receive." "Pray without ceasing." And so "they prayed."

They prayed because they were at their best when praying. Prayer not only enables us to talk with God, but puts us in an attitude whereby we may hear Him talk to us. They prayed because the Jerusalem Church was passing through a great crisis, and the best solution was to pray, during those tragic hours and days, for protection and guidance. The early Christians prayed because they knew their Church could not make any progress unless they sought power from on high. They prayed because they knew it was essential that they should recognize Him who taught them to pray. They prayed because they were promised that the effective, fervent prayers of righteous men and women would avail the Church much.

They prayed because they had come to know that the best gift they could give the Church was prayer. Their time, talent, moneys and other gifts of a material nature had definite places of value, but these could not take the place of "fervent, effectual prayer."

We do not wonder that the early Church made much progress, for its members prayed. Those marvelous experiences that came to the Church resulted from the prayers of men and women who knew how to pray.

2. When did they pray? Some people claim that the time wherein a person should pray ought to be left to the individual. Some thing we ought not to pray unless we feel like it. The worldly minded man believes that prayer is non-essential, save in cases of trouble and deep emergency; but not so with the spiritually minded man. He believes that one should "pray without ceasing." Such a habitual experience puts man in constant communication with God, who is his Helper in time of trouble. Constant prayer draws us nearer to God and makes us to be a part of his great plan and purpose.

One of the outstanding qualities of the early Christian was his serious recognition of the sacredness of prayer. They were not thoughtless, careless or indifferent about their prayer life. Rather, they found time to pray, and "they prayed."

The great trouble with modern professing Christians is that they do not take time for this vital act of communion with God. If we would be as the early Christians, soul-winners and close disciples of the Master, we must find time to pray. One cannot be self-centered and Christ-centered. There must be periodic occasions when men must stop all else and pray.

It has been stated of General Gordon, popularly known as Chinese Gordon, that he always found time to pray, and when he prayed "he put his handkerchief at the opening of his tent, and thus told the world that he was alone with God and was not to be disturbed."

Lincoln, Wilson, Gladstone and Fosch were all men who found time to pray. When they prayed, God had an opportunity to guide the nations as they should be. Let us spend much time in prayer.

3. What happened when they prayed. When they prayed, something happened. Something always happens when men pray earnestly, as did these early churchmen. God is a rewarder of them that diligently seek Him, and "No good thing will He withhold from them that walk uprightly." What happened when "they prayed"? Their faith was increased and their spiritual lives enriched. They received power when the Holy Ghost came upon them. When one prays, he is always quickened and rightly led. When Christians are quickened, the Church and her work toward the advancement of the kingdom is quickened. Prayer always brings results.

When missionary zeal begins to languish, when treasuries are empty—prayer does things. It quickens the missionary interest and fills the treasurers' hands. When the pews are empty and the laborers are few, and the Church is not thriving, and no longer men are being born into the kingdom, the only solution is prayer; for "prayer changes things." The promise is from Him, and reads: "Ask of me, and I shall give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession." God is still waiting to be gracious. If the pentecostal power is lacking, it is because we are not praying.

INTEREST IN FELLOWSHIP OF PRAYER.

The revival of interest in the spirit of worship and the devotional life has been effectively illustrated by the extraordinary demand during the Lenten season for the little manual of personal devotions, known as "The Fellowship of Prayer," issued by the Federal Council of Churches.

Within the six weeks just preceding March 1st, no fewer than 670,000 copies of this handbook were sold, including several editions that bore special denominational imprints. In a great number of cases, local Churches ordered copies enough to place in the hands of all their members. The circulation of the handbook was not confined to this country, but reached into Canada, where the United Church of Canada ordered a special edition to be sent to all its pastors.

The booklet for the Fellowship of Prayer, which is an annual Lenten feature developed by the Federal Council of Churches during the last several years, was prepared this year by Rev. Clarence H. Wilson, D. D., a Congregational pastor, who has given much attention to the development of the spirit of worship.

The poet Edgar Guest sings a sermon in his song now and then. This, for instance: "The Church is all that lifts us from the coarse and selfish mob; but the Church that is to prosper needs the layman on the job. For it's not by song or sermon that the Church's work is done; it's the laymen of the country who must carry on for God."—Christian Law.

ROBINSON.

Mrs. Mary A. Robinson died at her home, in Graham, N. C., March 7, 1931, in her 84th year, and her son George Robinson died March 8, 1931, aged 59 years. Mrs. Robinson was a member of New Providence Christian Church. She was very kind and delighted in ministering to others. Her son, George, was a member of the Graham Presbyterian Church. He bore a record of having missed being present at Sunday School only one Sunday—the Sunday before he died—in six years.

A double funeral service was held for mother and son at the Presbyterian Church, Graham, N. C. The writer and Rev. Mr. Harrop conducted the service, and their bodies were laid to rest in Linwood Cemetery. May the Comforter of broken hearts comfort the bereaved.

SKINNER.

The members of the Ladies' Benevolent and Social Union of Suffolk Christian Church deeply deplore the passing of our beloved sister and co-worker, Mrs. Georgie Howell Skinner, whom our Heavenly Father, in His infinite wisdom, saw fit to remove from our midst on February 25, 1931.

Mrs. Skinner was a true friend and a worthy member of our Union. We cannot realize that she has gone to her rest. May her soul rest in peace, and may comfort and strength be given abundantly to the bereaved family. "To live in the hearts of those we leave behind is not to die." In our loneliness and grief we may say:

"Life! We've been long together,
Through pleasant and cloudy weather.
'Tis hard to part when friends are dear—
Perhaps 'twill cost a sigh, a tear.
Then steal away, give little warning—
Choose thine own time.
Say not 'Good-night,' but in some brighter clime

Bid us 'Good-morning.' "

ROGERS.

Resolutions of respect and sympathy adopted by the Baracca Class of the Suffolk Christian Church, Suffolk, Va.:

Whereas, God, in His divine wisdom, has seen fit to take unto Himself our friend and comrade, R. Frank Rogers; and,

Whereas, R. Frank Rogers was for a great number of years a member of the Baracca Class of the Suffolk Christian Church, and was faithful and loyal in his devotion; and,

Whereas, by his comradeship, his love for his Church and Sunday School work, honesty, loyalty, faithfulness and true friendship, endeared himself to the members of this class; and,

Whereas, his happiness and pleasure in life was found in unselfish service and help to others; and,

Whereas, he was held in high esteem, regard and close affection by all who knew him and beloved by all those who came in contact with him; and,

Whereas, his life has been a worthy inspiration and noble example of loyalty and devotion to the Sunday School class of which he was a member; Now, therefore,

Be it resolved, by the Baracca Class of the Suffolk Christian Church, That we, through this resolution, express our grateful appreciation of the high, noble and exemplary life of our departed friend and comrade; the appreciation and gratitude of the members of this class for his unselfish service and devotion to his work and deep and sincere sympathy for his bereaved family.

Be it resolved further, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the family of the deceased, and a copy be given to the secretary of this class for his records, and also a copy be sent to the press.

ELON COLLEGE

AN ACCREDITED COLLEGE

of the

CONGREGATIONAL CHRISTIAN CHURCHES OF THE SOUTHEAST

ELON was founded to train Christian leaders for the New South.

ELON has done its task well—one graduate in seven being in the Christian ministry. The other six express Christian leadership in the various professions and vocations. Experience teaches that spiritual leadership must be indigenous.

The South is now a New South ready for an inclusive Church, the type of Church for which Elon has stood for forty years and for which she is prepared to produce capable leadership.

With no Church in the community, save the College Auditorium, ELON has practiced Christian Union for faculty, students, and community for four decades.

Its contribution to Christian Education is nationally known and approved.

Its Christian Education Building, providing laboratory facilities for religious leadership training, is unique and is the first college building of its type in the world.

ELON confines itself to undergraduate liberal arts work with that religious emphasis which befits the Christian College.

In ELON the Congregational-Christian Church has an asset of marvelous hopefulness.

The South needs her Yale, her Oberlin, her Carleton, her Pomona for the intellectual leadership of the United Church. Many regard ELON as strategically located and spiritually endowed to become such a center of illumination and leadership training.
